In Boston, June 23, 1894, 15,000 unfortunate girls were turned loose to forage upon the community because of a moral crusade inaugurated against vice. What was the result? American-born, educated girls became the mistresses of the Chinese of Boston. The Tenderloin floating population was soon after transferred to Chinatown, and the Chinese were permitted to go into the business of keeping houses of ill-repute and engaged extensively in this illicit traffic.

These statements are appalling, but much information of similar kind has been presented. I am therefore constrained to say, in the interests of morality and advanced civilization, exclude the objectionable Chinese. For the protection of the American laborer and his family, prevent the coming of the cooly laborer. In the name of Christianity and its elevating influences leave the disciples of Confucius with their joss houses and opium dens in the land of their nativity, and build up in this country American interests to be conducted by American laborers. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KERN].

Mr. KERN. Mr. Chairman, I have had both the honor and the high pleasure of presenting petitions at the desk of the Clerk of this House from about 100 labor organizations in my district demanding of this Congress that the policy of Chinese exclusion now in force under our Government be continued for another fixed period of time. I have received no petitions from any of my constituents demanding that this policy be abandoned and our gates thrown ajar for the unhampered admission of immigrants from China.

Now, Mr. Chairman, petitions of this and other descriptions are sometimes spoken of lightly and in terms of derision and ridicule on this floor. I have with my own ears heard petitions coming from the people referred to with levity and contempt in the Senate of the United States by Senators of the United States. I do not believe that it comes with good grace from a member of this House or from a member of that other distinguished body to speak flippantly about petitions on any subject whatever coming from the people. The use of these petitions affords about the only method available to the people through the medium of which they can speak to their representatives in these respective Halls. Being an unswerving believer in a government of the people, for the people, and by the people, and in the Jeffersonian doctrine that all just government rests upon the consent of the governed, I am forced to the conclusion that the right of petition should be held sacred, and that it should be treated with the profoundest reverence. The right of petition is guaranteed to the people by our Constitution, which is the fundamental law of our land, and it is indelibly stamped into the Declaration of Independence, which has been fittingly described as the chart and compass of all human rights.

This Government has for many years pursued the policy of establishing around our borders a high-tariff wall for the alleged purpose of protecting the men who toil for a living and earn their daily bread in the sweat of their brows. This high-tariff wall has had the effect of enabling especially favored manufacturers of goods in this country to enhance the price of their commodities. The only laboring men in America who have ever been enabled to secure any benefits from our misnamed protective tariff system are those who are employed in the favored industries. Even these were dependent for any benefit they received on the bounty and generosity of the favored manufacturer, or they were compelled to extort their share of the enhanced prices which the protective tariff made possible through the power of their organizations. On this Chinese question, for the first time in the history of the country, the American workingman comes before Congress and demands protection directly for himself. He demands protection against the unequal and the unfair competition of Chinese cooly labor. He demands it in the only practical way that reason and human judgment has so far been able to contrive.

Why is it that Chinese cooly labor should be employed by any American employer? Is it because it is congenial to hire these coolies, or because it is congenial to superintend them at their work? Is it because it is pleasant to have them around? No; it is not given the preference over other labor for any of these reasons.

Chinese labor is only desirable because it is cheap. A Chinese workingman will work for 75 cents a day where an American workingman demands $2 a day for the same hours and the same conditions of employment. Relations of cordial friendship between a white employer and his Chinese employee are unnatural, and they are impossible. The language of these people is meaningless to an American. Their ways are distasteful to him. It is not intelligent labor. It is the merest machine labor.

Chinese labor, as we know it, is but little better than slave labor, and he who would successfully and profitably employ it must have in him the essential elements and the requisite attributes of character of the slave master. It is not employed because it is a congenial thing to use it in productive enterprises. Greed alone controls the transaction—cold, selfish, grasping greed.

The most perplexing problem before the American people for solution to-day is the great problem which is in general terms designated the labor problem. That problem simply resolves itself in the final analysis into a problem of wages. In every country on this earth the rise of real wages marks the rise of the progress of that country. I take it that no humane, patriotic, and farsighted man would rejoice to see the wages of labor lessened under our flag.

I now ask why it is that Chinese labor can afford to produce the same results for lower wages than can the labor of our own country. It is perfectly clear that it can afford to do this, because the standard under which the Chinese workingmen are accustomed to living and under which they are content to live is decidedly lower than that which the American workingmen have established for themselves. Semibarbarians that they are, they require only the simplest forms of food to nourish their bodies.

The clothing they require is likewise crude, inexpensive, and scanty. Accustomed to the life of the street herds of their mother country, houseless and roofless and homeless, the shelter these people need is not superior to that, if it is equal to it, deemed necessary in this country, with its advanced civilization, to protect from the attacks of the elements the lower forms of domestic animal life. Chinese labor can live cheap because it is barbarian labor. It does not know and does not have the manifold and complex wants of labor in civilized countries. Its standard of life is in consequence of a low and degrading rate.

Under our existing social arrangement the rate of wages is finally determined by two controlling factors—firstly, by the law of supply and demand as applied to the total numbers of toilers who offer their labor for sale, labor being a marketable commodity, the only thing the laboring man has for sale; and secondly, by the standard of life of the toiler, by that portion of the results of his exertions which he is content to accept as the sum required for him to live on.

It would be a sheer waste of time for anyone to try to show on this floor that this so-called standard of life of the American workingman is immeasurably and infinitely higher than the standard of life of the Chinese coolies. No one but a hopeless imbecile would contend for a moment that it is not. It would be an absurdity to undertake to make the comparison. No one is so ignorant of these relative conditions but that he knows, as he must know, that the standard of life of the Chinese coolies is as far below the standard of life of the American toiler as the foothills are beneath the summit of the loftiest mountains, snow-capped and sun crowned.

The American toiler demands enough for himself for his honest work, and rightfully demands it, to keep himself and his family in comfort and a little besides for the inevitable rainy day, an extra dollar after all the bills are paid on Saturday night. He is entitled to a good house to live in and to rear his family in. He is entitled to good clothes to wear. He is entitled to books and newspapers to read. He is entitled to some of the pleasures of life, and not merely to the barest and absolutely unavoidable necessities. He is entitled to have his wife spared to him for the performance of his household duties. His children are entitled to the indisputable opportunity for schooling and an education. And, over and above all that, he is entitled to the opportunity to create for himself and to lay up a little surplus for the dark days of helpless old age and decrepitude. That should be, if it is not, the standard of life of the American workingman.

Following this chain of reasoning, I desire to say this: Bring a people having a high standard of life in competition with a people content with a low standard of life, and you drag down that people, you debase that people, you degrade that people, you outrage that people. You make the struggle for existence more bitter and relentless for them than it was before. Do that act, and you have committed the unforgivable, the unpardonable, the cardinal sin. Do that act, and you have committed the crime of crimes, to fit which no punishment can be severe enough and no damnation deep enough.

Understand me correctly. I do not advocate a policy of national isolation. I trust that my views are not of the narrow and contracted kind. I know that the immigrant has rescued this continent from barbarism, transformed the pathless wilderness into a well-ordered and flowery garden; that he and his offspring wrested independence from tyranny and despotism abroad and gave this nation its free and self-governing existence; that he and his descendants saved the Republic when it was in danger and preserved our national Union intact; that he and his children and his children's children furnished the brain and the brawn for the upbuilding of our colossal industries; that it was their enterprise, their skill, and their ingenuity which made this country the wonder and the leader of the industrial, the social, and the political world.

I would pursue a policy that extends the glad hand of welcome to every man of our own race who is willing to adopt our country and make it his own; to familiarize himself with our system of government; to learn the story of the struggles through which our country has passed; to learn to estimate the price in blood and treasure the Republic has cost; to become a free and intelligent and independent voter; to become one of us, willing to be assimilated into our national life; to share our liberty and help us perpetuate it and keep it uncontaminated and pure; to work in an honest and an honorable way for a living, and in the holy radiance of the light of liberty, labor, and love to rear a family of respectable, intelligent, liberty-loving children. But I would shrink from injecting into the body politic in America another race problem, another peril to our political system, another disastrous check to our social progress.

My good and illustrious friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has made mention of the fact that the discussion of this question involved the discussion of the race problem. Say what you will to the contrary, I agree with him entirely in that proposition, and I do not believe that the artful eloquence of any man can disguise that vital fact. The race problem is fundamental and elemental. The bloodiest wars of history have been race wars. You can not convince me that a people so radically different in their habits, in their customs, in their traditions, and in racial demarcation as the Chinese people are from the American people can long live at peace with our people after they have once arrived here in dominant and dominating numbers. You may theorize as you will, the two will persistently refuse to mix. They will refuse to blend. They will refuse to assimilate. They will refuse to become one. They will refuse to unite. They will remain separated by a broad and impassable chasm, living in hostile camps, animated by feelings of most unquenchable and unmitigable hostility toward each other.

We have a race problem in this country now crying aloud for proper adjustment. The evidence is unmistakable. We need only to search the columns of the daily newspapers for it. I refer to the negro problem. It is idle to contend that the civil war solved that problem. The civil war only presented it for the future generations to deal with. It presented it in a most aggravated form. It is one of the knottiest problems any nation on earth ever wrestled with. It stands before the American people unsolved as one of the most vital questions of the day. American statesmanship faces it, as much as it has the heart to face it, stupefied and appalled.

That race problem was forced upon us. Its introduction into our politics was a mistake of our forefathers. It was brought into our midst through their blind desire for material gain. But it is here and we are compelled to face it. It is a condition and not a theory that confronts us, and we must adapt ourselves to our conditions if we be rational and sensible men. Let us honestly try in an impartial spirit and with patriotic resolve to deal with the race question which the fathers have forced upon us, prompted by considerations of humanity and equal justice and love of our country and of the unfortunate race that is in our midst, but let us in wisdom refrain from taking upon ourselves the burden of bringing into this country another race problem to menace American institutions. The wise man learns and profits from the lessons of history. The fool ignores them. The coward shrinks from them and undertakes to disguise them.

I rejoice over the unanimity of sentiment which prevails in this House on the wisdom of continuing the Chinese-exclusion policy, which has become the fixed policy of this Government. I rejoice at the unanimity of sentiment which exists in favor of this bill in our country. There are only two elements among the people that have come to my attention which are opposed to the bill. The associated capitalists are against it, the men in whose care and keeping are the trusts. The extreme altruists are against it, a large class of well-meaning men who have left the earth as their place of abode and inhabit the ethereal regions above the clouds.

Of the former it is needless to speak. Their motives are plain to everybody. He who runs may, indeed, read them. In their selfishness and their greed and their cupidity they want cheap labor at any cost. They want to earn fat dividends for their concerns. They do not care for the welfare and the happiness and the prosperity of the American people. They would impoverish the American people to pile up wealth for the plutocracy. In my mind they are entitled to no consideration whatever on this floor in their utterly detestable demands connected with this proposed legislation.

The altruists tell us that it is the highest form of our national duty for us to throw wide open the gates and to admit the oppressed, to admit the downtrodden, regardless of race or condition, from every land and every clime into our national household. They contend that in morals we have no right to bar our doors of entrance against any nation. It seems to me that their argument is untenable and unsound. I believe that we have the same right to protect our country against undesirable immigration which every man beyond all dispute has to protect his family circle against an undesirable intruder. The family is the unit of the State. It is the source and origin of our civil law. The country, taken as a whole, is nothing more than an aggregation of families.

It is true that the fact of aggregation gives rise to new duties and new responsibilities and makes the primary duties more complex. But the law of the family is the law of the State. A well-governed family furnishes the model for a well-governed State. The school district is a small number of families which have constituted themselves into a perfect system in our great governmental machinery, fully capable of performing every function required of it. From the school district the system is extended with enlarged obligations and increased powers to the township, from the township to the county, from the county to the State, and from the State finally to the sovereign nation.

It seems to me that the same rights inhere in the State and in the nation which inhere in the family, and if a man has the right to exclude from his family an unwelcome intruder, one who would disturb that family life, contaminate its morals, and threaten its existence, then this Government has the right to draw the line on the kind of immigration which it in its wisdom deems undesirable, disastrous to its social progress, and menacing to its perpetuity.

I am for the bill which the minority recommends for passage because I favor the most drastic legislation in this connection that is obtainable. The laborer of this country demands this legislation under the law of self-preservation, the first and highest law in nature.

It has been charged that this law would exclude from this country, besides the coolies, Chinese merchants, Chinese diplomats, Chinese scholars, Chinese teachers, and Chinese travelers; that it would exclude those Chinamen who in no conceivable way can come in injurious competition with American labor. The charge is false. The measure proposed by the minority, which is the measure which bears the indorsement of the American Federation of Labor and the delegations in Congress from the Pacific coast States, makes ample provision for the admission of Chinese merchants, scholars, teachers, diplomats, and travelers. These classes are protected in all their rights under the minority bill, and this country is made as accessible to them as it can under proper safeguards be made. It is the bogus merchants, the phony diplomats, and the counterfeit teachers and scholars and travelers which the minority bill aims to keep out of the country and will keep out of the country if it is made the law. The minority bill simply aims to protect the country against imposition, against sharp practice and fraud. The objection to it on this ground is unreasonable and devoid of sound foundation.

In no connection is the unwisdom of our present Philippine policy made more apparent than in connection with this prodigious movement. Make the Philippine Islands a permanent part of this Government, and you make it almost impossible to guard against the importation of freight loads of cheap Chinese coolie labor. If the present policy with regard to those islands be continued, the Supreme Court of the United States will sooner or later declare them an integral part of this Government under the flag and the Constitution both. No power on earth can prevent the coolies who are now in the Philippines from coming into any State or Territory in this Union. There are now more than three times as many full-blooded Chinamen in the Philippine Islands than there are in this country, and including the half-breeds there are more than ten times as many. Dump any considerable number of these on our shores, and the effects that will follow will be disastrous in the extreme.

But even that is not the worst source of danger. We have been told in the course of this debate that the practice is in vogue of evading the existing exclusion laws by sneaking hordes of coolies into this country across our northern borders along the Canadian Pacific Railroad. The assertion has not been challenged. The statement has not been contradicted. I do not believe that it can be successfully contradicted. Make the Philippine Islands, with their thousands and thousands of miles of coast line, situated in closer proximity to the Celestial Empire than they are to our own country, an integral part of the United States, and, pray tell me, how then can you successfully enforce our coolie-exclusion laws? The task will simply be a herculean one, impossible of performance, and when that day comes, as truly as the sun shines, the Philippine question will become a phase of the great labor question. I wish I could arouse the workmen of this country to a full and complete sense of the danger which confronts them on this score.

The greatest objection to coolie immigration is that it does not come spontaneously and from its own free will. It is imported into this country as a rule in shiploads by unscrupulous and soulless corporations. Irish immigration, German immigration, and English immigration was an unmixed good to this country, because it came here spontaneously and of its own free will. That kind of immigration was desirable. But the importation of human freight is an unmitigated evil under all circumstances, wherever it comes from, regardless of considerations of race difference, because selfishness and greed will dump it upon us faster than we can digest it.

On the dangers arising to the moral life of our nation from unrestricted Chinese immigration I have but barely touched, yet there is not a thinking man in America who would preserve the purity of American morals who would not justify Chinese exclusion on this score, taken aside from all other considerations. Chinatown, in San Francisco, is the scandal of this nation on account of the low and degrading vice that is practiced there. No youth can enter it without being poisoned by its very atmosphere. Human depravity has invented no form of health-destroying and moral-destroying practice that is not indulged in in this filthy and disgusting den of iniquity.

Of every Chinatown that exists in every city of this country, where it does exist, the same revolting thing is true. Do you want to extend this condition? Do you want to make it general in this country? Do you want to inoculate every community within our borders with the enervating, deadly virus of it? If you do, throw the floodgates open and let the hordes of coolies flock in, and you will surely accomplish this purpose, besides that other object of depriving the workmen of this country of the God-given opportunity of earning a decent and respectable living.

In conclusion, I desire to emphasize this fact: The toilers of this country do not come before Congress often with any demands. They have never come making unjust and unreasonable demands. They do not make their demands on this Chinese question on us blindly. They have deliberated on this question. They have talked it over in their meeting halls. They have reached an entirely practical and just conclusion. They have petitioned you and me to give that conclusion earnest consideration, to permit it to weigh in the scale when we are making up our minds on this question. What they are asking they are asking in a spirit of fairness. They have no desire to oppress anyone. They have no desire to tyrannize over anyone. They simply ask you and they ask of me in God's name not to place them on a level with barbarians in the struggle for existence. They ask us to do nothing that would debase and degrade them. They ask us to help them in enforcing the law of self-preservation. They ask us to protect them against this great danger. It is only the part of wisdom in us to heed their voice.

On the prosperity of the laboring man depends the prosperity of the country. Opposition to Chinese exclusion means taking away everything from the laboring men of this country except the bare necessities of life. It means the inaugurating of conditions which are intolerable among American toilers. That means poverty, unhappiness, and discontentment, and that in turn means anarchy and hatred and bitterness to threaten the existence of our free institutions and of our Government. A contented and happy people never destroyed a Government.

I take it to be the duty of the lawmakers to create conditions under which people can be happy and contented. Because I love the people, because I want to see them happy and contented, because I want social conditions so arranged that every honest man shall have the opportunity to earn an honest living by honest work, because I love my country, because I love my country's flag so long as that flag represents justice, equality of opportunity for the people, and the integrity and sanctity of the American home, I favor this measure and I consider these reasons ample for giving my hearty support to the most drastic law against Chinese immigration here proposed. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HITT. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

[Mr. COCHRAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. CLARK. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER].

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, I am aware that the die is set, the edict has gone forth, that this bill must pass this House, with all the discriminations, inequalities, preferences, and favors to the few which will follow in its wake. We are to enter upon a scheme for getting rid of the people's money and making a generous contribution to this two-billion Congress. We are to encourage favoritism in a new form under the guise of "regulating commerce" and "providing for the general welfare of the people." We are to begin making presents to a favored few, and very few—perhaps not more than 50 or 100 persons and corporations in the whole nation.

The bounties are to go to one in a million of our people, and this one-millionth part of our people the wealthiest, most independent, and least deserving of assistance of all—to the shipbuilders and navigation companies—among whom are to be found such poor and deserving persons as John P. Morgan, of New York, and C. A. Griscom, of Philadelphia. These are some of the 100 persons and corporations, more or less, who are to receive the Government contributions assessed and collected from the people of the country and handed over to these multimillionaires under the pretext of providing for the welfare of the people. If this bill shall pass, under the whip and spur of the Republican leaders of this House, as it surely will, it will be the first time in the history of this country, so far as I am informed, when a few, a very limited few, people engaged in an industry have been sorted out to be the recipients of donations from the Government to aid them in their enterprise and in their competition with their fellow-men in the industrial race of life.

I am aware that in 1891 a law was enacted by the terms of which special rates were allowed to be made with parties, or under contract, for carrying the mails on fast steamers, and perhaps a very generous allowance was made possible for this service. It was made to improve the mail service and secure the transmission of mails in the least possible time between our ports and those to which the mails were sent. It was in keeping with our general up-to-date service in the Post-Office Department. We wanted the quickest run across the seas, and were willing to pay an extra price for it. That was no subsidy. It was simply paying a good price for a good thing, where each contracting party received an equivalent consideration. And while this bill in some respects resembles the bill of 1891, its chief purpose, as avowed by those who favor it, is to aid in expanding and increasing the merchant marine of this country. One of the big four who have been most conspicuous in advocating this bill in a public speech said that were it simply to facilitate the carrying of mails in American vessels he should oppose it (this bill).

No one objects to a proper extension of the ocean mail service at a proper cost, but ever since 1891 we have been paying our American lines at least twice as much for such service as was proper or necessary; at least twice as much as Great Britain pays for similar service, or as we pay foreign lines for carrying the excess mails which our American lines are not able to handle. A few figures from the official statistics will prove this statement.

In the last fiscal year the International Navigation Company

(American Line) carried 71,000,000 grams of letter mail and 641,000,000 grams of printed matter, and was paid, under the act of 1891, $528,537.

The Cunard Line (British) carried 137,000,000 grams of letters and 835,000,000 grams of printed matter, and was paid $213,103.

The White Star Line (British) carried 62,000,000 grams of letters and 326,000,000 grams of printed matter, and was paid $91,591.

In other words, we paid the American Line more than twice what we paid the Cunard Line for not much more than half the amount of mail carried by the Cunard Line; and we paid the American Line about six times as much as we paid the White Star Line for carrying practically the same amount of mail matter.

On the Pacific the same discrepancy was noticeable. We paid the American Pacific Mail Line $52,533 for carrying 9,000,000 grams of letters and 118,000,000 grams of printed matter, and the British Occidental and Oriental Line $19,638 for carrying almost exactly the same amount of mail.

We also paid the New York and Cuban Company (American) about $200,000 for carrying 1,995 pounds of letters and 30,864 pounds of printed matter, which was at the rate of $6 a pound, whereas our rate for paying the foreign companies was only 44 cents per pound for letters and 4½ cents a pound for printed matter.

In addition to this, it must be taken into consideration that the foreign steamers were the quickest and most frequent, and also that the pending bill proposes to still further increase the payments to American vessels for mail carriage by at least 30 per cent. These specimen figures are quite sufficient, in my opinion, to show the undesirable and inequitable nature of the mail-subsidy division of the bill.

To whom are we indebted for this new venture, this gift entertainment which is so lavishly provided for in this bill? I answer, to the Hon. Eugene Tyler Chamberlain, present and past Commissioner of Navigation, more than to any other one man. In his last three reports he has come out as the active exponent of the subsidy scheme for enlarging and extending our merchant marine. Time was, and but a few years ago, when his remedy for reviving the merchant marine was to grant free ships. As evidence of this I read from Mr. Chamberlain's report of 1895:

I have the honor respectfully to renew the recommendation made last year in favor of the repeal of that restriction of law which denies the use of the American flag, the privilege of American registry, and the protection of the laws of the United States to vessels owned by American citizens and navigated in foreign trade unless built in the United States. The effect of this law, under existing industrial conditions, is not only to encourage but virtually to compel American capital willing to embark in transoceanic navigation to organize under the laws of other nations and resort to alien flags. Thus in effect an American law forces Americans to enhance the maritime importance of foreign nations at the sacrifice of our own.

At that time Mr. Chamberlain was presumed to be a Democrat, acting as Commissioner of Navigation under a Democratic administration. In his last report he is acting presumably as a Republican under a Republican administration and at the behests of the Republican party run mad on this question of ship subsidies.

The friends of this bill in years gone by have claimed that as we are committed to the protective policy, that policy should be carried out in protecting the shipbuilder and the ship navigator. But, Mr. Chairman, there is a marked contrast and a radical distinction between the principle of protection which affects directly and indirectly the great body of our people and the principle or want of principle which grants a bounty to a few, a very limited few, industries without any pretext of raising revenue and without one cent of revenue accruing therefrom.

It has been claimed that ships could be built in foreign countries cheaper than they could be built here, and in order to induce the builder at home to engage in the building of ocean-going vessels we must make him a donation—a present—every time he builds one of these ships; that this is the only way we can induce him to engage in this enterprise. But the fact is we can build ships in this country as cheaply, on the average, everything considered, as they can be built anywhere in the world. Princes and ship merchants of the Old World are coming to us and contracting for their vessels because they appreciate that we can build better vessels, and, everything considered, as cheaply as they can be built in their home countries. In our consular report of March 3, 1900, George Wenlarsen is quoted as saying:

To-day [that was in 1900] ships may be built at Bath, San Francisco, Philadelphia, Wilmington, Chester, and Newport News as cheaply as anywhere in the world. Mr. Cramp, the largest individual shipbuilder in the United States, two or three years ago, when ships could not be built nearly as cheaply as they can to-day, in answer to a question made this statement: "The proper form to put the question is, 'Can you build a ship to do the work of the City of New York, or the Majestic, or the Columbia in all respects for the same cost?' To that question I would reply, 'Yes; or within as small a margin as would be likely to prevail in a similar case between any two British shipyards.'"

Let me call another witness to the truth of this assertion—a conservative man, and one always speaking guardedly and within bounds. About one year since, William McKinley, in delivering an address before the Chicago Board of Trade, stated that "the shipbuilding interests of the United States were in a more prosperous condition than they had been since 1854; that their shipyards were full of orders, and that we were fast approaching the time when we could rival Great Britain in building ships for foreign trade." The Commissioner of Navigation informs us in his last report that there are $68,000,000 invested in 46 shipyards in this country, and that there are now under contract vessels of the United States amounting in cost to $78,000,000. The Chicago Tribune, one of the leading and ablest Republican newspapers in the country, sent, last October, representatives to every shipyard in the country, and without a single exception every yard was overcrowded with orders and working to their utmost capacity. I have not time to refer to but one, but the reports can be procured in the Tribune issue of October 14, 1901.

At Newport News $14,000,000 is invested and 7,000 men are employed. At one time this year vessels with an aggregate tonnage of 145,100 were under construction, to cost $28,350,000. Of course, the vessels in the various yards were of all kinds and descriptions, and intended for lake and coast service as well as for ocean use, but demonstrate pretty conclusively that the shipbuilding interest is not on the decline, but, on the other hand, is one of the most popular and flourishing industries in this country. Mr. B. N. Baker, president of the Atlantic Transportation Company, of Baltimore, is now building and will have finished by the 1st of July next, just after this bill goes into effect, six large ocean steamers in the shipyards of the United States, which he proposes to place under the registry of this Government; and Mr. Griscom, president of the International Company, is building two ocean-going steamers in American shipyards, each with a tonnage of 12,500 tons. What need, then, is there for the purpose of stimulating this industry by granting to it bounties and subsidies?

Mr. Chairman, can you imagine an industry in this country which is in less need of a stimulant than the shipbuilding industry, or one where, if applied, would be less warranted or more ridiculous? But we are told that we should grant these subsidies to strengthen our merchant marine and to make it possible to see the American flag floating at the masthead of the merchant marine in every part of the world and in every harbor, not only of our own country, but that the harbors of the Old World may also glisten with the white sails of the American ships; that in this way, and only in this way, can we hope to compete with foreign countries in the ocean carrying trade; that the merchant vessels of France, Germany, Great Britain, and other countries have gained their proud positions solely by reason of the granting of subsidies.

This is a catchy statement—a great promoter—to use a popular word of the present time. It appeals to the pride, the patriotism, and love of country of the American citizen or the American statesman. We must not be outdone. We play no second part in the world's commercial drama. If subsidies bestowed by these foreign countries are the secret of their success, why do we hesitate to grant them, and that, too, more abundantly? Mr. Chairman, if it was a fact that the granting of subsidies was the secret and the main secret of their success, I grant that there would be much more reason why we should support this bill than there is to-day. But, Mr. Chairman, the trouble about the proposition is that it is not the fact. The fact is that not one-tenth of the merchant vessels of the ocean carrying trade of any foreign country receives any subsidy whatever. Fifty-three per cent of all the ocean carrying trade of the world is done by Great Britain, and only 3 per cent of all her carrying trade receives any subsidy whatever, or at least that was the condition in 1894, and presumably the per cent remains about the same at the present time.

Listen to what Mr. Chamberlain, the present Commissioner of Navigation, said in his report in 1894. Speaking of Great Britain's payment for fast-mail service, termed by the friends of this bill as bounty and subsidy for the British shipping interests, he says:

Encouragement to navigation has only been accidental and secondary to political and commercial considerations, and, as indicated [above], where circumstances permit it is being withdrawn, and arrangements with railroads of France, Italy, Canada, and the United States are in part taking its place.

But the sufficient facts to demonstrate that Great Britain does not subsidize shipping in the sense in which the word is used in the United States are that the profits of the mail lines do not average higher than those of merchant lines; that the stock quotations of one class of securities are not higher than the other; and, finally, that barely 3 per cent of all the British merchant marine receives public funds in any form.

The friends of this bill argue for its justification that Great Britain, Germany, France, and Italy pay or have paid subsidies to their shipping interests, and that they dominate the ocean carrying trade of the world, and that if we would compete for this trade at all successfully it can only be done by following their example and by granting subsidies as provided for in this bill. I challenge the whole proposition. The supremacy which these countries have attained in the ship carrying trade is due to other causes, and it can not be attributed by any fair-minded person to the subsidy theory. Italy and France are notable examples of the utter futility and failure of the subsidy scheme to rehabilitate their ocean carrying trade.

France expended $19,000,000 and Italy about $6,000,000 and then abandoned the experiment, and it was only when these two nations gave up the plan which we, of all the nations of the world foolishly retain, namely, the exclusion of foreign-built vessels from our registry, that they were enabled to place their ships in the carrying trade to any great extent upon the oceans of the world. Commissioner Chamberlain, whose opinions seem to be cited with so much favor by the friends of this bill, in his report as Commissioner of Navigation in 1894, confirms the statement I have already made, and warns us against the prodigal expenditure of the public funds which the provisions of this bill will carry. He says:

The result of nine years' trial of a complete bounty system in France, involving an expenditure of $19,000,000, and of seven years' trial of a similar system in Italy at an expense of $5,500,000, are hereinafter stated. The meager results attained in both countries warrant the statement that the nation which enters upon that system (paying subsidies) of building up a merchant marine with the expectation of success must do so with a free hand and no care for the cost. It must be prepared to spend not $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 a year but several times that sum annually for a long period. * * * It is not deemed necessary to consider here the propriety of that course as a matter of public policy or its desirability from the economic point of view. Those nations which have made the attempt have not succeeded, confessedly for the reason that their expenditures were not large enough.

And he adds:

The experience of France and Italy demonstrates that the shipowners of both countries find it more to their profit to buy (vessels) in the cheapest markets than to avail themselves of government bounties conditioned upon the purchase of higher-priced domestic shipping.

Again, Mr. Chairman, we are told by the advocates of this bill that the main purpose, the only purpose, of granting these subsidies is to equalize the difference in wages, both in construction and operation, between what is paid in foreign countries and what it costs in the United States. To-day every ounce or foot of material which enters in the construction of a vessel can be landed at any shipyard free of duty, and much of the material which enters into the construction of a vessel is cheaper here than in any foreign shipyard on earth.

With all material entering into a vessel free of duty, with our improved and up-to-date machinery and facilities for the work, with our inventive genius not equaled anywhere, our native and inherent push and our inexhaustible resources, even if our daily wages are nominally higher than in other countries (they are not higher when we take into consideration the amount our workmen produce and accomplish), we need not fear to enter into competition with any and all comers in shipbuilding. And I assert that first-class steamers and vessels can be built as cheaply in our shipyards as anywhere on earth. Charles H. Cramp is authority for the assertion that the difference in the cost of labor per diem would be overcome by the superiority of the labor and of American machinery.

Undeniably there is an extra expense incurred in the charges for seamen to man our vessels over that in some of the foreign countries, but this extra expense is incorrectly and extravagantly stated by the friends of this bill. The actual facts and figures have been ascertained in several instances, and, as relates to two vessels almost identically alike, the one American and the other foreign, are as follows:

The St. Paul and the Campania have been compared. Every person's salary and wages engaged in operating these two vessels were taken accurately, and it was determined that it cost yearly to run the St. Paul $15,900 more than it did the Campania. But, Mr. Chairman, if this bill becomes a law and the St. Paul becomes a recipient of the bounty as herein provided for, she will receive $408,596.54 a year, or twenty-five times as much as her expenses exceed the Campania in yearly maintenance.

It is an unwarrantable assertion to claim that this great subsidy is required to put our merchant marine on an equality with that of foreign countries. Rather acknowledge the fact that this bill makes unwarranted and extravagant donations to an industry which, of all the industries, protected and unprotected, least needs and least merits them.

We have been during the last two years building more ships than in any two years in the last fifty years. We read in the report of the Commissioner of Navigation for this year that—

The fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, has been the third successive year of notable prosperity and growth in the shipbuilding and ship-running industries of the United States. The total documented tonnage of the United States on June 30, 1901, has been exceeded but once in all our history. By the end of the current fiscal year possibly half of our tonnage in foreign trade for the first time will be steel steamers, the instrument of commerce which for some years has been chiefly employed by foreign nations.

When these conditions prevail, why should we not be content to let well enough alone? Of all times in the last fifty years this is the most inopportune to launch upon the system of bestowing extravagant bounties upon the shipbuilding and ship-sailing industries. There is an eternal fitness of things with which this bill seriously conflicts.

Again, I assert that this bill is against the spirit of the Constitution, if not against the letter of that great instrument. I do not believe this statement can be successfully combated. The Constitution is designed to prevent Congress as well as the States from enacting any class legislation. Equal rights and equal opportunities to engage in any business or enterprise and to receive equal or corresponding benefits from public expenditures are among the fundamental principles embodied in that instrument, and this bill anticipates and provides for bounties only for certain classes of vessels, and to only a limited number of each class; otherwise millions upon millions of money would be required in the payment of bounties; and the friends of this bill, in this House and out of it, assure us that only such a small number of vessels will be subsidized that the entire limit of expenditure for at least the next four years will be not more than four or five millions per year.

It is not intended nor provided that all vessels and all owners shall be put on an equality and secure equal and corresponding benefits, but only a favored few receive them, and only those whom the Postmaster-General shall see fit to contract with for carrying the mail. And again, under the general provision, section 1, clause (b), only vessels of certain tonnage and certain speed.

But mark the strategy of these keen promoters of this subsidy scheme and how adroitly they try to provide against an unfavorable decision of the Supreme Court as to the constitutionality of this bill if it should become a law.

The Constitution provides that Congress may raise and support armies and navies and do what is fairly incidental to those ends. And while it is rather farfetched and scarcely noticeable by a casual reading of this bill that it provides incidentally for the support of the Navy, still a careful inspection of the bill will reveal the fact that there is a provision which looks to this end, and it is to this provision that the promoters of the bill look for the salvation of it when it gets to the Supreme Court for decision as to its constitutionality. The provision is contained in section 15 of the bill, on the twenty-fourth page. It is a short, unassuming, and inoffensive-appearing section, and one which would seldom if ever be taken advantage of by our Government. But it is the provision which is intended to save the bill from utter destruction if it ever gets to the Supreme Court for decision. I quote the essential part of this salvation section, as follows:

SEC. 15. That any vessel under contract, pursuant to this bill, may be taken or employed and used by the United States as a cruiser or transport at any time, and in every such case the owner or owners of any such vessel so taken or employed shall be paid the fair value thereof, if taken, at the time of the taking, and if employed shall be paid the fair value of such use, etc.

Mark the language, "may be taken." Is there a member of this House so charitable as to believe that all or any considerable number of these subsidized vessels will ever be taken by the Government as cruisers or transports? Is there a member of this House who really believes the time will ever come when the Government will take a single one of these vessels? And even if under any conceivable conditions we should take or hire one or more of them, what particular benefit would it be to the Government? For we must pay what the value or rent is "fairly worth."

We can do that already without any subsidizing of vessels. But this is the provision which responds to the title of the bill which is "to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States, and to provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary." Is this bill intended to provide "auxiliary cruisers and transports for the Government?" Or is this purpose only remote and incidental to the main purpose of the bill and intended to be and inserted only for the purpose of guarding and protecting it against its other unconstitutional provisions, which plainly establish inequalities, discriminations, and special privileges among those engaged in a common enterprise—a condition which the National Constitution and every State constitution absolutely prohibits and denies?

Providing for the Navy, are we? What a delusion, what mockery, what insincerity! Will the Supreme Court confirm or expose the sham pretext? Is there a member of this House so simple-minded as to believe that a barrel of flour or a barrel of meat, a roll of carpet or a case of cloth, will be carried to any foreign port one cent cheaper if this bill becomes a law than it will if it does not? Who, then, is to be benefited and enriched by this vast expenditure of the public money? It is easily to be determined. The shipbuilder and navigation companies who are now using and hereafter will use on the highways of the seas vessels carrying passengers and the least bulky merchandise—the ocean greyhounds. The products of the farms, the factories, mines, and forests will continue to be exported in the same slow-going vessels as heretofore and at no reduced rates. Are the American people prepared to accept or to repudiate this bill? We need wait but a little while for their emphatic response. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, on May 5 next, the present so-called Chinese-exclusion law will expire and unless new legislation is enacted into law by that time the Chinese will be at liberty to enter our country, subject only to the restrictions imposed upon immigrants from other foreign nations.

ORGANIZED LABOR LEADS THE MOVEMENT.

As the time fixed for the expiration began to approach, the subject of a renewal or reenactment of the present law has been freely and generally discussed. In this discussion and in the agitation of the character of the legislation considered necessary to meet the situation, organized labor has taken the lead, and through its direction the wage earners of the whole country have been united in their efforts to obtain an extension of the American policy of the absolute exclusion of Chinese cooly labor.

There is not a Senator or Representative in Congress who has not from the beginning of the session been the recipient of petitions, resolutions, and letters from not only individual constituents, but organizations of all kinds, including boards of trade, commercial societies, patriotic and social, secret and open societies, and labor organizations of every kind and description, all asking for the passage of a law which will not only take the place of existing laws on this subject, but will be more stringent in its provisions and secure a practical exclusion of the Chinese laborer as well as the laborer of other Oriental nations whose competition in the labor market may be detrimental to the interests of American workmen.

RESULTS OF COOLY COMPETITION.

With the invasion of the United States by the Chinaman in large numbers, organized labor saw its doom and the utter defeat of all its plans for the betterment of the condition of the wage-earners of the Republic. It was fully alive to the fact that, being forced into competition with this competitor from the greatest of the oriental people, less work and lower wages would be the inevitable result, and that meant not only longer hours of work, but fewer comforts, cheaper living, more crowded dwellings, less opportunities for the education of himself and family, and his reduction to a generally lower plane of living. The work, labor, and achievement of the last half century would in a few short years be undone, and the future, now bright and promising, would be enveloped in clouds of uncertainty and despair.

DEMOCRATIC PLEDGE AND POSITION.

So strong has been the conviction of all classes of our citizens of the danger to this country and its people and so great has been their pressure upon the lawmakers and political leaders that in the national platforms of both the great political parties of this country promises have been made to avert the pending evil.

The pledge given by the Democratic party, to which I owe a proud allegiance, was frank, explicit, and unequivocal in these words:

We favor the continuance and strict enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion law and its application to all classes of all Asiatic races.

By this pledge the popular party of this land, although the minority party in Congress, stands bound and will redeem its pledge by casting its every vote for the act presented by the minority of the Foreign Affairs Committee of this House, which is admitted to be more sweeping and further reaching than the proposition presented by the majority members, and only in the event of not being able to carry this, in our opinion, more complete and drastic measure will we support the measure now before us for action.

HISTORY, LAWS, AND TREATIES.

The history of Chinese immigration into the United States and the laws and treaties bearing upon the subject are, briefly, as follows:

With the reports of the first discoveries of gold in large quantity in California in 1849, the Chinaman turned his footsteps toward this country. Within less than a year 800 had found their way to our shores; by the close of the second year their numbers had grown to 4,000, and by the middle of 1852 they numbered 12,000. In 1868 they had reached the estimated number of 80,000. The exact number has always been disputed, but the census of 1870 counted 62,736 of them, and as they were scattered all over the country in the mining towns and over the mountains and valleys of the sparsely settled sections the estimate of 80,000 was, in all probability, near the mark. By 1876, at a low estimate—I take the figures of George F. Seward, author of the book entitled "Chinese Immigration"—they were at least 105,000.

By the exclusion laws and their rigid enforcement this number has diminished, but by the last census, that of 1900, nearly 90,000 are still in our midst. Every conceivable trick and device is practiced to evade the laws and bring them into this country, and so great is their anxiety to enter the field of American labor that $500 a head is paid to those who may be able to successfully smuggle in a single cooly.

SLAVE TRADE.

People unacquainted with the facts will naturally wonder how this great number of poor Chinese laboring men were enabled to pay the heavy expense attending a journey across the Pacific and the cost of making a start in a new country. But this is not at all surprising when it is known that the expenses of these cooly immigrants were paid by wealthy Chinese trading companies. The chief among them were called the "Six Companies." These companies carried on a traffic very closely akin to the slave trade between this country and Africa by which the negro was introduced in large quantities into the United States—the difference being that they were not sold outright, but were bound to work for their masters for a period of years or pay back with heavy interest the original outlay. This condition of affairs led to national legislation being passed as early as 1862, and from that time until 1875 laws were enacted by Congress to prevent this form of slave trade. All of these acts provided that they should not apply to voluntary immigration.

The treaty concluded between the United States of America and the Ta Tsing Empire (China) June 18, 1858, the ratifications of which were exchanged August 16, 1859, contained the Favored-Nation clause, as follows:

Should at any time the Ta Tsing Empire grant to any nation or the merchants or citizens of any nation any right, privilege, or favor connected either with navigation, commerce, political or other intercourse which is not conferred by this treaty such right, privilege, and favor shall at once freely inure to the benefit of the United States, its public officers, merchants, and citizens.

The next treaty with China was what is known as the Burlingame treaty, of which the ratifications were exchanged at Peking November 23, 1869, and dealt directly with Chinese immigration, and its provisions were supplementary to the treaty ratified August 16, 1859.

Articles V and VI of this last treaty secured free immigration to both the people of China and the United States into the respective countries. The following words declare the status of a Chinese citizen when in the United States:

Chinese subjects visiting or residing in the United States shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may be enjoyed by the citizens and subjects of the most-favored nations. But nothing herein contained shall be held to confer nationality upon citizens of the United States in China nor upon subjects of China in the United States.

The acts of Congress above referred to were made under the above treaties, which threw the doors of this country wide open to Chinese immigration and gave them every right it gave to immigrants from Europe except that of citizenship by naturalization.

Upon this latter clause the treaty rights and security of the Chinese who have come into this country and remained under its provisions depend.

At the time of the making of this treaty there was considerable discontent evinced by the citizens of the Pacific States, chiefly of California, at the increased and increasing immigration from China. This discontent and apprehension of its dangerous results increased until it provoked open violence, and in 1879 both branches of Congress passed a bill entitled "An act to restrict the immigration of the Chinese to the United States," which was vetoed March 1, 1879, by President Hayes, on the ground that it was a violation of the existing treaty rights.

In his veto message he suggested the advisability of amending the existing treaties. This led to changes in the existing treaties and to what on this subject amounted to a new treaty, ratified July 19, 1881. After much discussion and explanation by the commissioners representing the United States, who sought to obtain the consent of China to "regulate, limit, suspend, or prohibit the immigration of Chinese laborers," which term was to include all other immigration than that for teaching, trade, travel, study, and curiosity—which was objected to, as it included artisans—the following amendment was obtained:

The Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable, and shall apply only to Chinese who may go to the United States as laborers, other classes not being included in the limitations. Legislation taken in regard to Chinese laborers will be of such a character only as is necessary to enforce the regulation, limitation, or suspension of immigration.

Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body or household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States, shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exceptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nations.

This treaty did not abrogate either the treaty ratified in 1859 or the Burlingame treaty, ratified in 1869, but was simply amendatory of some of their provisions.

It was one-sided, and was a concession by China of some of the rights she enjoyed under the previous treaties.

The first bill passed by both branches of Congress after this new treaty stipulation had been agreed to was vetoed by President Arthur, chiefly on the ground that it excluded the Chinese laborer for twenty years, which he held to be too long to be within the meaning of the treaty provisions.

The act of May 6, 1882, was then passed and became a law. By this such immigration was suspended for ten years. It was amended in 1884 by reason of the frauds resorted to to evade it. In 1888 another treaty on this subject of exclusion of Chinese laborers was agreed to but never ratified by China. The act of September 13, 1888, was passed in anticipation of its ratification and a portion of it only became operative. This act was again amended October 1, 1888, and this act was declared repealed by the treaty of 1894. The act of 1888, September 13, is considered subject to the same objection.

Then followed the Geary Act, of May 5, 1892, which provided for another period of suspension for an additional ten years, which second term expires May 5, 1902.

The convention or treaty signed March 17, 1894, and ratified December 8, 1894, was finally concluded. This absolutely prohibited the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States for ten years from ratification, and if neither government object to its continuance within six months from the time of its expiration it shall continue for another period of ten years.

Among other provisions it contained the following:

The provisions of this convention shall not affect the right at present enjoyed of Chinese subjects, being officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for curiosity or pleasure, but not laborers, of coming into the United States and residing therein.

And further provided that Chinese laborers shall continue to enjoy the privilege of transit across the territory of the United States in the course of their journey to or from other countries.

It is hard for the citizen who has not studied law, and even many that have, to understand why it should have taken so many acts of Congress and treaties and rules of the Treasury Department of the United States to keep out Chinese cooly laborers. I can only answer that the Chinese are the shrewdest of the people of the earth, and have found some loophole in all the legislation passed or some means of evading laws and regulations, and new laws, treaties, and rules must constantly be made to keep these evasions under control. From the very beginning it has been a game of chess, and they have often been the more skillful players.

TOTAL EXCLUSION.

To those who contend that we would settle the matter if we were to take the bull by the horns and prohibit Chinese immigration of all kinds in this new proposed act, I answer that as long as there is in our treaties the excepted classes of officials, teachers, students, merchants, travelers for curiosity or pleasure, we can not pass laws in contravention of the provisions of these treaties. That would be a breach of national faith unworthy of any nation, much more of a nation which stands in the front ranks, if it is not the foremost nation of the world.

The bill now before us—with a few amendments which will in all probability be inserted—is the most complete that has ever been proposed on this subject. While there may be and will be evasions of it, the practical result of its passage will be to stem the tide of Chinese immigration effectually. The few that can steal their way in will not be of any great detriment to us, and if they become so they will be expelled as having come in in violation of our laws.

In answer to those who charge this country with bad faith in dealing with the Chinese, I can only say that their arguments and contentions have no practical merit, and are purely technical.

During the conferences which led to the treaty stipulations of 1880 the Chinese commissioners said that by "limitation" in number they took it to mean that no more Chinese should be allowed to come into the United States in any one year in the future than the greatest number that had gone in in a year in the past, or "that the total number should never be allowed to exceed the number now there;" as to limitation of time, they understood that to mean "that they should not be allowed to go for two, three, or five years." Surely if this suspension under their own construction could be for five years, why could it not be made for a longer time? The Geary Act for ten years was held constitutional and not in contravention of treaty rights, and it took up the second suspension period, making practically a twenty-year period. This third extension may be fairly said to be contemplated and approved of under the provisions of the treaty of 1874.

I will admit that dealing with any other nation than China none of the concessions made on this subject would likely have been made, for it can not be denied that we have been and are in the position of the boy who wanted to keep his penny and the cake at the same time. We want to exercise the right to exclude the Chinese and still ask for as large a share of her trade as possible, and we do not hesitate to urge that our merchants and other citizens shall have all rights to enter her country for the purpose of extending our trade relations.

CHINA OPPOSED TO HER SUBJECTS EMIGRATING.

China's action and position is easily understood when we know that the ruling power of China, the Dowager Empress Tzi-hsi, is an ultra conservative. She worships the past and her ancestors, and "would keep China for the Chinese" and preserve its historic civilization forever. With perfect consistency she has ever pursued this policy, and looks with disfavor upon the emigration of her subjects, especially to occidental countries, where they will be infused with new ideas and customs antagonistic to those of her Empire.

This, in my humble opinion, lies at the bottom of the want of vigorous protest on her part to our policy of exclusion legislation.

UNITED STATES CHINA'S FRIEND.

Another reason no doubt is the fact that outside of our exclusion policy, which is well understood and practically assented to by China, we have always been her friend. Whether this position and course of action has been dictated by policy and self-interest or by friendship and fair play can make little difference. It is sufficient that we have shown it in a practical manner on more than one important occasion. While we have asked an open-door policy for the trade of the world, we have always opposed a dismemberment of her broad empire.

By offers of our good offices, often attended with some show of determined insistence, we have obtained favorable conditions of peace and the lowering of indemnities imposed upon her. Besides all this, we are her nearest and cheapest market, and she knows we have a deserved reputation for fair dealing with her subjects. So on the whole I am satisfied that of all the foreign nations operating in the Orient China is most kindly disposed to the United States, exclusion or no exclusion laws. And I do not believe it is at all reasonable to suppose that the passage of the measure before us will in any way materially interfere with our rapidly growing trade and commerce with her.

CHINESE TRADE.

A word about this trade, which furnishes but another example of the absolute fallacy of the doctrine that trade follows the flag. This country is the only one of the commercial nations who has not grabbed and does not own outright or control by lease or agreement a piece of the Chinese land, and yet to-day it ranks as third in the value and volume of its trade relations, Great Britain and near-by Japan alone exceeding us. The most recent statistics at hand are those of 1899, which are as follows, and show by comparison that in four years the United States has doubled its sales to China while Great Britain's have perceptibly decreased:

	Imports.	Exports.
United States.....	$16,059,041	$15,624,558
Great Britain.....	28,936,083	10,060,014
Japan.....	22,634,048	11,804,867

China sells us chiefly silk and tea, as well as large quantities of hemp, hides, leather, matings, and oils.

China is our most important customer in cotton cloths, and buys over one-half of what we export. Cotton cloths and petroleum are her chief imports from the United States at the present time. As the years go by and China improves her manufacturing abilities we may lose a part of the cotton market, but we stand ready—in fact, are the only nation in the world—to furnish her with the finished material for the building of railroads and bridges and the equipment for her transportation lines, as well as the machinery for her prospective manufactories, all of which must give us a steady increase of trade with her development. She has learned to buy in, the quantity and quality considered, the cheapest market, and her people are too shrewd and bright to leave sentimental considerations stand in the way.

In view of these facts the threatened loss of trade is a bugaboo not worthy to be considered when issues of such paramount importance to the American people are at stake.

ARE EXCLUSION LAWS NECESSARY?

I am well aware that there are many people in the United States who believe our citizens who so strenuously demand the passage of this legislation are needlessly alarmed and greatly overestimate the baneful effect of opening this country to free Asiatic immigration or to subjecting it to any more than such restrictions as are now imposed upon citizens from other countries.

These men contend that the Chinese will never come to our shores in sufficient numbers to be any considerable factor in labor competition. That those who do come will be of great benefit, as they will furnish us much needed labor in the lowest grades in which they claim the present labor market is greatly deficient; and will furnish house servants of a superior kind which can not now be obtained except at wages beyond the ability of the average citizen to pay. As to the number that would likely take advantage of a termination of the exclusion act, that is, of course, problematical, but that it will be very considerable, from all the information I have gathered from statistics, books, and personal observation, is certain. We must not forget that China has a population over 400,000,000 souls. Her country is overpopulated and the struggle for existence is desperate. She would not miss, and could with benefit lose 10,000,000 of her coolly population, who would be only too glad to seize the opportunity of bettering their condition should a good chance present itself.

I have no doubt that the flow of immigration without exclusion laws would be steady, and if they received no ill-treatment would rapidly reach the million mark. That in itself would create a most effective and disastrous competition, for those immigrants are almost entirely able-bodied men. In our population of 80,000,000 we can not have more than from ten to twelve million able-bodied wage-earners. The addition of a million would create an immediate impression on the labor market. You ask me upon what I base my estimate. Well, take the present conditions which surround us; every trick and device is used to obtain entry. As much as $500 is paid per capita for successful smuggling. Over the Mexican border comes a constant stream of yellow men, great care being used to scatter them and not attract attention by their numbers; still the stream is steady. So it has been from the British possessions of the north; the drift is steady, but necessarily in a stream not large enough to be generally noticeable. At our ports every contrivance—false swearing, impersonations, claims of belonging to privileged and nonexcluded classes, are constantly made, and only by the greatest watchfulness of our officials are these numbers limited who enter by evasions of the law.

When this is done, in spite of the fact that heavy penalties await offenders, and they are sure they are not wanted or welcomed by our people, we must necessarily believe that there is great anxiety among the Chinese of the port towns at least to make the United States the theater of their operations, recognizing it as a most desirable field. Another reason confirms me in my opinion; that is the fact that throughout the East, wherever he has been welcomed or even allowed entrance, he has overrun the country. A few examples are Singapore and the Malacca Peninsula, the Philippine Islands, the Sandwich Islands, Porto Rico, Cuba, and even densely settled Japan. So you will find him over all the isles of the Pacific, wherever he can find profitable lodgment. Such a source of annoyance has he become to the nations of many countries of the Orient that he is barred out, both by fear of violence and by the most stringent laws; and I instance Ceylon, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, and most of the islands of Polynesia.

THE CHINAMAN'S TRAITS.

I particularly desire to-day to discuss in connection with the above tendency of John Chinaman to make any available place of profit his temporary home his general traits as they have appeared to me wherever I have seen him at his home or in the countries whither he has immigrated. I will try to clearly state the facts as they have been presented to my personal observation, and you may judge for yourselves whether he will ever make a desirable American citizen or whether it will be good sense for us to allow him to introduce himself and mingle with our people in any great numbers, and come into active competition, not only in the lines of unskilled labor, but in those of skilled labor, mercantile pursuits, and clerical work.

And here it must be remembered that John Chinaman may come into a country as a cooly and begin upon the lowest grade of unskilled work, but he will not remain there long. He is capable of much higher work and is constantly on the lookout for it, and he will make every sacrifice to obtain it. He will not work for the lowest wages any longer than he must, but he will take as little or get as much as he can, and he prefers light work at all times to hard manual labor. So whether he gets paid ill or well, has hard manual labor or light, easy employment depends upon his natural capacity, which I will discuss with other of his important traits before I close.

PERSONAL OBSERVATIONS.

When our party of travelers last summer landed at Colombo, the principal city and most important seaport of the island of Ceylon, we first came into direct contact with that picturesque and most comfortable means of conveyance propelled by man power, so common throughout the Orient, but entirely unknown in the Occident—the jinrikisha. From reading books on China and Japan and seeing the illustrations in them we had become acquainted with the fact of its existence, and I marveled that they were not pulled by Chinese coolies as these books and illustrations indicated. Upon inquiry I found that the Chinaman was unknown in Ceylon; that the few that had come there were driven out by the native Tamil and Singalese. He was so dreaded and feared by the natives as a competitor that by general consent it was agreed that his presence could not be tolerated. This being well known, they had never been troubled with him, and the jinrikishas were manned and all labor done by the natives. By way of remark let me say that the African negro was also persona non grata there, and has never made his appearance on the island.

When we reached Singapore, the opposite was the case—the Chinaman was ubiquitous, on the bay his sampan floated everywhere. On the streets and roads thousands were pulling jinrikishas. The occupants of many of them were Chinese, and it was of most common occurrence to see one Chinaman pulling another Chinaman or two about the streets.

Let us pause to examine the island or port of Singapore for the purpose of acquainting ourselves with its commercial importance. Equally distant between Ceylon and Hongkong, commanding the entrance from the west of the China Sea by way of the Straits of Malacca, and having the Malay Peninsula as the hinterland, it is ideally located. Its geographical position and fine harbor, extensive go-downs, with unrivaled docking facilities, enormous coal supplies, and Chinese labor make it the great central market and transshipment port of the Orient. It receives the merchandise from Siam, Borneo, the Philippines, the French possessions of Cochin China, from Java, Sumatra, the Malay Archipelago, as well as the commerce coming north from Australia and from the west through the Suez Canal. This makes it the great distributing center. Ten millions of tons of merchandise entered and left in 1898 and much more since then, for its growth has been rapid and steady.

It is one of the Straits Settlements and a British Crown colony. Some years ago the English owned practically all of the real estate on the island. How is it now? Outside of the government property, the far larger part is owned by Chinese merchants. The settlement is practically owned and controlled by the Chinese. It is called the "Chinaman's heaven." In all branches of trade, industry, and labor he exercises a dominating and controlling influence. Silently and patiently he has set to work to root out foreigner and native alike, and he will be successful if he is not so already. I was informed by an American living there and representing a great American industry that one could not buy or sell a thousand dollars' worth of goods coming or going without it passing through the hands of the Chinese merchant, such monopolists of the trade of the country have they become. Among the merchants they number not only many rich men but many millionaires.

They have strong merchant guilds and are great organizers of trade and commerce. He further assured me of their absolute honesty in commercial dealings, saying that they not only paid their debts, but a verbal promise to pay money was at all times as reliable as a written one. The payment was always made promptly, punctually on the hour, without any dispute or question whether the commodity bought or sold had decreased or advanced in price. When one Chinese merchant became involved and could not pay, which was a rare case, he was backed by his whole guild or commercial society, and they invariably made his engagements good. They are known to be the most careful and keenest business men in the world, and as a trading race they are said to be far superior to the Hebrews.

In the matter of the acquisition of real estate, they gradually, after making a start by a purchase in one section, extend their purchases on all sides. Silently, patiently, remorselessly, this goes on. Every trick is resorted to to make the location unprofitable and unpleasant to the owner and his tenant, and when he becomes tired of losses and embarrassments and annoyances of all kinds and is not only willing, but anxious, to get away, a Chinese purchaser steps up and buys him out at as great a bargain as he can obtain. No one can withstand this silent but irresistible attack. He has money and craft, nerve and bulldog tenacity of purpose which overcomes every ordinary barrier.

Just as he has spread himself over Singapore he has, by the same steady, silent, patient, aggressive tactics, monopolized Hongkong and Shanghai, and is at the present time by far the largest owner of the real estate of these two great marts.

The truth of the quotation from Senate Document No. 137 of first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress impressed me. The words used are, "None can withstand their silent and irresistible flow, and their millions already populate and command the labor and trade of the islands and nations of the Pacific."

MALACCA PENINSULA.

Now, let us take up the condition as it existed and developed in the Malacca peninsula. Here the Chinaman had been attracted by the discoveries of tin in large quantities, and flocked into the mining districts to take hold of the work. They have by their numbers and persistence and industry driven out the native labor and monopolized it. They became so numerous and powerful that the Malay races became unable to administer their own governments and control the Chinese who had overrun the country, and the result was first discontent and then riots, and these turbulent conditions extended to such an extent that the Chinese had frequent conflicts between themselves.

They fought each other with a fury and carnage unknown in Malay warfare. The system of piracy which existed in and around Perak and that part of the Malay peninsula arose from these conflicts, and these pirates were notoriously almost exclusively Chinese. Driven to the coast by their fellows, and deprived of food and supplies, they preyed upon every passing vessel with impartiality. This went so far that the Chinese leaders, directed by the heads of their secret societies, attacked British posts beyond the border of Perak. This freed the hand of that nation, ever on the lookout for an excuse to extend its dominion, and the result was England's final occupation and control of the whole peninsula. The value and importance of this acquisition may be easily understood when it is known that nine-tenths of the tin entering the commerce of the world is mined there.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Journeying from there you strike the Chinaman again in the Philippine Islands. Much has been said of him here, and perhaps little need be added; but you will find him there not as the cooly, not as the man engaged in unskilled labor. He is the best workman there to-day, and he was almost the only merchant until the time of the American invasion, that existed in the Philippine Islands. In examining the workshop of the only railroad on the island I was astonished to find that the superintendent of repairs and construction was a Chinaman. I was assured that all the machinists of any great value and importance employed by that company were Chinese.

Mr. HILL. And did you not find in the navy-yard at Cavite that the best mechanics and a large portion of the labor force employed by the American Government were Chinese rather than Filipinos?

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I was coming to that. In the boiler shops and places where machinery is made and repaired, throughout the whole city of Manila, the best artisans are the Chinese; and, as has been stated by my colleague, at Cavite and wherever skilled labor is required the head managing man in all departments of skilled labor is a Chinaman. Wherever you go throughout that island and hunt the stores out of which the natives purchase, you will find that but few, and they are of the smallest character, are controlled by the natives. The Chinaman has a practical monopoly of all the retail, if not a considerable part of the wholesale, business.

One remarkable fact I learned. In the lower part of the archipelago, the only place where pearls are found, although it was under the control of the Sultan of Sulu, a Mohammedan, still I found that the entire product of the pearl fisheries went into the hands of the Chinese merchant, is taken by him from there to Singapore and Chinese ports of the East and exchanged. These Chinamen of the Philippines often, I found, married the native women and raised Chinese-Mestizos; but they do not do that with any intention of remaining there the rest of their lives and of settling and being buried there. When a Chinaman reaches a time that he becomes independent, his universal rule seems to be to give something to his wife and something to his children, and, after dividing his property, to take the bulk of it and go home to the land of his ancestors without further thought of wife or children.

When we came to Hongkong we found there the Chinaman almost as ubiquitous as he was at Singapore. There he ran the jinrikishas and all the great mercantile establishments; there he was at the head of all the guilds which furnish the export trade to the world. His numbers here are placed at 250,000 while British and Europeans, including the garrison, number only 7,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HITT. Does the gentleman desire further time?

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. In a few minutes more I can conclude.

Mr. HITT. I yield to the gentleman time to conclude his remarks.

CANTON.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. A short distance away lies, to my mind, the most unique city in the world, that of Canton, which has two and a half millions of inhabitants; and not a single wheel moves there, not even a wheelbarrow, with no beast of burden except man. More than that, we were unable to get through the streets in this city except in a sedan chair, carried by from three to four coolies. The streets of the city are between 6 and 8 feet in width; they rarely go beyond that. There is an immense amount of property in the shape of merchandise in that town. The people are most industrious workmen. Every kind of hand work that requires a skilled artisan is made in that place. I saw embroidery there that must have taken skilled women at least from three to six months to make, and it was sold for the sum of from two and a half to four dollars in gold, and that, of course, took in the value of the materials which entered into it, which were of the finest. Skilled artisans live here on $2 per month.

I have not time to go into the details, but wherever you turned the fact that labor did not count forced itself upon your attention. Everything was cheap, but labor was the cheapest. I asked at Hongkong how much the British Government paid a day to work on the roads in the heat of the summer, and I received the reply that men were paid 25 cents Mexican, which is equal to 12½ cents, and women half as much.

If we want to bring the American people down to the plane of life that that exemplifies, all we have to do is to open our doors to the hordes who know too much of the wealth and the large wages that can be earned in this country.

The Chinaman has many points by which he will drive out even the American workmen should he come here. People make a great mistake who think he has no virtues. As a workman I know of none who has greater or more. I will mention just a few. In the first place he is temperate.

Mr. HILL. Absolutely.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. You will never find a drunken Chinaman at work. The drunken Chinaman is where the Chinaman uses opium, and that to no great extent, I will say, irrespective of what we may see of it in San Francisco and perhaps other towns. But throughout the Chinese Empire the Chinaman is temperate in the extreme. His temperance goes beyond that; he is really abstemious, not only in drink and in smoke, but in food alike.

At Shanghai I visited the opium joints, dancing halls, and places where the natives gather for amusement and entertainment. The hour was not later than about 10 o'clock when I left, and by that time all the opium joints had shut up and their patrons departed, for they were empty. Few, comparatively, of the Chinese in China use opium to excess.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. Almost all the writers on China hold the contrary view. The men who have traveled there very extensively say that one of the besetting sins of the Chinese is their great love for opium and that it has had a very degrading effect on the people.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. That may be the fact as to some Chinamen, but the men, as I understand it, who have written of China have taken the people of the seaport towns of China for their statements. They have not gone into the interior; and I do not blame them for that, because every traveler that has gone there has said that he is followed by a swarm of Chinamen as sheep follow the bell wether. He can not eat or rest in peace, and they simply follow him out of mere idle curiosity until they have driven him out in utter disgust if not in fear. You have heard that they are not cleanly. The Chinaman is clean. Now, that may be controverted, but wherever you find a Chinaman—of course, as you find other people, some are dirty, but the rule of the race is that he is clean. I never saw a dirty Chinese servant and I saw many of them.

He bathes frequently. Why, a great many of these people absolutely live, raise their families, and have lived for generations on the water. There are millions of them that have been born and bred and worked and died within a compass of the size of a boat about 16 feet in length and 5 or 6 feet in width. In Hongkong I saw a remarkable instance, where a man who owns a boat had his aged grandmother, 83 years of age, his mother, somewhat younger—he had his wife and three or four children and one grandchild on the boat that took my baggage to the hotel. He told me that he had lived there and his father and grandfather had lived before him on this small boat or one like it. He expected to die there. In these port towns and in the rivers millions of people are born, live, and die on boats.

I believe there has not been a writer or traveler that has not agreed upon the fact that the Chinaman is the most industrious mortal in the world. We do not have to go far to see that. Go into the towns where there is a Chinese laundry, and the last light put out at night is that in that laundry. The first man astir in the morning is the Chinaman. It is so throughout the Celestial Empire. He is industrious in the extreme, and being temperate and industrious that is the reason that wherever he goes throughout the places where the oriental races live he can always maintain his position there. He can always fight his way with any native people of these countries.

Everybody admits that he is economical, for how could he live and raise a family when he receives only 7 to 25 cents a day? Certainly we could not live on that in this country. There may be some truth in the story that his stomach is not large enough to hold a great amount of food. Probably the fact is not that his stomach is not large enough, but the conditions that surround him are such that he does not get enough to put into the stomach, and by being constantly obliged to control his appetite has by this habit become able to subsist on less and maintain his strength on less than any people of the other nations of the world.

The honesty, I have no doubt, of a Chinaman is disputed; but, gentlemen, when you go to Japan you will find in every bank in that great Empire every man that is employed in the bank except a few of the head men, from messenger up to cashier, is a Chinaman, and it was that way through the whole China-Japanese war. Not only is the Chinaman in the banks, but you will often find him as the trusted and confidential employee as well as the superintendent of departments in many of the large manufacturing there. In the greatest of the manufacturing cities of Japan, Osaka, with its 800,000 of population, you find John Chinaman often bossing the job.

Almost everywhere in the East in the English hotels, which are in all the important cities, the servants are Chinese, and the universal answer to inquiries made of their employers was that they were scrupulously honest, capable, clean, and faithful. In fact, this so impressed itself upon a member of the party with whom I traveled that he would have liked to take one along home to act as his body servant, exclusion or no exclusion laws.

Go to the Sandwich Islands, which is the next place, and he has absolutely run out the natives. I remember of going to the beach to bathe, and I made a remark, "Where are the native people?" I expected to see them disporting themselves in the waters, and to find them in their pleasure boats sailing and paddling along the shores. The guide said: "Times ain't as they used to were. In those days the native had plenty of leisure, and much of his time was spent in the water. He has now reached the time in the progress of American civilization when he has all he can do to scratch together a bare living, and instead of spending his time in the water he has to hustle to get enough to eat." This, by the way, is the usual result of the introduction of civilizing influences among native populations and allowing their lands to be overrun by the exploiter and speculator, assisted by the cheap labor of China and Japan.

In these islands I found that the men who supplied the markets were Chinamen. The men who grow the plantains and the bananas, the pineapple; the men who grow every bit of the market produce consumed in the city of Honolulu; the men who raise the ducks and the chickens, who raise the beef and catch the fish are almost invariably Chinamen. I suppose there may be from 25,000 to 30,000 Chinese there now.

Mr. KAHN. There are about 25,000.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I know the number is large compared with the amount of territory under cultivation there. I don't know whether the Japanese exceed him in number—

Mr. KAHN. The Japanese number about 60,000.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. If he does exceed him, he is the only race. There has been a great effort made to get the Japanese there and keep the Chinamen out, for the reason that the Chinaman will not patiently remain a coolly laborer on the sugar plantations, but is always seeking for some more remunerative and less arduous work, and therefore can not be depended upon for a series of years, as can the Japanese.

I have given a short account of the Chinaman as he appears to the American traveler in Hongkong, Canton, and Shanghai—three typical commercial cities of his home land. I have also given a sketch of him as he appears in those places outside of his country into which he has introduced himself, attracted by the opportunities for earning profit, some of which he has overrun and practically monopolized the trade and labor market, and sometimes the very land, viz, Singapore, the Malacca Peninsula, the Philippine Islands, the Sandwich Islands. I have made mention of him in Japan. My colleague from California [Mr. KAHN] in his excellent speech on this bill has given quite a detailed sketch of John Chinaman as he will be found in California and the Pacific States, where he has in the largest numbers located and established his home for the time being at least.

Wherever you find him he maintains all the peculiarities of his race, its manners, customs, mode of life, religious observances, and beliefs; he practices the very vices of his fatherland when possible; he herds together in habitations separated from those of the natives of the community in which he has settled. He takes no interest in the government or the institutions of the country; he does not even enjoy their amusements, except it be that of cockfighting in the Philippine Islands. In no way during the fifty years he has resided in the United States has he ever shown a desire to be incorporated into our national life. He has maintained himself during all this time as a stranger in a strange land, whose one desire is to work for the accumulation of sufficient money to carry back to China, with which to maintain himself in ease and comfort there among the people of his own race, and, dying, to have his body buried with those of his ancestors whom he worships. So great is his anxiety to be buried in Chinese soil that they tell me every contract made with those who advance money for his passage to this country contains the agreement that in case of death his body shall be deported to his home. The same contract is made with the steamship companies when he purchases a ticket for his return home. The reason that many die returning to China is because when they feel the approach of death they invariably take passage home, knowing that should they die on the way they will be buried there.

One incident showing their utter unfitness for association with and permanent residence in our midst comes to mind. In my home town a Chinaman had been indicted for the rape of a little white girl about 14 years old. He was put under bail promptly in a large amount, owing to the danger of his taking French leave. In the trial all the witnesses for the defense were Chinese laundrymen, and everyone swore to practically the same facts and could not be made to depart from that story, although it was impossible for all of them to have had any knowledge of the facts sworn to had they been true. The very interpreter could not be relied on. It was apparent that they had no regard for the sanctity of an oath nor did they indicate that they knew what that meant. This condition, they say, is universal in court proceedings where they are interested, and it is hard to understand how the courts could maintain their proper functions were they numerous in our midst.

America needs exclusion laws because her shores are so accessible. They do not go to the countries of continental Europe because their labor market is not nearly as desirable as that of the United States. When they once immigrate there in any numbers we will hear of the passage of exclusion acts of the kind passed by this country and Australia and New Zealand.

THE YELLOW PERIL.

I believe that it will be the worst of policies for us to stir up the Chinese country and its people and even urge them to adopt our ideas of civilization and progress. She is a sleeping giant who, when once aroused, may do us great harm. It may seem very smart for some of our American exploiters to laugh and sneer whenever the yellow peril is mentioned; but, gentlemen, that yellow peril will be a practical peril to us when it breaks its bonds of conservatism.

The more one studies it the more he fears it, and the way to meet it to-day is to pass this exclusion bill and take our chances in obtaining what trade we can with China. It will not do to extend our trade at the expense and to the detriment of the people of this country.

I do not fear their vices so much as their virtues, but nevertheless I sincerely fear both. As sure as the sun rises in the east and sets in the west, if the cheap labor of Asiatic countries is allowed in great numbers to settle in our midst a social revolution will be the result. Nothing we can do will so soon precipitate a condition of anarchy or institute a reign of violence the very contemplation of which makes me shudder. It is far better for the citizen of the United States and the citizen of China that steps be taken now such as are contemplated. With stringent exclusion acts in force we will remain better neighbors and truer and more lasting friends. The time will come when in the march of our civilization and progress westward the bonds of China will be broken. I believe it to be near at hand. Let us not forget the truth of the saying, "Westward the star of empire takes its way." It has reached our country now; how long will it remain?

Will it not shine on the land of the Celestial Kingdom next? We have seen in the last few decades the absolute transformation of the people of Japan. But a few short years ago they were exactly like the Chinese of to-day. A few progressive reform spirits with the education of the United States and Europe have wrought the change. To the careful observer the seeds of a new dispensation have already been sown in China. Let her people, among whom primary education is universal and learning in its higher branches widespread, turn themselves to the development of a military spirit. They are physically and mentally strong and have the important elements which go into the making of good soldiers and sailors. They will soon be able to handle the weapons of war with the soldiers of the military powers of the world. The step is not a great one and the time will soon come, aye, sooner than most men expect it. Nor is her commercial growth and development far away. We who live to-day may see the time when she, with her great natural resources and cheap labor, will be an active and irresistible competitor in the markets of the world. Let us keep an eye on China and not allow our greed for gain arouse this sleeping five-toed dragon.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, the time arranged for general debate has expired. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13031 (the Chinese-exclusion bill) and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SPIGHT, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for one week, on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. HITT (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Monday next.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio, from the Committee on Elections No. 1, to which was referred the contested-election case of William M. Horton v. James J. Butler, Twelfth Congressional district, State of Missouri, reported a resolution (H. Res. 203) that no valid election was held in said district on the 6th day of November, 1900, and that the seat now held by the contestee be declared vacant, accompanied by a report (No. 1423); which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. POWERS of Maine, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13076) to apportion the term of office of Senators elected at the first general election in the Territory of Hawaii, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1424); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FOWLER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13363) to maintain the gold standard, provide an elastic currency, equalize the rates of interest throughout the country, and further amend the national banking laws, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1425); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills; which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12889) granting an increase of pension to Lucy Good Bigbie—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12933) granting an increase of pension to George W. McConkey—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12986) granting a pension to S. A. Routh—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12961) for the relief of James L. Carpenter—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BEIDLER: A bill (H. R. 13387) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska, and for other purposes"—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McLACHLAN: A bill (H. R. 13388) amending section 13 of Title I, chapter 1, of the Political Code of Alaska—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 13389) for making a grant of alternate sections of the public lands in the district of Alaska, to aid in the construction of a certain railroad in said district, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. NEEDHAM: A bill (H. R. 13390) to protect Indian allottees in the control of their allotments—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MUDD (by request): A bill (H. R. 13391) to amend an act entitled "An act to receive arrearages of taxes due the District of Columbia to July 1, 1900, at 6 per cent per annum in lieu of penalties and costs," approved February 15, 1902—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 13392) to regulate the sale of viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products in the District of Columbia, to regulate interstate traffic in said articles, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. NEVILLE: A bill (H. R. 13393) to amend section 2289 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of 1878, relative to homesteads—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BOREING: A bill (H. R. 13402) to provide for the improvement of the Upper Cumberland River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. TAYLER of Ohio, from the Committee on Elections No. 1: A resolution (H. Res. 202) declaring that no valid election for Representative in Congress was held in the Twelfth Congressional district of the State of Missouri on November 6, 1900, and that the seat now held by the contestee be declared vacant—to the House Calendar.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BEIDLER: A bill (H. R. 13394) granting a pension to William H. Polhamus—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURKE of South Dakota: A bill (H. R. 13395) granting a pension to Arthur J. Bushnell—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 13396) granting an increase of pension to Jennie Wagner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEMENWAY: A bill (H. R. 13397) granting an increase of pension to William H. Robinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KNAPP: A bill (H. R. 13398) granting an increase of pension to George G. Sabin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McLACHLAN: A bill (H. R. 13399) granting a pension to Annie E. Wallace—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 13400) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Samuel Svenson—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHAFROTH: A bill (H. R. 13401) granting a pension to John White—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GIBSON: A bill (H. R. 13403) granting an increase of pension to Elisha Disney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ACHESON: Resolution of the Grand Army of the Republic, Westchester, Pa., favoring the passage of House bill 5796, to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolutions of David Acheson Circle, No. 39, Ladies of Grand Army of the Republic, Pennsylvania, favoring a bill providing pensions to certain officers and men in the Army and Navy and increasing widows' pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ALEXANDER: Petition of Division No. 15, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Buffalo, N. Y., favoring the passage of the Hoar-Grosvenor anti-injunction bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BARTLETT: Resolution of Lodge No. 12, of Macon, Ga., Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders' Union, favoring more restrictive immigration laws—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. BEIDLER: Papers to accompany House bill 13394, granting a pension to W. H. Polhamus, of Cleveland, Ohio—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BELLAMY: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Washington, N. C., and Elizabeth City, N. C., in regard to an inland waterway from Chesapeake Bay to Beaufort Inlet—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BIEDLER: Resolutions of a mass meeting of the Utah volunteers, favoring bill to allow travel pay from Manila, P. I., to San Francisco to those who enlisted on call for volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of Empire Lodge, No. 6, and St. Clair Lodge, No. 44, Iron, Steel, and Tin Workers, favoring an educational test for immigrants—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, resolutions of Machinists' Union No. 238, and Ferris Lodge, No. 132, Railroad Trainmen, Cleveland, Ohio, favoring a reenactment of the Chinese-exclusion law—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, resolution of Carpenters and Joiners' Union, of Cleveland, Ohio, asking that the Government building at Cleveland be built of native sandstone instead of granite—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, resolutions of St. John's African Methodist Episcopal Church and Zion Congregational Church (colored), Cleveland, Ohio, urging legislation cutting down representation of States disfranchising citizens—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 7, 1902.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. CULLOM, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal, without objection, will stand approved.

PROTECTION OF MINERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8327) to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories," and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and agree to the request of the House for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. CLARK of Montana, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, and Mr. KEARNS were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2442) confirming title to the State of Nebraska of certain selected indemnity school lands.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2062) to authorize the Western Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Ohio River;

A bill (H. R. 10517) to amend an act entitled "An act relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon;" and

A bill (H. R. 12536) to further amend section 2399 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 13360) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

NATIONAL GALLERIES OF HISTORY AND ART.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed and bound in paper 2,500 copies of part 1, Senate Document 209, first session Fifty-sixth Congress, being a petition of Franklin Webster Smith for the site of the old Naval Observatory for the National Galleries of History and Art, which shall be for the free distribution to visitors at large to the establishment known as the Halls of the Ancients, in the city of Washington, D. C.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. PLATT of New York. From the Committee on Printing I report a joint resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 74) relating to publications of the Geological Survey was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That hereafter the publications of the Geological Survey shall consist of the annual report of the Director, which shall be confined to one volume, of royal octavo size; monographs, of quarto size; professional papers, of quarto size; bulletins, of ordinary octavo size; Mineral Resources, of ordinary octavo size; Water-Supply and Irrigation Papers, of ordinary octavo size, and such maps, folios, and atlases as may be required by existing law.

That hereafter the reports of the Geological Survey, except the annual report of the Director, shall be published in editions as recommended in each case by the Director and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, but not to exceed 10,000 copies.

That whenever the edition of any of the reports of the Survey shall have become exhausted, and the demand for it continues, there shall be published, on the requisition of the Secretary of the Interior, as many additional copies of the report as the Director of the Survey shall state will, in his judgment, be necessary to meet the demand.

That the Bulletins and Professional Papers shall be distributed gratuitously and not sold; and that, of the number published, 1,000 copies shall be delivered to the Senate and 2,000 copies shall be delivered to the House of Representatives for distribution.

That the provision of law approved June 11, 1896, restricting the Water-Supply Papers to 100 pages and to editions of 5,000 copies shall be, and hereby is, rescinded.

That the Director of the Survey shall transmit to the Library of Congress two copies of every report of the Bureau as soon as the first delivery to the Survey is made, such copies to be additional to those received by the Library of Congress under existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. TELLER. From what committee does it come?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Printing.

Mr. TELLER. I think it had better be printed. It seems to me to be a pretty important measure.

Mr. PLATT of New York. It is indorsed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. TELLER. No one can know anything about it from hearing it read at the desk. I do not see any necessity for pressing it this morning. I myself should like to look at it.

Mr. PLATT of New York. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to the present consideration of the joint resolution, it will be placed on the Calendar.

COURTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 184) to establish and provide for a clerk for the circuit and district courts of the United States held at Wilmington, N. C., to report it back favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration. It is very short.

The Secretary read the bill, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANATOMICAL BOARD OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. On the 13th day of March the Senate passed a bill (S. 2291) for the promotion of anatomical science and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia. The bill likewise passed the House of Representatives and was recalled from the President for amendment. I now report an original bill embodying certain amendments, and I ask consent that it be considered at the present time.

The bill (S. 5046) for the promotion of anatomical science and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be, and is hereby, created, in and for the District of Columbia, a board for the control of the dead human bodies hereinafter described, and for the distribution of such bodies among and to the schools in said District conferring the degree of doctor of medicine or doctor of dental surgery, or both; the Post Graduate School of Medicine, incorporated by an act of Congress approved February 7, 1896, entitled "An act to incorporate the Post Graduate School of Medicine of the District of Columbia;" the medical schools of the United States Army and Navy; the medical examining boards of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine-Hospital Service; and the board of medical supervisors of the District of Columbia. Said board shall be known as the anatomical board of the District of Columbia, and shall consist of the health officer of said District and two representatives from each school aforesaid actually engaged in teaching, to be selected by and from the faculty thereof in accordance with the by-laws of such faculty, except in the case of the medical schools of the United States Army and Navy, the representatives from which shall be selected and detailed by the Surgeon-General of the Army and the Surgeon-General of the Navy. Said health officer shall call a meeting of said anatomical board for organization at a time and place to be fixed by said health officer as soon as practicable after the passage of this act. Said anatomical board shall have full power to establish by-laws for its government and to appoint and to remove proper officers and agents, and shall keep full and complete records of its transactions and of all material facts pertaining to the receipt and distribution of bodies. Said records shall be open at all times for inspection by any member of said anatomical board and by the United States attorney for the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That every public officer, agent, and servant, and every officer, agent, and servant of any and every almshouse, prison, jail, asylum, morgue, hospital, and other public institutions and offices having charge or control of dead human bodies requiring to be buried at public expense, shall notify said anatomical board, or such person as may be designated by the said board, whenever any dead human body comes into his possession, charge, or control for burial at public expense. And every such officer, agent, and servant shall, upon application by said anatomical board or its agent, without fee or reward, and complying with the laws and regulations governing the removal of dead human bodies in the District of Columbia, deliver every such body to said board and permit said board or its agent to take and remove the same. The notice aforesaid shall be given in writing and forwarded to said anatomical board within twenty-four hours after said officer, agent, or servant comes into possession, charge, or control of such body for burial, and shall include such material information as said board may designate. But no such body shall be delivered if the deceased person, during his last illness, without suggestion or solicitation, requested to be buried or cremated; or if within the time specified above and before the actual delivery thereof any person claiming to be and satisfying the officer in charge of such body that he is of kindred or is related by marriage to the deceased shall claim the said body for burial or cremation, or request in writing that it be buried at public expense; or if within the time specified above and before actual delivery any person claiming to be and satisfying the officer in charge of such body that he is a friend of the deceased arranges to have the same properly buried or cremated without expense to the District; or if the deceased person was a traveler who died suddenly; but in any such case said body shall be buried or delivered to said applicant for burial.

SEC. 3. That the said anatomical board may receive the bodies reported to it as aforesaid, and may distribute and deliver such as are received among and to such of the schools and boards entitled thereto as request in writing to receive the same, except as otherwise expressly directed in this act. Each such school and board shall receive annually, as nearly as may be practicable, such proportion of the entire number of bodies distributed as the number of students enrolled and in regular attendance at such school, and the number of candidates appearing for examination before such board, respectively, engaged bona fide at such school, or examined by said board in dissecting and operative surgery on the cadaver, bears to the total number of students so enrolled in attendance, and engaged, and of persons so examined, in the District of Columbia. The secretary, dean, or other proper officer of each such school and board shall report to said anatomical board the names of all such students in attendance at such school or persons examined by said board, as the case may be, at such times and in such form as said board may direct. All bodies shall be delivered among such schools and boards in regular order, so as to maintain, as nearly as may be practicable, an equitable allotment at all times; and bodies assigned to any school or board in regular order and refused by such school or board without sufficient cause shall be charged against the quota of such school or board in such manner as not to prejudice any other school or board. But no body shall be delivered to any school or board unless within not less than twenty-four hours prior to such delivery notice of the death has been given by said anatomical board to the nearest known kinsman, relative by marriage, or friend of the deceased, or if none such be known, published by said anatomical board at least once in a daily newspaper published in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia. The notice required by this section shall be deemed to have been given if served in writing on the person to be notified, or if left at his usual place of residence with some adult person residing therein, or a member of the family of such person. Said board shall take receipts by name, or, if the name be unknown, by a description, for each body delivered; all receipts so obtained by said board shall be properly filed by it.

SEC. 4. That no school except the medical schools of the United States Army and Navy shall receive any body under the provisions of this act until said school has given bond to the District of Columbia, and the Board of Commissioners of said District has approved such bond, which said bond shall be in the penal sum of $200 and conditioned that all bodies which said school shall receive shall be used in said District and only for the promotion of the science and art of medicine and of dentistry.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of each and every officer, agent, and employee of every school and board receiving bodies under the provisions of this act to see that such bodies are used in the District of Columbia and for the promotion of the science and art of medicine and of dentistry, and for no other purpose whatsoever, and that after being so used the remains thereof are disposed of in accordance with law.

SEC. 6. That any person who shall, in the District of Columbia, sell or buy any body aforesaid, or in any way traffic therewith, or transmit or convey any such body to any place outside of said District, or cause or procure any such body to be so transmitted or conveyed, or who shall, in said District, disturb or remove, without legal permit, any body from any grave or vault, shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not more than $200 or imprisoned in the workhouse of said District for not more than one year.

SEC. 7. That neither the United States nor the District of Columbia, nor any officer, agent, or servant thereof, shall be at any expense by reason of the delivery of any body or bodies aforesaid, except such as may be properly chargeable on account of bodies delivered to the medical schools of the Army and Navy, the medical examining boards of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine-Hospital Service, and the board of medical supervisors of the District of Columbia; but all expenses of such delivery and distribution, except as hereinbefore specified, and of said anatomical board, shall be paid by the schools receiving such bodies, in such manner as may be specified by said board and by such school in proportion to the number of bodies which it has received; and no school which has failed or refused to pay its just proportion of such expense as determined by said board shall be allowed to receive any body or bodies, or parts thereof, while the amount so due remains unpaid.

SEC. 8. That any person having any duty enjoined upon him by the provisions of this act who willfully neglects, refuses, or fails to perform the same, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment in the workhouse of the District of Columbia for not more than one year.

SEC. 9. That all prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of the District of Columbia, on information brought in the name of said District on its behalf.

SEC. 10. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Secretary to read the changes made by this bill in Senate bill 2291, which was recalled after its passage by the two Houses.

The Secretary read as follows:

In section 1, page 2, line 1, after "medical," strike out "school" and insert "schools;" in the same line, after "Army," insert "and Navy;" in line 10, after "medical," strike out "school" and insert "schools;" in line 11, after "Army," insert "and Navy;" and in line 12, after "Army," insert "and the Surgeon-General of the Navy."

In section 3, page 4, line 23, after "such," strike out "school" and insert "schools."

In section 4, page 5, line 23, after "medical," strike out "school" and insert "schools;" and in line 24, after "Army," insert "and Navy."

In section 7, page 7, line 3, after "medical," strike out "school" and insert "schools;" and in line 4, after "Army," insert "and Navy."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT STERLING, ILL.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1556) for the erection of a post-office building at Sterling, Ill., to report it favorably, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. MASON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be placed on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read to the Senate for its information. The committee amendment, which proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause, will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment of the committee, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other governmental offices in the city of Sterling and State of Illinois, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, not to exceed the sum of $55,000.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall within thirty days after such examination make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of public building thereon at Sterling, in the State of Illinois."

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 4995) to establish an additional life-saving station on Monomoy Island, Massachusetts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4996) authorizing the President of the United States to nominate Lieut. Commander W. P. Randall, now on the retired list, to be a commander on the retired list; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, which was ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5030) granting a pension to Thomas W. Mathews;

A bill (S. 5031) granting an increase of pension to J. W. Shepard;

A bill (S. 5032) granting a pension to Eliza Page;

A bill (S. 5033) granting an increase of pension to Price W. Harvey;

A bill (S. 5034) granting a pension to Margaret Robison; and

A bill (S. 5035) granting an increase of pension to Henry Strouse.

Mr. CULLOM introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5036) granting a pension to Charles A. Wheeler (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 5037) granting an increase of pension to Edmond Likes; and

A bill (S. 5038) granting an increase of pension to Adam Hart (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. MASON introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompany papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5039) granting a pension to Emma R. Wallace;

A bill (S. 5040) granting an increase of pension to Stephen G. Cole;

A bill (S. 5041) granting an increase of pension to William O. Gould;

A bill (S. 5042) granting an increase of pension to Joseph P. Maulden; and

A bill (S. 5043) granting a pension to John Hester.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 5044) for the relief of Dr. Henry Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 5047) granting a pension to E. C. Curtis; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of E. C. Curtis, Company B, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, for pension, verified by affidavits of Dr. S. F. Arthur, W. H. Black, S. G. Tankersley, and J. G. Dawson. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 75) providing for the purchase of marble busts of Hon. Justin S. Morrill and Hon. D. W. Voorhees, late United States Senators from the States of Vermont and Indiana, respectively, to be placed in the Congressional Library; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

MARY A. MOORE.

Mr. COCKRELL. On December 5 I introduced a bill (S. 898) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Moore, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I now introduce a new bill granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Moore, and to accompany it I present the petition of Mary A. Moore, with affidavits of Dr. John P. Bryson, L. W. Hagerman, and J. O. Churchill, and letter of L. W. Hagerman and others.

The bill (S. 5045) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Moore was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,420 to pay Sandy Wallace, a laborer on the rolls of the Senate, for extra labor performed by him for the six years and three months from December 1, 1893, to March 1, 1900, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing for the appointment by the Spanish Claims Commission of not exceeding two commissioners to take testimony in the island of Cuba, and providing for their compensation; and also authorizing the said commission, in place of the two clerks now in service, to employ an assistant clerk at the rate of $2,400 and one clerk at the rate of $1,600 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $500 to pay for compiling certain papers and documents for the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $77.40 to pay for preparing a table of contents for reports of the Isthmian Canal Commission, being Senate Document No. 54, parts 1 and 2, and Senate Document No. 123, Fifty-seventh Congress, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DEPEW submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 for the erection of a building to be known as "The American National Institute" on grounds donated by the municipal council of the city of Paris, France, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS OF MAIMED EX-SOLDIERS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on the 25th day of March last the Committee on Pensions gave a hearing to the representatives of the United States Maimed Soldiers' League in support of the bill (S. 1887) to adjust the pensions of those who have lost limbs or are totally disabled in them or have additional disabilities. There is quite a call for the statements. The committee had 50 copies printed for its own use. I now ask that 500 additional copies be printed for the use of the Committee on Pensions. It will cost but a few dollars.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire, and the order is made.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 2062) to authorize the Western Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Ohio River was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 10517) to amend an act entitled "An act relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 12536) to further amend section 2399 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

ASSAY OFFICE AT PROVO CITY, UTAH.

Mr. RAWLINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 150) for the establishment of an assay office at Provo City, Utah.

Mr. HALE. If the debate on the Chinese-exclusion bill is not to go on and occupy the time, I shall insist upon the Calendar being proceeded with in its regular order. As the Senator from Utah has called up this bill, I will not interfere with it, but after that is disposed of, unless the Senator from Pennsylvania goes on with the bill in his charge, I must ask that the Calendar be considered in its regular order. In that way everyone gets in instead of a few Senators having bills considered in which they are interested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill would be in order when the Calendar is taken up, being first on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. Then I have no objection, if the Senator from Pennsylvania does not want to go on with the Chinese-exclusion bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is this bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 150) for the establishment of an assay office at Provo City, Utah; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. HALE. Now, let us go on with the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The first case on the Calendar will be announced.

The bill (S. 2992) to ratify an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, in South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. I object to the bill. Let it go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over and takes its place on the Calendar under Rule IX.

The bill (S. 1792) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to navigation of vessels, bills of lading, and to certain obligations, duties, and rights in connection with the carriage of property" was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill go over under Rule IX.

Mr. NELSON. I object to that course. I do not want to have the bill lose its place on the Calendar. I am willing that it shall go over, but I do not want to have it lose its place. It has gone over a number of times.

Mr. HALE. I will not make any objection to that course; but the Senator understands that there is a great deal of opposition to the bill, and it can not be discussed under the five-minute rule. It will have ultimately to go to the Calendar under Rule IX, where it will have a general discussion, and it can not be discussed under the five-minute rule. If the Senator wants it to-day to go over, retaining its place, I do not object.

Mr. NELSON. I want to have it retain its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What request was made as to Senate bill 2992?

Mr. GALLINGER. It went to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. HALE. Senate bill 2992 goes to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. GAMBLE. I would much prefer that Senate bill 2992 should retain its place on the Calendar. I think perhaps some understanding can be had in regard to it, and I ask that it be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have no objection to that course, except that we do not know when the Calendar is going to be called, and those of us who wish to discuss bills may not be here when they are called. If a bill which has been objected to is on the Calendar to be called every morning, it may be taken up some time when those who desire to discuss such bills at length are not here, and it would be passed as a matter of course. I have no objection to the bill retaining its place, but I wish it understood that when the bill is to be considered it is to be discussed more than it can be discussed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HALE. Now, that is precisely what I had in mind. It hinders our progress with bills that Senators desire to pass which are not objected to, when every morning we meet these bills and have them put over for a day. In the end, each of these cases will have to go to the Calendar under Rule IX, because Senators who are interested for or against them want to debate them longer than the five-minute rule permits. It is in the interest of good business to have them out of the way on this Calendar and go to the Calendar under Rule IX, and then they can be taken up regularly, on motion, and considered.

If the Senators in charge want to have these bills go over one day more I shall not, for one, object, but I will state to those Senators that in the end the bills will have to go to the Calendar under Rule IX, because they can not be discussed under the five-minute rule. Now, the Senators may take their choice and have them stay on the Calendar to-day or not, just as they please.

Mr. NELSON. I want to have Senate bill 1792 stay on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Both bills will be passed over without prejudice, retaining their places on the Calendar.

The bill (H. R. 3110) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans was next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 1919) fixing fees of jurors and witnesses in the United States courts in the State of Wyoming was next in order.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] has been objecting to the consideration of the bill, and he is not here at present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it go over.

Mr. HALE. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without prejudice?

Mr. HALE. No; I do not know that it is to go over without prejudice. There is a list on the Calendar which I never heard of before, of cases "passed over without prejudice under Rule VIII." I do not know where they belong. We only know of two Calendars, the five-minute Calendar, under Rule VIII, and the other Calendar, under Rule IX. I do not know what intermediate status a bill has that is passed over without prejudice. It retains its place on the Calendar, I can understand that, and comes up every day. But I want to have the next bill go over under Rule IX. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This first list was made for the convenience of Senators. It is still a part of the Calendar under Rule VIII, passed over, the cases retaining their places without prejudice. That is only for the convenience of Senators. It is practically a part of the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. HALE. I suggest that in making up the Calendar for tomorrow morning the clerks make up the two Calendars, the Calendar under Rule IX and the Calendar under Rule VIII, and then we will know what is before us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator understands that if objection is made to the consideration of a bill under Rule VIII a motion is in order to proceed to its consideration notwithstanding the objection. But if an objection is made and nothing more occurs than the objection, it goes to Rule IX.

Mr. HALE. And if it goes over on objection, retaining its place, it is to be considered under the five-minute rule when it comes up again. I want to have the next item go under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1694) to provide for compensation for certain employees of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments.

Mr. HALE. Let that go to the Calendar under Rule IX. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it goes to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The bill (S. 4074) for the relief of Thierman & Frost was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Let that go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is objected to and goes to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The bill (S. 3421) for the relief of Eleonora G. Goldsborough was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURNHAM. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] understands the question involved in this bill and may desire to be present when it is considered. I am expecting him in the Chamber at any moment, and I ask that the bill may be passed over for a few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

ROBERT J. SPOTTSWOOD, ET AL.

The bill (H. R. 7018) for the relief of Robert J. Spottswood and the heirs of William C. McClellan, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "Colorado," to strike out "ten thousand" and insert "fifteen thousand seven hundred and thirty-one;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert J. Spottswood and the heirs of William C. McClellan, deceased, of Colorado, $15,731 as additional compensation for transporting the United States mail from Morrison to Fairplay, and from Fairplay to Leadville, in the State of Colorado, by the said Spottswood and McClellan, from the 1st day of September, 1878, to the 10th day of September, 1879.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

REFUND OF PUBLIC-LAND FEES.

The bill (S. 642) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries on public lands," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Minnesota to explain the object of the change of the existing law as proposed by the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, this is a bill which was introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. It proposes to amend the existing law in two particulars. Under existing law, where homesteaders or entry claimants have made entries which have afterwards been canceled, they are entitled to have the fees which they had paid at the land office refunded. That is now the law, and the only change in that respect is to limit the return of the fees to the entryman or his legal representatives.

The other provision of the bill and the main feature of it relates to homesteaders or preemption claimants who have entered lands within the limits of railroad grants. Under all our various railroad grants within the primary limits land was put at double the minimum price—that is, at $2.50 per acre—on the ground that the lands were near to a railroad that was to be constructed. A great many settlers have made their final proof and proved up their lands within the primary limits of those railroad grants at $2.50 an acre; but it turns out in many cases that some of those railroad grants have been forfeited and that no railroad has actually been built.

The object of this bill—and it is strictly limited to that—is in all those cases where any part of a railroad grant has been forfeited and no railroad has actually been built the settlers within those limits shall not be charged more than $1.25 an acre, as other settlers are charged, and where they have been so charged they shall have the money returned—that is, the excess over and above $1.25 an acre. This is simply to put those settlers on a par with all other homestead settlers who, outside of railroad limits, never pay more than $1.25 an acre for Government land.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator, under the land laws, what actually happens when a projected railroad forfeits its right to build and to receive Government lands?

Mr. NELSON. The lands are placed back exactly where they had been before the railroad land grant had been made.

Mr. HALE. Have there been many cases where that has been done without legal controversy?

Mr. NELSON. Not many cases—I do not know just how many—but there have been cases where parts of land grants have been forfeited. We passed an act some years ago forfeiting certain portions of the land grants out on the Pacific coast; and there have been cases where no railroad has been actually built.

Mr. HALE. And the grant abandoned?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; the grant abandoned. The refunds under the bill are strictly limited to those cases.

I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the very theory on which the price of land within railroad grants was fixed at $2.50 an acre, instead of $1.25, was that, being within railroad limits, the settlers, being within 10 or 20 miles, as the case might be, of a railroad, got the benefit of the proximity of the railroad, and hence they were to pay a double price for the land.

Mr. HALE. The proximity of the railroad enhances the value of the land?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; but when it has turned out that a portion of the railroad land grant has been forfeited, or the railroad has been abandoned and not built, it is not right that settlers on such lands should pay more than settlers elsewhere.

Mr. HALE. Is the Senator very sure that the bill is so limited that it only applies to such cases?

Mr. NELSON. Exactly. The bill was amended purposely to meet such cases, and it is strictly limited and guarded.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, on page 2, line 10, after the words "General Land Office," to insert "or adjudged invalid by the final decision of a court;" in line 18, after the word "made," to insert the word "and;" in the same line, after the word "which" where it occurs the second time, to insert "portion;" in line 23, after the word "any," to strike out "money under this act," and insert "such excess payment;" on page 3, line 4, after the word "That," to strike out:

Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to affect any land lying within the primary limits of any railroad land grant where the road to which said grant was made has been constructed.

And to insert:

The provisions of this act as to excess payment shall not apply to any land within the primary or granted limits of any railroad land grant, or part thereof, where the railroad for which said grant was made has actually been constructed adjacent to and coterminous with such land.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands," approved June 16, 1880, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That in all cases where homestead or timber-culture or desert-land entries or other entries of public lands have heretofore or shall hereafter be canceled or relinquished on account of conflict, or where, from any cause, the entry has been erroneously allowed and can not be confirmed, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be repaid to the person who made such entry, or to his legal representatives, the fees and commissions, amount of purchase money, and excesses paid upon the same, upon the surrender of the duplicate receipt and the execution of a proper relinquishment of all claims to said land, whenever such entry shall have been duly canceled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office or adjudged invalid by the final decision of a court; and in all cases where parties, as preemptions or homestead claimants, have paid double-minimum price for land which has afterwards been found not to be within the limits of a railroad land grant, or which is within the limits of any portion of a grant which has been heretofore or which shall hereafter be forfeited by reason of any failure upon the part of the grantee to construct that portion of the railroad in aid of which such grant was made, and which portion is adjacent to and coterminous with such lands, the excess of $1.25 per acre shall in like manner be repaid, but only to the entryman who made the excess payment, or to his executor or administrator for the benefit of the estate: Provided, That no claim for any such excess payment shall be allowed unless the same is duly made and presented to the Department of the Interior of the United States within the period of three years from the date when such claim shall accrue, or from the date of the approval of this act: And provided further, That the provisions of this act as to said excess payment shall not apply to any land within the primary or granted limits of any railroad land grant, or part thereof, where the railroad for which said grant was made has actually been constructed adjacent to and coterminous with such land."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHIPPEWA INDIAN LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

The bill (S. 4284) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians, in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1899, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, in section 2, on page 4, line 21, after the word "best," to strike out "permit" and insert "require;" on page 5, line 12, before the word "prior," to insert "at least six months;" in line 19, after the word "timber," to strike out "at public auction" and insert "on sealed bids;" in line 21, after the word "bids," to insert "A second notice of such sale shall be published in the newspapers above named for four weeks;" and in line 23, before the word "notices," to insert the word "last;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That section 5 of said act be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That whenever, and as often as the survey, examination, and lists of 100,000 acres of said pine lands or of a less quantity, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, have been made and approved, the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to sell, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and at such times and places, and in such tracts, parcels, or districts as he may deem proper, upon sealed bids, with the right to reject any and all bids, on stumpage to be scaled under Scribner's rules in the log after being cut, all the merchantable pine timber, whether the same be green or dead, standing or fallen, now on such pine lands, with the exception of 5 per centum of said timber on certain reservations as hereinafter provided, to be paid for when the timber is cut, banked, and scaled in the manner herein provided for: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to require with each and every bid such deposit in cash as he may deem proper, and said deposit shall be returned to each bidder whose bid is rejected: Provided further, That said timber shall not be sold at a price less than $5 per 1,000 feet board measure: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may increase said minimum price on portions of said timber as he may deem just and proper: Provided further, That said Secretary may, if he shall deem it best, require the purchaser of the timber on any tract or district to erect a mill of a capacity of not less than 20,000 feet board measure of lumber per day of ten hours, and to manufacture thereat the timber on said tract or district, said mill to be located on said tract or district, or at such place in the immediate vicinity as may be designated by said Secretary; and the said Secretary is authorized to lease to such purchaser not exceeding 320 acres of land for mill purposes, at an annual rental to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, for a renewable term not exceeding ten years, said term to end, in any event, so soon as the timber purchased shall have been sawed and removed, said lease of land to be exclusive of the timber thereon, which timber shall be disposed of as herein provided for other timber: And provided further, That at least six months prior to any sale the Secretary of the Interior shall cause notices of said sale to be inserted once in each week, for four successive weeks, in one newspaper of general circulation, published in Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, and Crookston, Minn.; Chicago, Ill.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Detroit, Mich.; Philadelphia and Williamsport, Pa.; Boston, Mass., and St. Louis, Mo., of the sale of said timber on sealed bids to the highest bidder, with the right to reject any and all bids. A second notice of such sale shall be published in the newspapers above named for four weeks, the last publication of said last notices to be at least thirty days prior to said sale, said notices to state the time and place and the terms of such sale, and to contain a general description," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to amend the bill. In section 2, on page 7, line 3, after the word "settlement," I move to insert "and from the operation of this act;" in line 8 to strike out the word "and," before the words "in addition," and insert a period; then, after the word "addition," to insert "to the lands heretofore designated as forestry lands there may be selected," and then to strike out the word "thereto" where it occurs in the eighth line after the word "addition."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, on page 7, line 3, after the word "settlement," it is proposed to insert "and from the operation of this act;" in line 8, after the word "acres," to strike out the word "and;" in the same line, after the word "acres," to insert a period, and in the same line, after the word "addition," to strike out "thereto" and insert "to the lands heretofore designated as forestry lands there may be selected."

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, let the language be read as it will stand if the amendment be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clause will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided further, That there shall be reserved from sale or settlement and from the operation of this act the timber and land on the islands in Cass Lake and in Leech Lake and not to exceed 160 acres at the extremity of Sugar Point, on Leech Lake, and the peninsula known as Pine Point, on which the new Leech Lake Agency is now located, which peninsula approximates 7,000 acres. In addition to the lands heretofore designated as forestry lands, there may be selected not to exceed 10 sections in area on said reservations last aforesaid, to be selected by the forester of the Department of Agriculture, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, this is a very important bill, and it seems to have been very carefully drawn. I think, however, in view of its importance, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] who reported the bill should give a brief statement of the effect of it when it shall become a law.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, the first feature of this bill which is entitled to attention is the repeal of the so-called "dead-and-down act," under which certain scandals have arisen and under which it is claimed that the Indians have been defrauded out of many thousands of dollars. That is repealed. In the next place, the effort of this bill is to secure for the last remaining great body of pine east of the Rocky Mountains—in behalf of the Indians, of course—the very best price that can be obtained.

The leading feature of the bill in that regard is the provision which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior—indeed, requires him—before selling any portion of the pine timber to give notice of six months through the leading newspapers of this country of the fact that six months hence he will offer for sale on sealed bids such quantities as he may select of this body of pine.

The bill also provides that within thirty days of the expiration of that period of six months another similar notice through the medium of these newspapers shall again be given. The object, of course, of that provision, as every Senator will see, is, first, to give the lumbermen of other States than the State of Minnesota ample time to come in and examine this pine timber and find out how much timber there is on each section of land; so the lumbermen from the State of my honorable friend the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will have ample time to go and familiarize themselves with the value of the pine in each particular section of this great body of timber. Then before the sale takes place this second notice is given. Therefore, there can be no claim that the lumbermen of all the States have not been apprised of the fact that this sale is to take place.

Now, the committee have changed the bill in one respect. As originally drawn, it provided for an auction sale. We have thought it better to have the sale proceed along the line of sealed bids, so that the Iowa lumbermen, for instance, who have examined the pine may come in intelligently and make their sealed bids, accompanied with so much cash as may be required and with such a bond as the Secretary of the Interior may think fit to exact to carry out the obligations.

Then, to the Secretary is reserved the right to reject any or all bids. So we are protected in that way from any possible combination among the bidders. Whenever the Secretary has determined which of these bids is the most advantageous, he then proceeds to make a contract; and of course I need not follow the process any further than that.

In regard to scaling, the theory of this bill is that not a log shall be taken off from any reservation until it has been paid for. It is scaled by the process known as the bank scale, and the Government employs the scalers, and the bidder must pay the cash before he takes the logs away at all.

Another feature of the bill, which we regard as important, directs the Secretary of the Interior to demand and to require that the purchaser shall saw the logs on the reservation and give the Indians an opportunity to be employed in every process of that work so far as they may. A sawmill is in a sense a civilizer when taken on one of these reservations, and we regard that as one of the important features of the bill.

The Interior Department, I will say, has conferred carefully in regard to the bill and is thoroughly in accord with the scheme of the committee. I need not mention, probably, the forestry feature of the bill, because the casual reading of it would suggest that feature to anyone.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LABELING OF CHAMPAGNE.

The bill (S. 1347) for the proper labeling of wine purporting to be champagne was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

REPEAL OF WAR-REVENUE TAXATION.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10530) to repeal war-revenue taxation, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 12 and 19.

NELSON W. ALDRICH,
W. B. ALLISON,
G. G. VEST,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

SERENO E. PAYNE,
JOHN DALZELL,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I regret very much that the conference committee has agreed to take the action recommended in this report. I believe that the tax ought to remain on bucket shops, and I should be glad to have it extended so as to include all other transactions of the same kind. I have some telegrams from people at home urging me to vote for this proposition. One comes from Conway, in my State, and reads:

MARCH 31, 1902.

We respectfully request you to vote to repeal the war tax on all grain and stock trade transactions whenever executed on or off an exchange by any broker. To remove it from board of trade and stock exchanges and not from individual brokers gives them a monopoly of this business. This means that every cotton transaction must be done in New York or New Orleans, and will work a great hardship on the people of this section, as it will drive the nonexchange brokers out of business and deprive the smaller towns of the market reports, which under the present system they have, and which is of great benefit to them. Knowing your antipathy to monopoly, we feel confident you will vote to repeal the war tax in its entirety, to treat all alike.

A similar telegram, coming from Morrillton, is as follows:

We respectfully request you to vote to repeal the war tax on all grain and stock transactions whenever executed on or off an exchange by any broker. To remove it from board of trade and stock exchanges and not from individual brokers gives them a monopoly of this business. This means that every cotton transaction must be done in New York or New Orleans—will work a great hardship on the people of this section, as it will drive nonexchange brokers out of business and deprive the smaller towns of the market reports, which under the present system they have, and which is of great benefit to them. Knowing your antipathy to monopoly, we feel confident you will vote to repeal the war tax in its entirety, treating all alike.

Mr. President, I believe that this business ought to be taxed, and I should like to see a very heavy rate of taxation applied to all alike. In the bill as it is now there is a provision levying taxes on these smaller bucket-shop transactions. I believe that tax ought to be maintained, and I am not willing to vote to repeal taxes of that sort when there are taxes kept on any reputable or fair business anywhere else in the country. It seems to me to be wrong in every respect. I am utterly opposed to it. While these citizens of my State have been sending such telegrams (and they were doubtless suggested to them by telegraph, for they are the same almost from each town, and that fact indicates that there is an organized movement in favor of freeing bucket shops from the burden they now carry in the Government tax), I am utterly and positively opposed to it.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I am opposed to all these transactions, that are really gambling transactions in disguise. They are said to be gambling transactions in which the elders may engage without losing their church relation. But a government ought to deal with its citizens fairly. If this had been a bill to tax all transactions of this kind, I could have seen no reasonable objection to it—none at all—but we ought not to pick out a part of a class of men, although we may call them all gamblers, and put a tax on them and let all the remainder of the family go free. I understand the Senate conferees have receded from the amendment which they put on the bill as it came from the House. I do not want to be understood as favoring these unlawful institutions that gamble under the form of a contract prescribed by law. That is really what they are doing. The Supreme Court has held, as you all know, that if both parties agree to take the article at the day appointed, at the price named, that is not gambling at all; provided they did not intend it as a mere form in which to bet on the price of the article, and that if a man claims that it is an unlawful transaction, he has to prove, not that he intended, but that both parties intended not to take the article bargained for. If they both intended not to take it, then it was not a lawful transaction.

But in order to avoid it, the man who objects to the contract as being illegal must establish that both parties intended it to be settled on the basis of the price of the article at the time it was contracted to be delivered. That is a sort of proof which under the New York Cotton Exchange regulations can never be adduced, and although every man, woman, and child connected with the whole business knew that it was a gambling transaction, yet you could not prove it, because you could not get into the other fellow's mind and prove what he intended to do. They all settle the contracts at the prevailing price when the time comes; nobody questions that that is what they intend to do, but when you come to prove it you can not do it.

Mr. President, my opinion is that legislators ought not to single out a particular class of a set of men all transacting exactly the same sort of business, and tax one and leave the other untaxed. I should not object to taxing both of them, but I do think it is wrong for legislators to engage in this partiality in making the law.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, this is not a proposition to impose a tax, I will say to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]. It is a proposition to remove a tax which is now in existence. The bucket shops were taxed for a legitimate purpose, to raise revenue during the time when we were raising revenue and legislating to raise money for the Spanish war. It is a tax on them today. If the conference report be agreed to it will remove the tax from the bucket shops.

Now, it seems to me to vote to take off that tax and leave taxes on so many articles far more deserving of consideration than this is would be unjust. The same bill levies a tax on tobacco. I would much rather vote to remove the tax upon tobacco than to remove it from bucket shops; and I will say, in answer to the Senator from Alabama, that I would be opposed to making this discrimination.

He says, however, that the bill proposes to remove the tax from the larger transactions on boards of exchange. I am opposed to removing that also, but the committee will doubtless say that that was in another section and has passed both Houses and is beyond the reach of the conference committee. Then it ought not to have been so. The tax ought to have been taken off of neither. If it had been taken off of one where it should not be taken off, I do not think that is any reason why it should be taken off the rest of it. This tax is a legitimate tax, put there for a legitimate purpose; and if the Senate votes to agree to the conference report it will remove that tax from the bucket shops. The bucket shops, as we all know, in many little towns throughout the country are regular gambling shops, and the worst character of gambling shops in many places. And yet many Senators, not the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who came in but a few days ago and voted to impose a tax on a legitimate industry in order to crush it out, now turn around and propose to remove a tax from this illegitimate business where it now exists. That is the case as it presents itself to my mind, and I hope the Senate will not agree to the report, but will insist on keeping this tax on the bucket shops.

Mr. PETTUS. I wish to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question. Does not the Senator know that this bill repeals all the war taxes of every kind and restores the tax—

Mr. BERRY. Not restores it. I object to the word. It proposed to retain the tax on bucket shops.

Mr. PETTUS. The bill in its present form, as it now comes to the Senate from the conference committee, I understand, repeals every war tax but—

Mr. BERRY. It does not repeal this one.

Mr. PETTUS. Yes; as it now stands.

Mr. BERRY. As I understand it, the bill as it came from the House repealed all war taxes. The Senate agreed to the House bill with the exception that they did not agree to take the tax off of bucket shops. It refused to agree to that provision. The bill went to conference. The House refused to recede from its disagreement. The Senate now comes in, and the proposition of the report is for the Senate to recede from its amendment. The Senate refused, when it passed the bill, to take off the tax which now exists under the law. Now, the conferees come in and ask the Senate to agree to take it off. That is the situation exactly.

Mr. PETTUS. I want to state to the Senator that this bill does repeal all war taxes of every kind—

Mr. BERRY. Except this.

Mr. PETTUS. If you agree to the conference report, it repeals all war taxes of every kind.

Mr. BERRY. That is correct.

Mr. PETTUS. And the objection I am making to the bill is that you ought not to pick out a particular division of a particular class and tax them and leave all the war taxes as they were before on another class. It is class legislation. It is worse than that even. It is legislation with respect to a particular part of a particular class, because our information, whether we know it or not, is that all of these great exchanges, as they call them, are engaged in exactly the same character of business in every respect.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, only a word about the class legislation. I think I may say it is class legislation, according to the Senator from Alabama, to take off the tax on bucket shops and leave it on manufactured tobacco. This bill provides a tax on manufactured tobacco.

Mr. PETTUS. It changes it back to what it was before we put on the war tax.

Mr. BERRY. Certainly. I would much rather remove that than to remove the tax from bucket shops. It is not a proposition to tax an illegitimate transaction, because the tax which was put on there was put on for revenue, for a legitimate purpose, and is in the law to-day.

With thousands of other articles taxed all over the country, necessities of life, to come in and take this one off and leave the tax standing on hundreds of others, matters which are legitimate, I think is bad legislation, and why Senators who voted but a few days ago to put a tax on oleomargarine (and they admitted that it was not done for purposes of revenue, but to crush out the industry) should come in now and ask the Senate to take off a tax which has already been placed and is by law imposed on these illegitimate gambling concerns I can not understand.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, it seems to me the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] is arguing against his position on the oleomargarine bill, because he contended in that case that it was a tax intended to destroy a legitimate industry in the interest of another legitimate industry, and now he contends that you ought to leave the tax on part of these gambling concerns, but not put it on all.

Mr. BERRY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I say it ought to be left on all; and I never said anything to the contrary.

Mr. TILLMAN. But it is not to be left on all of them.

Mr. BERRY. I say so far as my vote goes it should be; and in addition to that, this tax was not put on for the purpose of crushing out anything. This was put on for the purpose of raising revenue. It was put on legitimately, and is a legitimate tax. Now, the proposition is to pick out this peculiarly objectionable business and take the tax off of the bucket shop, while leaving the tax stand on hundreds of other articles from which it ought to be removed. That is my position.

Mr. TILLMAN. If I understand the condition, it is this: The Senator would like to see a tax on all agencies for speculation which sell futures and the like of that? Do I understand him correctly?

Mr. BERRY. If there were a tax on any such proposition I never would vote to remove it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know the Senator would not, and I believe he would agree with me that it would be a proper thing, because it would tax out of existence, if possible, these gambling concerns which affect the price of cotton and wheat and other commodities by selling millions of bales of cotton on future contracts.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator so believes, I do not see how he can vote to take off the tax which was put on this peculiarly illegitimate transaction.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does not the cotton exchange in New York sell futures every day?

Mr. BERRY. I guess it does.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is there any tax on that?

Mr. BERRY. There will be a tax until this bill passes.

Mr. TILLMAN. On that?

Mr. BERRY. I understand the tax under the present law applies to all transactions except where the article is actually delivered.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the chairman of the committee inform us just what the result of this report will be?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the contention of the House conferees, if I may be permitted to say what took place in the conference committee, as I believe I am, was that the effect of this measure as it passed the Senate would be to tax transactions which do not take place on boards of trade and exchanges, but would tax all transactions which take place off such boards or exchanges; in other words, that it was a discrimination in favor of the large exchanges and the large dealers and against the small brokers.

Mr. TILLMAN. It would not, then, affect the cotton exchange or the wheat pit?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the contention of the House conferees, that the bill as it stands—

Mr. TILLMAN. What is the idea of the Senator himself?

Mr. ALDRICH. I prefer that the language should speak for itself. I am willing to admit that the provision as it passed the Senate is unfortunate, it being the original language used in the act of 1901, and does leave the question open to construction by the courts.

Mr. TILLMAN. Have not the exchanges been paying the tax? Have they ever contested it in the courts?

Mr. ALDRICH. They have been paying it under another section of the law, which was repealed by both Houses, and with which it was beyond the province of the conference committee to deal.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is already repealed?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is already repealed in this act by the action of both Houses, and it was not within the purview of the conference committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. So it does not make any difference what we do with this report, the big fish are untaxed; and the question is whether or not we shall retain the tax on the small ones?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the contention.

Mr. TILLMAN. It seems to me we should treat all alike.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the question is not presented by either of the Senators from Arkansas. Both Houses have acted upon this measure, which reduces taxes to the amount of $73,000,000. They are in accord except on the one item of the retention of this tax. The House conferees refused to agree to it, and the Senate conferees were obliged to submit to the action of the House, the Senate having put this amendment on a bill reducing taxes, a bill which, under the Constitution, it was within the power of the House to originate. I do not mean to say literally that we could not insist on the amendment, but I believe every member of the Senate will understand that we could not allow this bill to fail on account of the difference between the two Houses upon this question.

On the simple question of the merits of the controversy, there is another question involved, and that is as to the construction which might be put upon the third section as it is now retained, and as the Senate proposed to retain it in the bill. The third section was put into the law as a part of the general scheme of taxation. We are repealing all the other portions of it and leaving this to stand by itself, and the words about which there is contention are these: This provides that every transaction of a certain nature—

Mr. BACON. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. ALDRICH. From the eighth page of the revenue-reduction act of 1901. The language is not in the conference report. If the Senator will send to the Committee on Finance and get a copy of the revenue-reduction law of 1901, he will find on the eighth page the provisions which I am now discussing.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator please state again the designation of the document?

Mr. ALDRICH. The war-revenue-reduction act of 1901. That act provides:

3. From and after the 1st day of April, 1901, every person, association, copartnership, or corporation who or which shall in his, its, or their own behalf, or as agent, engage in the business of making or offering to make contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions respecting the purchase or sale, or purchase and sale, of any grain, provisions, raw or unmanufactured cotton, stock, bonds, or other securities wherein both parties thereto, or such person, association, copartnership, or corporation above named, contemplate or intend that such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions shall be or may be closed, adjusted, or settled according to or with reference to the public market quotations of prices made on any board of trade or exchange upon which the commodities or securities referred to in said contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions are dealt in—

And now comes the language in controversy—and without a bona fide transaction on such a board of trade or exchange.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me right there?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. The dispute is whether that includes the larger exchanges. Is that the question in contention?

Mr. ALDRICH. The question is whether a transaction which is in the nature of a sale or a purchase of futures without an understanding that the goods themselves were to be delivered might be made on a board of trade or exchange without taxation, but if made other than on a board of trade or exchange or by a member of a board of trade or exchange would be obliged to pay the taxes.

Mr. BERRY. Is the section the Senator is reading now the one the Senate proposed to retain?

Mr. ALDRICH. The very section.

Mr. BERRY. Then I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island why the conferees can not frame language to make it mean that the tax goes both on the smaller and the larger transactions. What reason is there why it can not be so framed that there will be no dispute and no contention about it?

Mr. ALDRICH. We offered to do that, but the conferees on the part of the House would not agree to it.

Mr. BERRY. The only reason is that the House conferees have not been willing to do it. Then this pretense here that we can not put it on and keep it on the larger transaction is not borne out by the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island. The only reason is that the House conferees are not willing to agree to it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator is a little forcible in his language about a pretense.

Mr. BERRY. I was not referring to the Senator from Rhode Island in the remark I made. I meant it in no offensive sense. It has been stated by several Senators here that we could not get it on the larger transactions. I did not intend any offense in the remark.

Mr. ALDRICH. The fact is that the second paragraph of Schedule A taxes transactions made on boards of trade and exchanges. That has been repealed in other parts of the bill by the action of both Houses, and it is beyond the power of the conference committee to act upon it.

Mr. BERRY. But it has been done in another part of the bill. It is in the same bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. It has been done in other parts of this bill.

Mr. BERRY. Does the Senator tell me that language could not be framed and put by the conference report into this provision in dispute so as to make it apply to the larger transactions as well as the smaller?

Mr. ALDRICH. With my understanding of the powers and duties of a conference committee, I should not think it would be within the power of the conference committee to put into the law a provision which had been repealed by the action of both Houses. That is not my understanding of what a conference report should undertake to do.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator has just said, if he will permit me, that the dispute was as to the meaning of those two words, as to whether they would or would not be held to apply to larger transactions, standing in this provision to the repeal of which the Senate had not agreed. Now, then, if that be true, why can it not be made certain in the conference report, in this particular provision, as to whether it does apply or not.

But aside from that, Mr. President, as I said before, I should be glad to have it remain on both. Because Congress has wrongfully taken it off of one where it ought to stay is no reason why it should take it off of another where it ought to stay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. ALLISON obtained the floor.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I simply wanted the Senator from Rhode Island to point out the words. I am unable to find them.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has the act and will show the words to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. I wish to ask the Senator this question: If I understood him correctly, the statement was that in the controversy between the two Houses it is contended that according to one construction it would be limited in its operation to the smaller establishments, but according to another construction it would embrace all. Now, it does seem to me that it is unnecessary, unless the Senator thinks that the former construction is undoubtedly the correct one, that we should act upon the assumption that it is limited.

Mr. ALDRICH. The conference committee are not presenting this report upon the merits of this particular section. We say that it is impossible to agree upon its insertion in this bill with the House of Representatives, and we therefore ask the Senate to recede from its action. The Senate conferees are for the provision.

Mr. BACON. The Senate conferees, as I understand, are for the provision upon the construction made by them that it would embrace all transactions of the character, whether they were upon the exchange or not.

Mr. ALDRICH. We were for this provision because we thought it was a proper tax to retain.

Mr. BACON. The Senator thought, I presume, it was a tax which would be general in its operation and effect on the larger establishments as well as the smaller.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is our understanding.

Mr. BACON. That is the theory, as I understand it, upon which the Senate has proceeded, that it was not one which would be partial in its operation.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am bound, however, to say to the Senator from Georgia that this view of the question was not presented in the Senate and it was not brought to the attention of members of the committee until the meeting of the conference committee.

Mr. BACON. If it were true as a conclusion beyond doubt that the effect of the provision as included in the amendment of the Senate would be to limit this tax to the smaller establishments and to relieve the larger establishments, there would be great force in the argument against the retention of the clause. But as I understand it there are two constructions to be put upon it, and the construction which is the more proper one for legislators, it seems to me, as to the general operation of the tax, was the one which the Senate considered to be the correct construction.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am bound to say to the Senator from Georgia that the House members of the conference were against it on either construction.

Mr. BACON. I understand that, and the Senate is for it upon the construction we put upon it. The House is against it even conceding our construction. Now, Mr. President, upon that issue I should certainly hope that the Senate would stand by the position which it occupied before, because it is the proper position.

Mr. President, I am not in favor of this tax because it may be in the opinion of some a righteous thing to destroy a certain business. The effect is not to destroy the business. But I am in favor of the tax because it represents a very large part of the business of the United States which, except under the present law, bears no scintilla of the burdens of this Government and ought to bear its share. If there is any business in the world that ought to bear its share, it is a business which draws for its resources so generally upon all parts of the country, although it may be located at a particular place. The vast flood of money which changes hands through the operations of business of this kind is a flood made up of millions of streamlets which flow from every village and hamlet in the country. And, Mr. President, it is a proper and a successful revenue-bearing subject of taxation.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Georgia contend that because it is a proper subject of taxation there can be no agreement between the two Houses?

Mr. BACON. Certainly not.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator contend that we must have the bill fail rather than submit to other people's judgment, or that this is not a matter of adjustment between the two Houses? The House accepted sixteen out of the eighteen amendments of the Senate to the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BACON. Pardon me; I want to reply to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to ask—

Mr. BACON. Let me reply and then I will yield to the Senator with great pleasure. The Senator asked me a question, to which, of course, there can be but one reply, as to whether I recognize that there can be no agreement between the two Houses. The Senator certainly does not expect me to answer that in but one way, and I have in mind but one possible answer to that question. But the fact that it is recognized, of course, that there must be an agreement between the two Houses or a bill will otherwise fail is no reason, if we stand upon firm and good ground, why we should abandon our position without a struggle to the utmost to maintain it. That is the only proposition I submit.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator a question, if he will yield.

Mr. BACON. With great pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator think, as a matter of sound constitutional proceeding, taking the relation of the two Houses to the matter of taxation provided by the Constitution, that the Senate ought to insist on retaining any tax which the representatives of the people think ought not to be retained?

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, I certainly can not admit that there is only one answer to that question, or, if I do, it would be the opposite of what the Senator's inquiry would seem to indicate was his opinion.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. I did not indicate an opinion. It is the old "paper-duty" question of England.

Mr. BACON. I understand that.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be pardoned, the Constitution says that the House must originate revenue bills of this kind. A bill of this kind is conceded in our practice to be within that constitutional provision, the idea being that the immediate representatives of the people, voting by numbers, should have a certain preponderating power in the matter of taxation, and that there never should be a tax on this people unless the House of Representatives has proposed to have a tax.

I agree that we can amend such bills as other bills and that there might be a case where we could perfectly, within our constitutional right, insist on retaining a tax which the people of the United States, as a people, want to be rid of, but I think it is a very dangerous ground to tread on, and that, ordinarily, when the people do not want to continue a tax and have said so through the House of Representatives the representatives of the States in the Senate, which may represent in political power here the minority of the people, ought not to insist on keeping that tax on. That is my point.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the Senator asked me a question and then presented his views in support of his side of it, which, of course, have the usual force of everything said by that distinguished and honorable Senator. It is with great reluctance that I ever differ from the Senator, and whenever I do upon a question, certainly of this kind, it very much shakes the confidence I would otherwise have in my own judgment.

As I understand the inquiry of the learned Senator, it is whether the Senate can with propriety (the Senator, I think, used the term "constitutional propriety," or words equivalent to that), in view of the constitutional relations of the House to the question of originating revenue, insist upon a retention of a tax which is opposed by the House?

Now, Mr. President, the provision of the Constitution is one which gives to the House of Representatives not the exclusive right to determine what shall be the subject-matter of taxation or what shall be the rate of taxation, but it gives to the House of Representatives simply the right of origination, and when it conferred upon the Senate the right to make amendments it certainly did not mean to limit to the Senate the right to make merely a suggestion, arbitrarily and finally to be accepted or rejected by the House as it in its judgment might think proper. But while the Constitution gives to the House of Representatives the right to originate, when it conferred upon the Senate the right to amend it went further than to confer upon the Senate the right to veto by objection; it went to the extent of conferring upon the Senate the power, after it had been placed within its jurisdiction, to amend not for the purpose of suggestion, as the inquiry of the learned Senator would seem to indicate, but for the purpose of having the judgment of the Senate enacted into law if in the usual orderly procedure it should be found that the Senate was right in its contention and if the Senate should admit it of sufficient importance to insist upon its contention and to stand its ground, if need be, to the extent of the defeat of a bill rather than to surrender a position which it deemed to be important.

The honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] calls my attention to a section of the Constitution which illustrates the correctness of the position which I have just taken in the very clause to which the learned Senator from Massachusetts pointed.

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; and the Senate may propose or concur with amendments—

Is that all?

Mr. HOAR. "As on other bills."

Mr. BACON. If it were all, the suggestion of the honorable Senator might be of more force than it is when we read the concluding clause—as on other bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2960) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all possessions and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside until the conference report can be finished. It can be finished in a very few minutes I suggest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will not insist on that course. This is a matter which may be quite familiar to him because he has been upon the conference committee and has had the opportunity, but our attention was not drawn to it until the reading of the conference report this morning. Some of us would like to have an opportunity to look into it a little. I think it a matter of very grave importance. It is a subject-matter of taxation, and it is an important source of revenue. I myself am extremely reluctant to see it surrendered. There will not be any very great injury to the public service in any way in giving us an opportunity to take it up when we can have more time for its proper consideration than we could have now. I am sure the Senator is mistaken in thinking it can be disposed of in a few minutes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was speaking from the standpoint of personal convenience. I am obliged to leave the city at 4 o'clock and will be absent several days, and it will be a matter of personal convenience to me if it can be disposed of. It seems to me there can be no constitutional question involved in it.

Mr. BACON. I do not think so either.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a question of procedure between the two Houses.

Mr. BACON. I do not think there is any constitutional question involved.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a question whether the Senate will insist upon a position in regard to this matter which I think in the end they will have to give up. I see no way out of it except to yield.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Rhode Island yield to me a moment for a question?

Mr. ALDRICH. Of course.

Mr. BERRY. The House conferees have never taken it to the House for a yea-and-nay vote. If the Senate will insist on its amendment by a yea-and-nay vote here to-day and refuse to agree to the report and thus compel the House conferees to take it to the House, I simply give it as my opinion that if it is brought to the House and fully understood and a yea-and-nay vote is taken, the House will agree and let this tax on bucket shops stand.

Mr. BACON. Only the tax on bucket shops?

Mr. BERRY. Well, the whole business, as we consider it and as the Senator himself considered it. He said that was his understanding, but now he says the House thinks another construction may be put upon it, and therefore they do not agree to it. Now, I believe that the tax is on both; it ought to be on both; and I am in favor of keeping it on both. It having been put there for revenue purposes, it ought to stay there, because it yields a revenue. Let the report go back to the House; let them take a yea-and-nay vote on the question.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I want to say in reply to the last proposition that I am very anxious to get off all the war taxes now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island

asks unanimous consent that the regular order of business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senator from Georgia to allow this discussion to go on for a while, and if it is prolonged indefinitely—

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will state it.

Mr. HOAR. Does it require unanimous consent? The conference report can instantly be called up after the regular order is laid before the Senate. It displaces it only temporarily, anyway. It does not require unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island asked unanimous consent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I thought it the best course to pursue, because I wanted to have the method adopted which would be agreeable to everyone. I did not suppose there would be any objection to it.

Mr. BACON. The Senator puts it to us as a matter of personal convenience to him. If it were a matter in which a delay of a few days would work any very great hardship, certainly there would be every disposition to consider the convenience of the Senator, but it can certainly come up again upon his return in a few days. It is not a matter of such urgency as to require that it shall be disposed of to-day.

I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator. This is not done captiously. This matter comes in to-day when we have had no opportunity for its examination. It is an extremely difficult matter, right in the progress of a debate, to weigh the language that has been read here and to see what its exact relation may be to the proposition which is involved. For instance, this conference report comes in this morning and the various provisions which are agreed to by the conference report are simply indicated by number. Until the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] in what he had to say disclosed the nature of the particular item, I had no idea what it was by number. I think in a matter of such gravity Senators ought to have an opportunity to see this measure in print and understand what it is.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Georgia is a most diligent member of the Senate, and he naturally inquires into all important subjects that are before the Senate. I think that is correct and right, and every Senator should do the same. But the Senator must recognize the fact that it is impossible always to delay every measure that is before the Senate until he can have a chance to investigate every part of it. That is almost without the limits of possibility.

I am not disposed at all to be unreasonable about this matter. I believe the Senator from Iowa, who sought the floor a few moments ago, can explain it satisfactorily to the Senator if he has an opportunity. There is but one amendment in controversy between the two Houses that is of any consequence whatever, and that is the amendment which is now under consideration.

There has been no other question before the committee, I will say, of importance except this, and the question simply is whether the Senate will recede from its action, the House having declined to yield. The merits of the controversy are, I think, not involved to a very great extent. I should be glad if we could go on with the consideration of the report for a while, with the view of seeing if the matter can not be satisfactorily explained to the Senator from Georgia and to the Senator from Arkansas, who also takes great interest in it.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, this matter has been in controversy some two or three weeks, has it not?

Mr. ALDRICH. It has.

Mr. BERRY. It has taken the House conferees three weeks to convince the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Iowa that this tax ought to be repealed. Those Senators have been insisting on what we have been insisting on now constantly in that conference for the last two or three weeks. Now they have come in and yielded. It does seem to me that the Senator from Georgia and others ought to have one day to have the report printed and see what the language means, and whether it includes both the large and the small establishments. It is not an unreasonable request that it shall go over for one day until it can be printed, and then Senators can be ready to vote intelligently upon it. I think the request is a reasonable one, and I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will not insist upon pressing it to a vote. A number of Senators are at work in the Commerce Committee on the river and harbor bill, and they are compelled to be there this afternoon. I hope that the report will go over.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the discussion can go on for a while I think Senators will be convinced that there is no reason for it to go over. I think the Senator from Arkansas himself will be convinced of that.

Mr. BERRY. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think if the discussion could go on for a little while the Senator himself will be convinced that it need not go over.

Mr. BERRY. No; I have to go to the Committee on Commerce to consider the river and harbor bill, and I have not time to wait to hear the discussion.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is, of course, a matter of great regret to the Senate that the Senator is obliged to be away, but I think if he could stay he would be convinced by the statement of the Senator from Iowa that it is a very simple matter.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I intended to ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the report. I may not be present when it is voted on, and I should like to ask now for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks that the vote on the report be taken by yeas and nays. Is there a second to the demand for the yeas and nays?

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator from Arkansas asks that when the vote is taken it be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. BERRY. Ordering the yeas and nays does not cut off debate under the rules. There is no rule of that kind. We can order the yeas and nays at any time.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BACON. I want to say to the Senator from Rhode Island that I desire the time to examine into this question to satisfy my own mind on one point, whether under the proper construction of it, or the construction which I may find to be, in my judgment, the proper construction, it will continue the tax upon all those engaged in this business.

Mr. ALLISON. It will not.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Wisconsin are of that opinion. I have the greatest confidence in their judgment, but at the same time I want an opportunity to look into it and I can not do so now. I want to see whether it will be partial in its operation or whether it will be general in its operation. I am opposed to any partial operation of the law. I want to see if it will be partial or general in its operation if the tax is retained.

Of course the fact that the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Wisconsin both indicate to me the fact that they think it will not be general predisposes me to think that it will not be general, but it is a matter of such importance that I should like to have the opportunity to look into it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Iowa a question before he begins?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask him whether it makes the slightest difference, in his judgment, in the result of this conference, whether we take one construction or the other.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think it does.

Mr. LODGE. Is not the question simply the plain one whether we are ready to lose the bill or not? Is not that about it?

Mr. ALLISON. Well, I can not quite say that.

Mr. LODGE. Does it not come pretty near to it?

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say, being a member of the conference on the part of the Senate, that I endeavored, as I believe every one of the conferees on the part of the Senate tried, to secure a concession on the part of the House for this amendment. In order to meet objections that they made from time to time we proposed various suggestions by way of amendment to this proposition if they would agree to it. First, we agreed to reduce this tax to one-half and make it 1 cent instead of 2. Secondly, we proposed to strike out a provision which they said was an unjust provision in view of the status of this amendment.

Now, we must ascertain, in order to construe this amendment, what the condition of legislation was when the provision was originally adopted. In the law of 1898, known as the war-revenue law, we placed a tax of 1 cent upon each $100 upon all sales or agreements to sell at any exchange or board of trade. The provision is found on page 12 of this pamphlet. It reads as follows:

Upon each sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell any products or merchandise at any exchange, or board of trade, or other similar place, either for present or future delivery, for each $100 in value of said sale or agreement of sale or agreement to sell, 1 cent—

Mr. BACON. What page is that?

Mr. ALLISON. It is on page 12 of the larger print of the law of 1898.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is the second clause of Schedule A.

or other similar place, either for present or future delivery, for each $100 in value of said sale or agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, 1 cent, and for each additional $100, or fractional part thereof, in excess of $100, 1 cent.

That was the provision inserted in the law of 1898. There was another provision, which I do not think is involved in this controversy, which placed a similar tax upon all sales of stocks or bonds upon the stock exchanges. That was the condition of legislation in 1898, and it continued so until the act of 1901 was passed, which repealed a portion of the taxes provided for in the law of 1898. In 1901 there was inserted in that repeal a provision which is found on page 8 of the pamphlet which the Senator from Georgia has, I think.

Mr. BACON. I have a copy of it.

Mr. ALLISON. By that act we taxed all transactions not on boards of exchange, but outside of boards of exchange, and we provided a tax of 2 cents upon each hundred dollars, thus discriminating in favor—if I may use that term—of transactions on boards of exchange. That tax may be regarded as somewhat punitive. It was intended to reach a class of people who conduct what are denominated in the law as bucket shops. Their business covers transactions which are regarded by some Senators, and especially by my friend from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], who has spoken upon this subject, as gambling transactions pure and simple, there being no intent or purpose either on the part of the seller to deliver or on the part of the buyer to receive the article sold.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. Do I understand the Senator to say that by the repeal of the act of 1901, or the modification of the original war-tax act, there was a change made so that the transactions on boards of trade and exchange are relieved from the taxation?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. I thought the Senator just said so.

Mr. ALLISON. No; I did not say so. I said that in the repealing act of 1901 there was inserted a new provision.

Mr. TILLMAN. Not repealing the original law, but merely enlarging it?

Mr. ALLISON. Not enlarging the old law, but establishing a new law for a new set of people.

Mr. TILLMAN. Who were not taxed under the original law?

Mr. ALLISON. Who were not taxed under the original law.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am just trying to get at the status of the thing.

Mr. ALLISON. They were not taxed under the law of 1898; in other words, the law of 1898 only taxed people who had transactions on boards of exchange, boards of trade, etc., where articles were bought and sold. This law doubled the tax then as respects buckets shops, which dealt in provisions, wheat, corn, etc., and made stringent provisions with reference to them, but not as to the exchanges.

In dealing with these people, clause No. 3 provided that in transactions where neither party contemplated delivery there should be a tax of 2 cents on each $100. Then there were certain limitations and exceptions.

I now wish to call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the phraseology in paragraph 3, on page 8 of the act of 1901. I shall read the whole of it. The clause provides:

Three. From and after the 1st day of April, 1901, every person, association, copartnership, or corporation who or which shall in his, its, or their own behalf, or as agent, engage in the business of making or offering to make contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions respecting the purchase or sale, or purchase and sale, of any grain, provisions, raw or unmanufactured cotton, stock, bonds, or other securities wherein both parties thereto, or such person, association, copartnership, or corporation above named, contemplate or intend that such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions shall be or may be closed, adjusted, or settled according to or with reference to the public market quotations of prices made on any board of trade or exchange upon which the commodities or securities referred to in said contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions are dealt in—

That was the first clause, where the parties contemplated that future contracts should be settled upon the price at some board of trade. That was to be the measure. If corn should go up 2 cents to-morrow on the board of trade in Chicago, that was the measure of settlement if the transaction was to end on to-morrow—and without a bona fide transaction on such board of trade or exchange.

That is to say, if all these contracts were made outside of any board of exchange or board of trade, then they were to be settled in this way. That is one transaction. If they were dealt in on a board of trade or exchange, this clause did not apply, but the other clause applied, to wit—the clause in the law of 1898—because we were taxing people outside of the boards of exchange and taxing people in those boards at a different rate, and as both parties—

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to get this matter straight in my head. It is somewhat tangled, because I have not had the opportunity to read the statute and hear the discussion of the subject.

Mr. ALLISON. It is my misfortune, no doubt, that I have not explained it clearly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is usually much clearer than almost any man in this Chamber, especially in regard to financial matters. His experience and knowledge of such matters are perfect. I want to know from his explanation whether I have properly caught the point or not. You enlarge or amend the original war-revenue act, which embraced only transactions on boards of trade, by including what are known as bucket shops, or irresponsible dealers, who set up gambling shops, you may call them—they are both gambling in my view—but the difference in the rate of taxation was, I think, 2 cents on small transactions outside boards of exchange and but 1 cent on boards of exchange or trade.

Mr. ALLISON. I mean to say that this clause, by special exemptions and provisions, does not apply to any transaction on any board of exchange or board of trade. The board of exchange or the board of trade is only resorted to as the public market place.

Mr. TILLMAN. As the yardstick to settle transactions?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; as the yardstick to settle transactions.

Mr. TILLMAN. But it does not relieve the transactions on boards of trade from the original tax of 1 cent on a hundred dollars as provided in the war-revenue act of 1898?

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator mean this clause?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. This clause does not relieve from that taxation, but the transactions on boards of trade are provided for in another section, which has been repealed by the action of both Houses.

Mr. TILLMAN. If I understand the situation, then, it is this: That we ourselves have agreed to repeal the provision which should make transactions on boards of trade taxable, and we are now only haggling—if that word may be used—as to the provisions of this section.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all.

Mr. TILLMAN. And this section does not include any transactions on a board of trade?

Mr. ALLISON. It does not. It includes no transaction on a board of trade.

Now, I want to come to the contention of the Senator from Georgia. One of the contentions of the House conferees was that we had discriminated against bucket shops, if I may use that phrase, not only by repealing the tax imposed upon transactions on boards of trade, but that we had allowed a certain set of people, if they made their transactions on a board of trade, to be absolutely exempted, whilst if they made their transactions outside of a board of trade they were taxed 2 cents on a hundred dollars.

Mr. TILLMAN. Right there I wish to say—

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator in a moment.

In other words, it was contended that we had not only exempted boards of trade from the tax, but that we had given the bucket-shop people a premium whereby they could go to a board of trade and transact their business and thus be relieved from paying any tax at all. That was one of the contentions of the House conferees. There was no pretense outside of either House that on any construction this clause would apply or could be made to apply to boards of exchange or boards of trade.

Another contention was—

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to say a word, if the Senator will allow me; but of course I will let him finish first, if he desires.

Mr. ALLISON. I will hear the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to ask the Senator if that point could not be determined by finding out from an internal-revenue collector whether or not the boards of trade had construed the act as the House conferees contended that it was meant to be construed, and whether they are not paying the tax, notwithstanding the act of 1901? In other words, has there been a cessation of the payment of the tax by boards of trade under this act?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then, boards of trade are, by their own action in paying this tax, not availing themselves of the House construction of the law.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator seems to misapprehend this bill. The bill now before us, and which is in conference, repeals the tax on all transactions on boards of trade and exchange. The House has so passed it, and we have agreed to it. Therefore, that question is not in conference, and by no construction can it be put into conference because nobody anywhere, so far as I know, contends that this third clause has any application whatever to the provisions contained in the law of 1898.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, will the Senator allow me one more question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. This whole section being in controversy, dealing as it does with the taxation of transactions in futures, we will call them, to come down to a general term which we all understand, is it not within the power of the conferees to amend that third section—the one in controversy—so as to put back the excepted boards of trade? As you are quarreling about the little fellows, could you not in conference put back the big ones?

Mr. ALLISON. I see no way by which that can be done by either the conferees or by the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. In my limited experience I have seen some conference reports come to this body with entirely extraneous matter that was never enacted by either House, that was never in controversy, and was absolutely new and strange to everybody.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not from this committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know from what particular committees they came, but they went through. I am not undertaking to have a conference report brought here contrary to our rules, or encouraging such things, because I stigmatized them at the time as being a swindle on the Senate to bring such conference reports here. I think the conferees ought to abide by the rules and not go outside of their legitimate powers.

Mr. ALLISON. The universal rule is, of course, that a conference only deals with the matters that are in controversy, and not with matters that have been agreed to by both Houses.

What I have stated was the first contention on the part of the House conferees. The next contention was that we had imposed a tax upon transactions in bucket shops, so called, which was prohibitory in its character, and I am sorry that my friend from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] is not here, in order that I might show him that I did my best to agree with him in respect to this contention, somewhat in accordance with my vote on the oleomargarine bill. Of course, the friends of that measure satisfied the Senate and, I hope, the country, that on that bill we were endeavoring to raise revenue, and incidentally to protect one great industry against a fraud which was being perpetrated upon it.

The House conferees, however, contended that we had inserted and insisted upon retaining a clause in the bill which in effect destroyed a business which was as legitimate as the business transacted by people on boards of trade. They adopted the suggestion of my friend from Alabama, and they either wanted to eliminate from this bill all such transactions, whether on boards of trade or elsewhere, or else they wanted to retain them all, which they had already agreed to do, and which members of the House contended should be retained.

That being the situation, Mr. President, the Senate conferees made almost every possible proposition to the House conferees which we could make without absolutely eliminating this provision. They, however, rejected all of our propositions and stated that the House was opposed to the retention of any portion of what was called the war-revenue taxes. We had some seven or eight meetings upon those matters before we finally agreed to recede from our amendment.

It may be that, if we reject the conference report, the House may recede; but I do not believe it will. If I had so believed I would not have signed this report, because I am in favor, and have been all the time in favor, of the retention of the tax upon bucket shops. That is the whole thing in a nut shell. There is no possible way by which we can deal on this bill with any other question than that which we are now considering.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I had the opportunity, while the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] was presenting his views to the Senate, of reading the provisions of the law of 1901, and if I may have the attention of the Senator from Iowa on that point, I think I can show that this section, if retained, will not have any other inequality of operation than that which is now in the law.

Mr. President, the act of 1898 imposed a certain tax on all transactions of this character wherever they occurred, whether upon the central board of exchange or in any bucket shop, or anywhere else; or whether they related to transactions in which there was to be a delivery of goods, or whether they related to transactions in which there was to be no delivery of goods, and which were purely gambling in their operations. I am simply stating a case.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator is stating the case as he understands it.

Mr. BACON. I have the law before me, which I am going to read to see whether I am right or not.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the construction which the Senator puts upon it had been the construction which the courts put upon the internal-revenue law there would have been no need to enact the act of 1901.

Mr. BACON. I will come to that question and see whether there was.

On page 7 of the act of 1901—I am speaking of the part which relates to transactions upon boards of trade, to be found on page 7 of the act of 1901—and that, I say now, relates to all transactions, whether upon the central board of trade or in any bucket shop, and without discrimination between transactions where the goods were to be delivered and transactions where the goods were not to be delivered. In all transactions of that kind the tax was 1 cent. Here is the language:

Upon each sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell any products or merchandise at any exchange, or board of trade, or other similar place, either for present or future delivery, for each $100 in value of said sale or agreement of sale or agreement to sell, 1 cent, and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 1 cent.

The point to which I want to ask the attention of Senators who differ with me about this construction of the law is this: This bill repeals that provision; both Houses have agreed to that, and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is eminently correct in his statement that that is beyond our control. We can not take back what we have done, nor can we agree with the House upon any modification of it, because the Houses have come to an agreement upon that, and that is not before the conference committee. I suggest that in order that I may not be misunderstood as to what I will say when I come to the discussion of a subsequent section, which is the one in controversy.

The section on page 8 is the one in controversy. That section is still with us, to insist upon it, to abandon it, or, by agreement of the conference committee, to modify it. I suppose Senators will undoubtedly agree to that, and that is the full extent of my contention. What does this section say?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is a limitation upon that modification. We certainly can not modify that paragraph so as to nullify the action of the Senate and of the House collectively upon other portions of this bill.

Mr. BACON. Of course not; undoubtedly; and I am going to make no such contention. I am going to limit myself exclusively to this particular paragraph and the provisions of it.

Before reading this particular paragraph, in order that what I say may be applied to it as I read it, I will state this particular paragraph is a part of the law as it stands, imposing an altogether different tax upon a certain class of transactions, to wit, transactions where there is to be no delivery of the goods. In other words, it is altogether independent of the section which I read before, which is found on page 2, and which related to legal as well as to illegal transactions.

There is a distinct difference between the two as to those which are denominated in the law illegal transactions; in other words, in transactions where there is to be no delivery of goods there is an imposition of a tax of 2 cents, and not 1 cent, as there was in the former provision.

I repeat, I thoroughly agree with Senators that the 1-cent tax is beyond our jurisdiction now and beyond the jurisdiction of the conference committee; but the question as to this particular provision, which was inserted in the act of 1901 to reach something that the old act did not reach, and that was transactions which were exclusively of this character, which the courts have generally denominated to be illegal transactions, gambling transactions, and in that case the law imposed a tax of 2 cents instead of 1 cent. Having imposed that tax of 2 cents on the two distinct classes of people or organizations which might be engaged in this business, the first was a comprehensive class, which possibly would include the other; but they made the distinction in order that they might certainly reach the other class. Now, what is that distinction? The first class relates to everybody who is engaged in that business, whether it is the board of trade or the stock exchange in New York or elsewhere. The section makes no exceptions. But here it is, on page 8, and I hope Senators, if they have the act before them, will follow the language as I read it:

From and after the 1st day of April, 1901, every person, association, copartnership, or corporation who or which shall in his, its, or their own behalf, or as agent, engage in the business of making or offering to make contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions respecting the purchase or sale, or purchase and sale, of any grain, provisions, raw or unmanufactured cotton, stock, bonds, or other securities wherein both parties thereto, or such person, association, copartnership, or corporation above named, contemplate or intend that such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions shall be or may be closed, adjusted, or settled according to or with reference to the public market quotations of prices made on any board of trade or exchange upon which the commodities or securities referred to in said contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions are dealt in, and without a bona fide transaction on such board of trade or exchange, or wherein both parties, or such person, association, copartnership, or corporation above named, shall contemplate or intend that such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions shall be or may be deemed closed or terminated when the public market quotations of prices made on such board of trade or exchange for the articles or securities named in such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions shall reach a certain figure—

Up to that point there is a complete description of one class of persons who shall be subject to the tax, and it embraces every board of exchange. The next four lines can be omitted without loss of sense to the paragraph, because it then refers to a different class; and after the word "figure," the sense would be completed by adding, beginning with the words "shall pay," in the third line from the bottom of the page—shall pay a stamp tax of 2 cents on each $100 in value or fraction thereof—

In other words, all those who are enumerated in the first part of that section up to and including the word "figure," in the sixth line from the bottom, constitute a class who are made liable for the payment of that tax; and then the law further goes on and says this, after the word "figure," enumerating now a distinct and separate class—and every person, association, copartnership, and corporation who or which shall in his or its own behalf or as agent conduct what is commonly known as a "bucket shop."

In other words, the lawmakers could have made two paragraphs of that. They could have made the first paragraph down to and including the word "figure," which, I think, is on the sixth line from the bottom of the page, and put after that what tax should be paid. They could then have made another paragraph and said:

Every person, association, etc., who shall conduct what is commonly known as a "bucket shop" shall also do the same thing.

There is one distinction, though. The Senator from Wisconsin asked me the very pertinent and proper question as to whether that is the only distinction. It is not the only distinction in the paragraph. In the case of all persons other than those who may conduct what may be denominated "bucket shops" the tax is 2 cents on simply the illegal transactions, to wit, those which are generally denominated by the courts to be gambling contracts, in which there is no expectation or intention that the goods shall be delivered, but where the parties shall settle according to the prices. As to all except bucket shops the 2 cents only applies to that class of transactions, but when it comes to bucket shops it does not make that exception, and it imposes a tax of 2 cents on every transaction in bucket shops, whether legal or illegal.

I think to that extent the law ought to be amended. It is within the power of the conference committee to amend it, because it only relates to that particular section and has no possible reference to the section above, upon which the two Houses have agreed. I think it ought to be in the case of bucket shops as it is in the case of the regular exchange, that this tax should be imposed only upon the illegal transactions. But I do not think it is possible that there can be any doubt about the construction which I have given to this language and that any court in the world would so construe; that as to all illegal transactions—and that was the object of the amended law—whether they occurred in bucket shops or in the regular boards or exchanges, as to all these transactions which have been designated by the courts illegal or gambling transactions there is the imposition of 2 cents, and there is the additional feature that as to bucket shops, whether legal or illegal, there shall also be imposed a tax of 2 cents.

The Senator from Rhode Island will certainly say that that is within the power of the conference committee, because it relates only to that particular section, and it does not relate to the section agreed upon. It is perfectly within the power of the Senate conferees now to say to the House conferees, "We favor the retention of the entire section. You favor the repeal of the entire section. We propose not that it shall be repealed, but that it shall be amended." That is within the power of the conference committee. The Senator will agree to that, I presume, will he not?

Mr. ALDRICH. We have tried—

Mr. BACON. I am not asking the Senator that. I am asking the Senator this question—and I will be glad for him to correct me if I am wrong: Where it is proposed by one House to repeal an entire section of a law and the other House refuses to repeal that section, and they go into conference upon that issue, is it not competent for the conference committee to say that it shall neither be repealed nor retained in its present shape, but that it shall be amended so and so?

Mr. ALDRICH. By a relevant amendment.

Mr. BACON. Of course; and the relevant amendment which I think ought to be here is this: As I have ventured to show, the section as it now stands imposes a tax of 2 cents on every hundred dollars of illegal transactions which occur upon the regular boards or exchanges, but it imposes a tax of 2 cents when those transactions are in bucket shops, whether they are legal or illegal. Now, the suggestion I make—

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. BACON. I will yield in one second. The suggestion I make is that the conferees ought to correct that inequality, and that is the only inequality there is in the law. It is an absolute, unmistakable thing, so far as my mind is capable of coming to a legitimate conclusion, that the law as it now stands in that section, with that single exception, applies equally to transactions on boards of trade, stock exchanges, and bucket shops. As to bucket shops, it makes the distinction that it applies not only to the illegal but to the legal transactions.

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair). To which Senator does the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. BACON. I promised to yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has been using the word "illegal" or "legal" in regard to various classes of transactions. I can not find it in the act. It says bona fide transaction, but I do not see "legal" or "illegal" anywhere here.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me, I will state in what way that may be identified. The words "illegal" or "gambling transactions" which I have used refer to the class of contracts which have fallen under the condemnation of the courts. The courts generally have decided that where a transaction is entered into between two parties for the sale of stocks, for instance, where there is no purpose on the part of the seller to deliver the stock and no purpose or expectation on the part of the buyer to receive the stock, but that the transactions shall be closed between them on the payment, by whichever party may be required under the circumstances, of such difference as shall be shown to exist at the close of the transaction in the quoted market price, it is an illegal contract; and those contracts, if the Senator will turn to page 8, are described—it is true with a great deal of language; I think with some redundancy of language—in paragraph No. 1, where the word "three" appears, down to the word "figure."

Mr. TILLMAN. I have been reading that and following the Senator while he was reading it, and I have followed him since he has been discussing it; and, accepting his own interpretation as to which class of these deals or trades is legal and which is illegal, it would be very difficult from the language itself to discriminate or differentiate.

Mr. BACON. I will read something for the benefit of the Senator. After enumerating the various kinds, in order that none may slip through the meshes of the net which it is intended to be cast over transactions of this character, the act provides as to this distinct class:

Or such person, association, copartnership, or corporation above named shall contemplate or intend that such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions shall be or may be deemed closed or terminated when the public market quotations of prices made on such board of trade or exchange for the articles or securities named in such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions shall reach a certain figure.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is a great deal of legal verbiage, intended to describe what we all know as futures.

Mr. BACON. Very well; and that is exactly what the courts say, that when it is not intended that there shall be a delivery by the seller or a receipt of the goods by the purchaser, it is simply one of the classes which are illegal, which constitute gambling contracts; and while the courts refuse to go behind them, the courts will not lend their aid to the enforcement of such contracts.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me a question? Look at the middle of the paragraph, from "three" down, and he will find:

And without a bona fide transaction on such board of trade or exchange.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. If that means anything, it means that boards of trade may sell for future delivery corn or wheat or cotton, with the intention that it must be delivered and paid for at the date, without regard to what it may be worth that day, and that they are not going to settle the difference. Now, a good many cotton mills in my country buy their cotton in that way rather than buy it and store it in the warehouses, running the risk of fire and having the expense of insurance and all that sort of thing. That would be what I would call a bona fide transaction. Is not that the situation? Does not this apply absolutely and solely to futures?

Mr. BACON. I think this language—and that was evidently the intention of the law, because, as suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island, it was to reach a certain class which was not reached properly by the law as it was theretofore—

Mr. TILLMAN. The preceding section—

Mr. BACON. The Senator will not let me answer the question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I had no desire to cut him off.

Mr. BACON. I was trying to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Transactions on boards of trade and chambers of commerce and exchanges are provided for by the act of 1898 specifically. By the amendment of 1901 we have two other classes provided for. One is the bucket shop proper, as it has come to be known, and the other is what you call the curbstone broker, and the curbstone broker is the first class described.

Mr. BACON. To what page does the Senator from Ohio refer?

Mr. FORAKER. Page 8. The provision, which the Senator has said is broad enough to apply to exchanges and boards of trade, because it applies to every kind of illegal transaction, is intended, as I understand, simply to meet such transactions as occur outside of boards of trade and exchanges and not in bucket shops.

There is in every city, as everyone knows, what is called a curbstone business. You may see it at any time in New York, where the curbstone brokers are at work transacting a great business there. Some of their transactions may be legitimate. Those are not intended to be taxed by this act at the rate of 2 cents a hundred; but those which are not legitimate, which are simply gambling in futures, as the Senator from South Carolina has said, which are transactions to be settled according to a figure that may be reached when the market quotation is received from the board of trade, are the ones to be taxed.

It seems to me if the Senator will bear that in mind there will not be any trouble at all about this. In the first place, we have the boards of trade and the exchanges provided for by the act of 1898, and it was never intended to increase the tax on transactions had in exchanges or boards of trade, but it was intended to reach the bucket shop and to reach this outside transaction by the amendment of 1901.

Mr. BACON. Let us see whether or not the Senator from Ohio is correct in that statement, because if he is it is a very pertinent suggestion. I do not think the language of the law will bear him out at all in his proposition that this particular provision on page 8 was intended to be limited to the curbstone broker and to the bucket shop and was not intended to reach any organization or association other than those. Here is the language:

From and after the 1st day of April, 1901, every person, association, copartnership—

That might be limited to curbstone brokers, because the curbstone broker might be a person or an association of persons or a copartnership; but it goes on to say—or corporation who or which shall in his, its, or their own behalf, or as agent, engage in the business of making or offering to make contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions respecting the purchase or sale, etc.

Are not all these boards of trade corporations?

Mr. FORAKER. They may all be doing business on boards of trade, but they may still do business outside. They may transact business as curbstone brokers.

Mr. ALDRICH. They are associations.

Mr. BACON. This uses the word "association." So if they are not corporations, but are associations, they are still within the net; and it seems to me the lawmakers intended to use not only comprehensive language, but to use language that should be so varied as to prevent escape, which there might be from general language. It does seem to me that the Senator from Ohio is mistaken, and that the purpose was this. The purpose was to draw a distinction between legal contracts and illegal contracts. I am speaking about those which are denominated by the courts to be illegal contracts.

The purpose of the law was to draw a distinction between the cases where the contract for future delivery was made in good faith, for the purpose of securing the property, in which case the tax was only 1 cent, and the other class, where there was no purpose to get the property, where there was no desire on the part of the man who bought to acquire property and no desire on the part of the man who sold to dispose of the property, but where it was a Simon-pure gambling transaction, in which men were practically betting whether certain stock would go up or go down; and as to them, regardless of who made them, whether made by an individual on the curbstone or an association, or whether they were made on a board of trade, which must be either an association or a corporation—that as to all those transactions, essentially differing from the legal transactions which were upheld by the courts, there should be not simply the tax of 1 cent, but there should be the tax of 2 cents.

Therefore I submit that this particular provision of the law which is in contention between the two Houses is not one which has been disposed of by the agreement of the two Houses for its repeal. It is one now in issue between the two Houses. It is one which, being in issue, can either be adopted by the conference committee in whole or can be amended as suggested and agreed to by the Senator from Rhode Island. Having had the opportunity to examine it, having come to a conclusion satisfactory to my mind, I have no disposition to delay it.

But I want to say this: I think, as I have said before, that it is an extremely important matter. I think this is an immense business concern—if I may use the term as applying to the whole of them; for of course there are a great many concerns—involving an immense amount of capital and drawing its resources from every nook and corner of this country. It is a business as to which the tax which now remains on the illegal part of it (by an agreement of the two Houses the tax has been removed from the legal part of it) is the only possible tax that this vast business can pay.

If the Senate maintains its position before the country it is simply this: So far as the legal transactions upon stock exchanges are concerned—bona fide transactions, in the language of this law—there shall be no tax, but when it comes to the illegal business, when it comes to the business upon which every court in the United States has put the seal of its condemnation, but which can not be broken up, and which, as it continues as a business, ought to pay a revenue to the Government, we will retain the tax. That is all. As to all transactions which are in the view of the courts legal transactions we remove the tax, but as to all transactions which the courts have condemned as illegal, which can not be enforced in the courts, but still which involve no offense against the moral law, if you please, the tax shall be continued, and not that new taxes shall be put on.

The suggestion which I should be glad to see followed by the conference committee is that the single discrimination in this section against legal transactions in bucket shops should be relieved. If that is done it is inconceivable to my mind—

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator's contention is that illegal transactions on boards of trade are subject to the tax of 2 cents.

Mr. BACON. When I say "illegal" I mean contracts which the courts will not enforce. The Senator understands what I mean.

Mr. FORAKER. That means any kind of transaction where it is not intended to make a delivery of the property.

Mr. BACON. Yes; those are the cases the courts have condemned.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator is aware that almost all of the transactions on the boards of trade in the country are illegal within that meaning?

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. FORAKER. That being true, and it having been established by the court, does it not have any weight with the Senator that although this law has been in force since April, 1901, nobody has ever sought to make a practical application of that construction? No such transaction, no transaction of that kind, on any board of trade in the country has ever been subjected to the 2-cent tax, but only to the 1-cent tax. Everybody being in harmony in the opinion that because boards of trade were provided for by the act of 1898 they were not included or intended to be included within the provisions of the amendatory act of 1901, but that that act was intended to apply just as it has been construed ever since the day when it was enacted—to apply only to bucket shops, which are named, and to illegitimate transactions outside of boards of trade and outside of bucket shops, namely, the curbstone brokers, transactions that were illegal—does it not have any weight with the Senator that nobody has ever sought to give any such construction as that for which he has contended? If you undertake to give it such construction, practically every transaction on every board of trade and every exchange in this country would be subject to the 2-cent tax.

Mr. BACON. I do not know why such a construction should not be sought to be made. I think it is the plain letter of it, and the framers of the act of 1901—

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, the question is whether or not it is the plain letter. The Senator seems to think it is the plain letter, but others of us think the plain letter of it is the other way, because boards of trade and exchanges are provided for specifically in the act of 1898, and it was not intended in this general provision to have any reference to them. It seems to me the plain letter of it is according to our contention, and it does seem to me it ought to have controlling weight with the Senator from Georgia, when others think the plain letter is that way, that the courts and everybody else seem to have agreed with us; at least, it does not seem ever to have occurred to anybody that the law of 1901 was applicable to illegal transactions on chambers of commerce and boards of trade.

Mr. BACON. If it be true that all of them are illegal transactions, and when I say that I do not use the word offensively—

Mr. FORAKER. I do not mean that. I do not say that.

Mr. BACON. Well, nine-tenths of them.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I expect so.

Mr. BACON. Nine-tenths. If that be true, there is more reason why the tax should be retained. There certainly has never been any decision of any court that I have ever seen, although it may be that it has escaped me, which holds—

Mr. FORAKER. That raises a question of policy. We have been talking about a question of construction—

Mr. BACON. I understand that.

Mr. FORAKER. And the question as to what is meant by this language I call the Senator's attention to how it has been construed in the practical application that has been made of it, and if we are to raise the question of policy the Senator will agree that the provision found in the act of 1898 is beyond consideration, both Houses having agreed to its repeal.

Mr. BACON. There is no doubt about that, none whatever. The Senator takes that position and he used the word "court." No court has ever decided, so far as I have known, that this does not apply to boards of trade, and why should it be that these transactions, which are condemned by the courts as illegal to the extent that the process of the court can not be used for their enforcement, should escape taxation on boards of trade and stock exchanges and not escape taxation when in bucket shops or on the curbstone?

I do not desire to continue this discussion, but I wish to say one word more. Senators say the question is whether or not this bill shall fail. Of course, I am very free to say that if it were a question as to whether the bill should fail, I would rather see this tax removed than to see the whole bill fail. While I think there are some other subjects of taxation in the war-revenue act which should have been retained, still the proposition for their repeal is one which meets with my approbation.

Now, I understand the House conferees have never taken this matter to the House, and there never has been any demonstration as to what the position of the House would be upon this subject. There never has been invoked the judgment of the House on the question whether or not, in view of the contention of the Senate—

Mr. ALDRICH arose.

Mr. BACON. Of course there was the original passage of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. The judgment of the House was invoked and it decided it by unanimous vote, on a roll call, of every Democrat and every Republican.

Mr. BACON. I understand that, and we all know how it was done, when the measure was brought in under a cast-iron rule by which it admitted of no amendment. That is what it was.

Mr. ALDRICH. There never was a suggestion of any amendment in the House to retain this provision. That was entirely initiated by the Finance Committee of the Senate.

Mr. BACON. That is all true; but being initiated by the Finance Committee of the Senate, and the Senate having passed the bill and said that in its judgment that provision should be there, I submit that before we retreat from that we should at least give the House the opportunity to say whether or not it agrees with the Senate, and it ought not to be limited simply to a conference of a few Senators and a few Representatives, constituting the conference committee, to say whether or not the decision which they reach shall be final, and that, without opportunity on the part of the House to pass upon it, the House must either accept the judgment of the conference committee or agree to the loss of the bill.

The proposition I wish to present—and it is all I have to say—is this: I can not conceive that the House of Representatives, if the proposition is presented to them that the Senate urges and insists upon this amendment, should return as an answer: "We will let this bill fail which repeals all of these war taxes rather than retain in the bill any tax upon this business condemned by the courts, the greatest of all drafts upon the resources of the country, a business of immense proportions and stupendous profits on the one side and corresponding losses on the other; rather than to see that taxed we will permit this bill to fail." I can not conceive that that should be the position of the House of Representatives. Therefore, Mr. President, I shall myself vote against the conference report, simply with the hope that the Senate will give to the House of Representatives—not merely to their conferees, but in their own Hall—the opportunity to say whether they agree to the retention of the tax upon this business.

Mr. TILLMAN. Before the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Ohio leave this subject entirely, I wish a little light, and these two headlights, I think, can illuminate a little the dark places in my mind. One used the word "illegal" and the other used the word "illegitimate," presumably meaning the same thing. To my mind they mean entirely different things. But I presume the construction they intend to put on them was—

Mr. BACON. Which did I use?

Mr. TILLMAN. "Illegal." I think you are right in that. "Illegitimate" is right, possibly, but a weaker word for this occasion.

Mr. FORAKER. I mean to say contracts contrary to public opinion, which the courts would not enforce.

Mr. TILLMAN. The point I want to ask about is this: This illegality resting on decisions of the courts that such contracts are not enforceable because of their illegality or from the fact that they are contrary to sound public policy or something—I do not know what the decision of the court was as to the reason—I want to know whether, if you tax these illegitimate or illegal transactions, you have not legalized them. Do you pretend to say you can come in here and tax a business, and thereby recognize it; that if you do not take steps to extirpate it, but simply recognize it and gather money from it, it is not legalized? That is a question for some of you lawyers to elucidate.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me. The transaction is termed illegal—

Mr. TILLMAN. By whom?

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me until I make my statement, if he pleases.

Mr. TILLMAN. By the court.

Mr. BACON. I will start over. The transaction of this character is denominated "illegal," not because it is prohibited by law—of course under such circumstances the criticism of the Senator would be eminently proper—but they are transactions of a class where, while not prohibited by law, the court will not lend its aid to enforce them. There is no law by which a man is punished by reason of having engaged in such a transaction, but the courts say they will leave the parties just where they find them. There is no prohibition on them. If there were, to tax them would be subject to very grave criticism, but it has always been recognized that transactions of this class have been illegal in that sense simply that the courts will not enforce them. Nevertheless they are legitimate subjects of taxation, and in taxing them we do not legalize them in a sense that we legalize the sale of liquor when it is taxed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Can the Senator give us an illustration of some other illegal or illegitimate business subject to taxation?

Mr. BACON. That one is so great and general and so widely known that it is sufficient without going to any other.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have been in favor and am in favor of retaining the tax imposed by the act of 1901 on transactions defined in subdivision 3, and the provisions in relation to bucket shops. I am not able to see, with great deference to my friend from Georgia [Mr. BACON], that as the act of 1901 was drawn there is any connection or relation between the provisions applied to the sales on boards of trade and exchanges and the provisions intended to apply in what is called the "bucket-shop section."

Upon each sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, any products or merchandise at any exchange or board of trade or other similar place—

The Senator said when he first arose "any other place." It does not say that nor does it mean that—

With a proviso requiring that there shall be a memorandum and certain detailed information and also with some punitive provisions. This applies to actual transactions.

Mr. BACON. Every kind?

Mr. SPOONER. Every kind, for present or future delivery. A man may sell through a broker at an exchange a million bushels of wheat. He may sell it for present delivery or he may sell it for future delivery. It is a transaction on a board of trade, an exchange, or a similar place—an actual transaction. It may be that between the customer and the broker it is understood that there shall be no actual delivery, but a settlement upon the basis of differences, and such a contract the court may not lend its aid to enforce, because it possesses the element of gambling; but just the same there has been an actual transaction on a board of trade or exchange.

The provision of section 3, which the Senator has read, applies only to bets. It applies only to transactions, as I understand it, between individuals where there has been no actual transaction on a board of trade or exchange. Whatever the contract may be between the broker and the customer, the actual sale or the actual purchase, on the exchange or the board of trade, fixes the price for the transaction. It is not so as to the transactions described here in the bucket-shop provisions.

Every person, association, copartnership, or corporation who or which shall in his, its, or their own behalf, or as agent, engage in the business of making or offering to make contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions respecting the purchase or sale, or purchase and sale, of any grain, provisions, raw or unmanufactured cotton, stock, bonds, or other securities wherein both parties thereto, or such person, association, copartnership, or corporation above named, contemplate or intend that such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions shall be or may be closed, adjusted, or settled according to or with reference to the public market quotations of prices—

Not on those sales or purchases, but by the record made of other sales and other purchases, with which they have nothing whatever to do—

made on any board of trade or exchange upon which the commodities or securities referred to in said contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions are dealt in, and without a bona fide transaction on such board of trade or exchange—

Mr. TILLMAN. How do you get around the word "such" if it does not apply to all?

Mr. SPOONER. The word "such" refers to the board of trade or exchange used in the two or three lines above—or settled according to or with reference to the public market quotations of prices made on any board of trade or exchange upon which the commodities or securities referred to in said contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions are dealt in.

By anybody and everybody except the parties to this particular transaction which the statute is intended to reach. But it excludes all cases where there has been an actual transaction on the board of trade and only applies to those cases where the settlement is made between the customer and the broker on the basis of quotations as shown by actual transactions on boards of trade.

This is really not much if any more than what the courts have held to be the definition of bucket-shop transactions—purely gambling transactions—a bet that at the end of a certain day the price of corn or the price of cotton on a certain exchange will be so much or so much. The parties to the transaction denounced here, or rather taxed, are not having any actual transactions themselves on any board of trade or exchange.

It is a pure bet, a pure gamble, and nothing else, as I look at it, and it does not apply at all to the same class of transactions which are taxed in the preceding section. When Congress repeals the preceding section and declares its purpose not any longer to impose the tax upon sales or agreements to sell actually made for present or future delivery on exchanges or boards of trade it can not be argued from any language which remains in subdivision 3 that a portion of the repealed section remains in force. If this section were left in the statute and the other section repealed, as it has been repealed, it would still for the purposes of construction be in the statute.

The court in ascertaining the true meaning or the intent of Congress in the language used in this subdivision 3 would not exclude from consideration the section that had existed and that had been repealed, applying to actual transactions for present and future delivery on boards of trade and exchanges.

Mr. President, answering the question of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], this act excluded the notion that so far as the States were concerned this tax was to validate the business as against the power of the State; to declare, as some States have done, bucket shops illegal, as they declared the selling of pools to be illegal, because the following language was inserted:

That the payment of any tax imposed by this paragraph shall not be held or construed to exempt any such person, association, copartnership, or corporation from any penalty or punishment provided by the laws of any State for carrying on such business, or the making of such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions within such State, or in any manner to authorize the commencement or continuance of such business or the making of any such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions contrary to the laws of such State, or in any place prohibited by municipal law.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HANSBROUGH in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The elaboration the Senator has just read there, that the act does not undertake to legalize or to interfere with the punitive statutes of a State, does not itself answer my question.

Mr. SPOONER. The Supreme Court decided on just such a case—that is, in the license-tax cases—that all that such a statute means is to impose the Federal tax upon the business or upon the object of taxation, not thereby licensing it as a business within a State, but as indicative that even if the business were carried on and paid the tax, the United States did not intend to put itself in the position of criminally prosecuting it as an unlawful business from the Federal standpoint.

Mr. TILLMAN. We have a much more flagrant lack of comity between the United States and the States in the matter of whisky. Some States prohibited the sale of whisky, and yet the United States grants licenses in those States to sell whisky—not a license, but it collects a tax and expressly says that it does not carry with it the legalizing of the traffic.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly. That was involved in the license-tax cases. But, while Congress imposes a tax upon liquor and a license tax upon the dealers in liquor, it is within the constitutional capacity of the State to entirely prohibit either the manufacture or sale of liquor within that State.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yet here you have—

Mr. SPOONER. If it is not manufactured or sold it can not be taxed. It is entirely competent for the State to take charge of the business itself, as it is done in the State of the Senator from South Carolina. But, Mr. President—

Mr. TILLMAN. I was just calling the Senator's attention to the fact, however, that the United States encourages the illicit sale in South Carolina, for instance, by issuing its receipts for the tax to whoever offers to pay, knowing that the State prohibits the sale except in a certain way by State officers. The National Government for the pittance of a few thousand dollars received in that way from this tax on retailers lends its assistance and encouragement to the illegal or the illegitimate dealers in whisky.

Mr. SPOONER. That is very interesting, but I suppose my friend will admit it has nothing whatever to do with the question which I am now discussing.

Now, Mr. President, one word further. The exchanges of the country, the chambers of commerce, boards of trade, are well established and thoroughly organized. The men who deal with those exchanges are admitted to membership. They have committees. They have rules which I think are mostly uniform throughout the country. They have the strongest inquisitorial power. They have the power to expel men who perpetrate frauds in violation of the rules upon customers.

The bucket shops and the curb brokers, as a rule, are not members of the exchanges. This has been the difficulty, being a mere bet on prices, unaccompanied by any actual transaction upon the exchanges, they are established with little capital, and they need little in carrying on such a business all over the United States. They are in the smaller places as well as in the large cities, and it has been the most insidious and the most destructive form of gambling. It has ruined, I venture to say, more clerks, caused them to become embezzlers, involved them in imprisonment and crime, than almost any other one thing.

I voted to put this tax upon the bucket shop. It requires every person engaged in that business to make it known to the authorities of the United States that they are engaged in the business, so that the person who is invited into their office knows whether he is going into the office of a person or a firm connected with one of the established boards of trade, or whether he is going into a mere pool shop or gambling house.

Mr. BACON. Does not the Senator think, in view of that, it is extremely important that the Senate should stand by the proposition to continue to tax them?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have desired, as I said at the beginning, that we should retain this tax. I believe it is a wholesome tax. I believe it is a well-justified tax, and I dislike extremely that the Congress shall repeal it.

Mr. BACON. Does not the Senator think it would be a good idea to let the House have an opportunity to say whether or not they will refuse to agree to the repeal of this tax? It has never had the opportunity so far.

Mr. SPOONER. I have the profoundest confidence in the Senators who are on this conference committee. They were in favor of retaining the tax in committee, if I may properly say that; and I have no doubt whatever that they have labored long and by every means in their power to secure its retention.

Mr. BACON. I do not doubt that at all.

Mr. SPOONER. I want it retained, but, Mr. President, when they state to the Senate that the House is irrevocably opposed to it—

Mr. TILLMAN. The House committee?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; the House committee. When they state to the Senate that it is useless to continue the fight in conference for it, I am not willing myself to jeopardize this bill, which vastly reduces taxation. I hate to vote for this report in the first instance, but the Senators say it will be unavailing to contend longer in the conference, and I shall vote for it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to state in one or two sentences only the proposition which I stated a little while ago, which the Senator from Georgia did not seem to apprehend.

The Constitution says that all revenue bills shall be first proposed in the House—in other words, that there shall not be a tax put upon the people unless the House think there should be a tax. It provides that such bills may be amended in the Senate, and also in order to avoid the construction of the British Parliament that you can only amend such bills by matters which relate to the same subject of taxation and not put in a new one, it adds for greater caution the phrase that the Senate may make amendments as in other bills. So the power of the Senate is absolute, unqualified, and unlimited over amendments to such bills.

But it was not intended that there should be a tax unless the representatives of the people wanted it and think that there should be one. If there should be one, we may concern ourselves about what may be the object.

The House proposed and we agreed to a war tax for a particular special occasion, which has passed; and now the House say they do not want that war tax any longer and it is time it should end. My proposition is that the question whether a tax under those circumstances should be continued ought to be settled by the House.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. I wish to make my statement before I am interrupted, and then I will listen to the Senator. I do not mean that we have not the constitutional power as a matter of mere blind power to hold on to a tax which the House want to abolish, but I do mean to say that the principle of the Constitution which requires the opinion of the House to favor such a tax requires us to pay the very greatest deference indeed to the opinion of the House that it should not continue.

Now, if you continue this war tax or any part of it you have an imposition which the representatives of the people submitted to for a special exigency put upon the people as a permanent method of raising money for ordinary public expenditures, and whenever a war tax is proposed hereafter under the exigency and danger of a great war the House of Representatives have to be told that they put their necks in a noose, and that they can not get rid of that tax for a thousand years unless the Senate consents, although the war has long gone by and the money is going to be appropriated for ordinary purposes.

Now, what is the result of that? This body, for whose rightful constitutional prerogative no man will stand longer than I do, as it was constituted by the Constitution, is so constituted that a majority may cast a vote at any particular time of less than a quarter of the American people, if I am not mistaken, certainly less than a third. Therefore, a quarter of the American people may hold on to a tax which three quarters, speaking by their representative body, the House, think ought not to continue any longer.

I say that is not only violative of the principle of the Constitution, of the theory on which the taxing power was committed in the Constitution, but it is an enormous danger to the Senate, already enough in danger from wild and foolish attempts to overthrow it. I say it is not sound constitutional policy, if the House of Representatives tell us that they made a war tax for three or four years, to have us stand up and say we do not care whether you want to repeal it or not it shall continue a century and you can not help yourselves. Is that a sound constitutional proposition or not? If it is, I am just justified in voting for this repeal.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the argument of the learned Senator would be an excellent one why it should be provided in the Constitution that a revenue bill should be determined at the other end of the Capitol, without coming here at all; but I can not, in deference to my friend from Rhode Island, pursue the subject in reply to the learned Senator or the equally learned Senator from Wisconsin, and therefore I shall not occupy the time of the Senate in attempting to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate agree to the conference report?

Mr. ALDRICH. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I do not know how he would vote if here, and so I refrain from voting.

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I do not see him present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I wish to inquire whether the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], with whom I am paired, has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair). The Chair is informed that the Senator from Idaho has not voted.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I withhold my vote.

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TURNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. As he is necessarily absent, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MALLORY (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire if the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. MALLORY. I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont, and I voted under the misapprehension that he was present. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. DOLLIVER (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire whether the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Being informed by the chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. ALDRICH] that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] is in favor of the adoption of the conference report, although I am paired with him generally, I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. DEPEW. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire whether the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Then I withdraw my vote, as I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Washington.

Mr. McMILLAN. As I announced a while ago, I have a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER]. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that we transfer our pairs, so that we shall both be at liberty to vote.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. That is agreeable to me, and under that arrangement I will allow my vote in the negative to stand.

Mr. McMILLAN. Under that arrangement I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—36.

Aldrich,	Dolliver,	Lodge,	Platt, N. Y.
Allison,	Dryden,	McMillan,	Quay,
Bard,	Fairbanks,	Millard,	Scott,

So the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2960) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all possessions and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to offer an amendment intended to be proposed to the pending bill, which I ask may be printed and lie upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be received, printed, and ordered to lie upon the table.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, as I shall have to be absent from the Senate, I ask unanimous consent to submit an amendment on page 10, line 25, before the word "Manila," by inserting the words "Malone, N. Y.; Rouses Point, N. Y." I understand the chairman of the committee agrees that I may offer the amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks leave to submit an amendment at this time to the pending bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEAN. What is the amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read at the place where it is to be inserted in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 25, before the word "Manila," it is proposed to insert "Malone, N. Y.; Rouses Point, N. Y."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I want to make a suggestion. I think it is not generally understood that only about one-third of the pending bill has been read; and it seems to me, for the better dispatch of business, the bill should be regularly read, the committee amendments disposed of as they are reached, and then the bill will be open to further amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I would suggest, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is prepared to address the Senate on this bill, that he proceed with his remarks, and then we can have the reading of the bill completed at the conclusion of his remarks, which, I understand, will be brief.

Mr. CULLOM. I stated on Saturday last that I desired to address the Senate this morning upon the pending bill. I should proceed now were it not that I should be compelled to leave the Senate before I had an opportunity to conclude my remarks. I therefore desire to say that I shall speak upon the bill to-morrow, if I can then get the opportunity, instead of to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of making a speech upon the pending bill, but to make a statement in explanation of the vote which I shall cast.

I shall vote for this bill, but I shall vote for it reluctantly. I shall vote for it reluctantly because I am not at all satisfied that the best interests of the country, considered as a whole, requires its passage. I shall vote for it reluctantly also because the cotton manufacturers of my State are appealing to Congress in protest against its enactment. Cotton manufacturing has grown to great proportions in my State. The men who are engaged in this work are among its best citizenship, and they are doing a great work in upbuilding that State, and I want by my votes here, as far as I can consistently and conscientiously, to encourage and promote this great industry.

Now, the cotton manufacturers of my State and the South have in recent years built up a valuable trade, which is rapidly increasing, with China, in the coarser grades of their products, and they believe, or at least fear, that if this bill is passed it will lead to retaliatory action on the part of China which will check, if it does not destroy, this trade. I do not believe the passage of the bill will lead to the retaliatory action which these manufacturers apprehend, although I must concede it may possibly have this effect. On account of this I shall vote for this measure, reluctantly, as I said before, because I dislike to cast a vote which may expose this trade to even possible danger.

But there is another appeal which has come to us which, for one, I find myself unable to resist. It is the appeal of the people of the Pacific coast. It is the people of that section of our country who have to deal with this Chinese question. For years they have been face to face with it, and they understand it in all of its phases. Those people come to us and they say that Chinese immigration and Chinese settlement upon the Pacific coast involves not only a political but a social question, and that the presence in any great numbers of Chinamen there threatens not only the peace and order and tranquillity of society but threatens their very civilization.

I can not understand, and the people of the South can not understand, the prejudice of the people of the Pacific coast toward the Chinaman both as a man and as a laborer. We do not share in it. There is no prejudice of that sort in my section. On the contrary, there are many in my State who would be glad to see the Chinese laborer come among them and supplement at least the very inefficient and unreliable farm labor that we have. While we do not understand the prejudice of the people of the Pacific coast toward the Chinaman, we know the fact that it exists and we believe there is foundation for it, and because we do so believe, and because the people of the Pacific coast are chiefly concerned in this matter, we are ready to join with them in any determination of this question which their long experience in dealing with it may suggest as being in the interest of the people of that section and as just and right.

Mr. President, we have a problem in the South also—a great social and political problem—with which we are struggling, and with which we have been struggling for the past thirty years. The people of the remainder of the country can not understand the attitude and feeling and the inexorable purpose of the South with reference to the negro question. They think that our attitude toward the negro is inspired by prejudice and hostility. That is a mistake. We have no prejudice and we have no hostility to the negro. Our attitude toward him is actuated solely by the desire to preserve our civilization and to promote the welfare of both races. If we are permitted in the South to deal with and to settle the negro question in our own way, without unnecessary interference from the balance of the country, we will settle it not only in the interest of the white man, but we will settle it in the interest of the negro, and we will settle it in the interest of the social, the intellectual, and the material progress, not only of the South, but of the whole country. If the North and the West and the East are determined to saddle and fix upon us obnoxious social conditions we will not in a spirit of retaliation seek to enforce against other sections similar and equally objectionable social conditions.

It has been said that the Southern people are a hot-headed people, a hard-headed people, and a stubborn people. We are a stubborn people in maintaining what we believe to be right; and we are a stubborn people in opposing what we believe to be wrong, but vindictiveness has no place in Southern character, and though smarting under a sense of injustice to ourselves, we are strong enough and broad enough to rise above the spirit of the vendetta and do what we believe to be right and just toward every other section of the country, though the same measure should not be meted out to us.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 20, on page 18, line 4, after the word "act," to strike out "or thereafter," the provisions of sections 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19 shall not apply (except as to retention of certificate as an evidence of status, by a person obtaining one thereunder), but in lieu thereof these," and insert the words "the following;" and in line 8, after the word "provisions," to strike out "designed to give him all freedom of movement compatible with the prevention of abuse of the privilege given to his class;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Sec. 20. That in the case of a Chinese person who, being a member of any of the classes mentioned in section 4, is lawfully in the United States at the time of the passage of this act, the following provisions shall govern:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 11, after the word "him," to strike out "readily, that he may be spared the annoyance of being confused with imposters seeking to abuse the privilege the United States reserves for good-faith members of certain classes;" in line 16, after the word "certificate," to insert "of registration;" in line 19, after the word "as," to insert "may be required by rules and regulations prescribed by;" in line 21, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" in line 22, after the word "Treasury," to strike out "may by rule prescribe;" on page 19, line 1, after the word "made," to strike out "at his expense and;" in the same line, after the word "by," to strike out "rules of" and insert "the rules and regulations prescribed by;" in line 3, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "acting under direction" and insert "with the approval;" and in line 4, after the word "Treasury," to strike out "which expense shall be the only charge to him in connection with such certificate;" so as to make the paragraph read:

First. To enable the United States to identify him he shall be entitled to have issued to him by the appropriate Treasury officer a certificate of registration setting forth his personal signature, his name, his personal description, his residence, his occupation and place of pursuing it, together with such details concerning it and such other matter as may be required by rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. This certificate shall be made in duplicate, and the copy shall be retained by the officer issuing the certificate. The original and the copy shall each contain the photograph of the applicant, made as required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 8, before the word "presumed," to strike out "rebuttably;" and in line 9, after the words "United States," to strike out the period and insert a comma and the words "but such presumption may be rebutted;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Persons entitled to such certificates who fail to obtain them shall be, in any proceeding inquiring into their status under this act, presumed to be laborers not entitled to remain within territory of the United States, but such presumption may be rebutted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 13, after the word "or," to strike out "a particular," and insert "any portion of the;" in line 14, after the word "he," to strike out "shall," and insert "may, if he so desire;" in line 16, after the word "district," to strike out "from which he wishes to depart, and," and insert "wherein he resides, at least one month prior to the time of his departure, such application to be accompanied by his certificate of registration, and in that event;" in line 19, after the word "make," to strike out "on oath," and insert "under oath;" in line 23, after the word "regulations," to strike out "from time to time;" in line 24, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "under direction," and insert "with the approval;" on page 20, line 1, after the word "penalties," to strike out "of" and insert "imposed by law for;" in line 2 after the word "perjury," to strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the word "and;" and in the same line, before the word "shall," to strike out "He," and insert "he;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Second. When any Chinese person who, being a member of any of the classes mentioned in section 4, desires to depart from the United States or any portion of the territory thereof, intending to return thereto, he may, if he so desire, apply to the appropriate Treasury officer in the district wherein he resides, at least one month prior to the time of his departure, such application to be accompanied by his certificate of registration, and in that event shall make under oath before said officer a full statement, in triplicate, descriptive of his professional, business, or other position or status, and shall furnish to said officer such proof of his status as shall be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and for any false swearing in relation thereto he shall incur the penalties imposed by law for perjury; and he shall permit the said officer to take a full description of his person, which description the said officer shall retain and mark with a number.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 6, after the word "applicant," to strike out "made at his expense and;" in line 8, before the word "prescribed," to strike out "in that regard" and insert "and regulations," and line 9, after the word "immigration," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval," so as to make the paragraph read:

The original and each copy of said statement shall contain the photograph of the applicant, made at the time and in the manner required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 10, to insert:

The original of said statement shall be retained by the Treasury officer before whom it is made, and the copies thereof shall be by him transmitted to the appropriate Treasury officer at the port whence the applicant intends to depart from the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 16, before the word "officer," to insert "last-named;" so as to read:

And if said last-named officer, after hearing the proofs and investigating all the circumstances of the case, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 24, after the word "was," to strike out "given" and insert "originally issued;" so as to make the paragraph read:

If the last-named certificate be transferred, it shall become void, and the person to whom it was originally issued shall forfeit his right to reside in, or return to, the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 4, after the word "or," to strike out "some particular" and insert "any portion of the;" in line 5, after the word "thereof," to strike out "as the case may be;" in line 7, after the word "port," to strike out "or place;" in line 8, after the word "for," to strike out "and this in addition to the showing called for by preceding provisions of this act;" in line 10, after the word "port," to strike out "or place;" and in line 11, after the word "departed," to insert:

But it shall be the right of any such person to elect to waive all of the provisions of the second and third subdivisions of this section, and for readmission into the United States or any portion of the territory thereof to depend upon the provisions of section 8 and provisions in pursuance thereof.

So as to make the paragraph read:

Third. To entitle any such Chinese person as is mentioned in this section to readmission to the United States or any portion of the territory thereof, he shall produce to the appropriate Treasury officer at the port of entry the return certificate in this section provided for, and he shall be permitted to reenter only at the port whence he departed. But it shall be the right of any such person to elect to waive all of the provisions of the second and third subdivisions of this section, and for readmission into the United States or any portion of the territory thereof to depend upon the provisions of section 8 and provisions in pursuance thereof.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to have this amendment explained. I do not catch its meaning. Indeed, it is very difficult to get the meaning of a good many of these amendments, but, as I understand, this applies—

Mr. MITCHELL. What page?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Page 21.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think I see that the provision applies to persons named in section 4, who are the exempt persons. It says if he chooses he may waive the provisions of the second and third sections of the act and depend upon the provisions of section 8. I do not understand it very well, and I wish that some one would explain it. I do not wish to delay the reading of the bill and action on these amendments, but certainly we ought to have the right, after the amendments are perfected, to propose amendments to them without being cut off by the rule that an amendment has once been adopted. I suppose a Senator would have a right to do that when the bill gets into the Senate. I do not wish to delay the Senate now, but sometime, certainly, I should like an explanation to be made of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the request of the Senator from Connecticut—that this section be passed over?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No; I did request that the reason for the amendment be explained, but as no one seems ready to do so at the present time the reading may proceed.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to suggest that nobody knows what this bill is, and nobody will know until the amendments are either adopted or rejected. It seems to me the best thing to do is to go on with the bill, have the bill amended as the committee wants it, unless somebody raises a question, and then let us have the bill reprinted and we can take it up and see what it is.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Unless we shall be cut off by the rule that amendments have been adopted that will satisfy me precisely, because I should like to have all of the amendments suggested by the committee adopted, if they wish them to be, and then have the bill printed, so as to enable us to see what it is, and have it all open to amendment.

Mr. TELLER. That is what we ought to do.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that he ask unanimous consent to consider any amendments which may be reported and adopted by the committee still subject to amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course. That is my understanding.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will hasten the consideration of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. They would be open to amendment when the bill got into the Senate anyway.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know.

Mr. TELLER. So Senators would not be cut off. However, it is better to have it in this way.

Mr. PENROSE. I think it is better to proceed with the reading of the bill. There are few Senators present, and any discussion as to the details of the bill would be unproductive. Everything will be explained.

Mr. TELLER. Then let us have a reprint of the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That will be perfectly satisfactory to me, provided we can then move amendments to the bill as it has been perfected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Immigration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 21, page 21, line 18, after the word "any," to strike out "particular" and insert "portion of the;" in line 19, after the word "thereof," to strike out "as the case may be;" in line 20, after the word "children," to strike out "not more than 12 years of age;" in line 22, after the word "four," to insert "actually domiciled in the United States at the time of such proposed entry;" in line 25, after the word "to," to strike out "produce to" and insert "establish to the satisfaction of;" on page 22, line 1, after the word "port," to strike out "or place;" and in line 2, after the word "entry," to insert "that the required relationship exists and to produce to him;" so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 21. That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the entry into the United States, or any portion of the territory thereof, of the lawful wife or the minor children of any Chinese person of any of the classes mentioned in section 4 actually domiciled in the United States at the time of such proposed entry: Provided, That no such wife nor any of such children shall be permitted to enter who shall fail to establish to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer at the port of entry that the required relationship exists and to produce to him a certificate as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 6, section 21, after the word "consular," to strike out "officer" and insert "representative;" so as to make the paragraph read:

First. If the wife or child come from a foreign country, the certificate shall have been issued to such person by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence such person departed, and shall show that after investigation said representative believes it to be true that the relationship asserted genuinely exists.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 10, section 21, after the word "from," to strike out "an" and insert "any;" in the same line, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" in line 15, after the word "from," to strike out "one" and insert "any;" in the same line, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" in line 16, after the word "into," to strike out "another" and insert "other;" in line 17, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" in line 19, before the word "the," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "in" and insert "at," and in the same line, after the word "port," to strike out "or place;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Second. If the wife or child come from any insular territory of the United States and seek entry into American-mainland territory of the United States, or come from American-mainland territory of the United States and seek entry into insular territory of the United States, or come from any insular territory of the United States and seek entry into other insular territory of the United States, the certificate shall have been issued by the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States at the port whence such person departed, and shall show that after investigation said officer believes it to be true that the relationship asserted genuinely exists.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 1, section 21, after the word "required," to insert "and claimed," and in line 2, after the word "otherwise," to strike out:

The purpose of these provisions being to indulge humane consideration for the welfare and domestic happiness of good-faith Chinese families, but strictly to prohibit entry, under cover of this policy, of prostitutes, slaves, orphans, and persons who are not the persons and have not the relationship asserted.

So as to make the paragraph read:

Third. It is hereby made the duty of diplomatic and consular representatives of the United States, and of the appropriate Treasury officers, to make rigid investigations of all applications for such certificates, and to issue them when the relationship required and claimed is clearly established, but not otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 9, section 21, after the word "named," to strike out "in it" and insert "therein;" in line 11, before the word "rules," to insert "the;" in line 12, before the word "prescribed," to insert "and regulations;" in line 13, before the word "of," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" in line 15, before the word "at," to strike out "at the expense of the applicant, and," and in line 16, after the word "rules," to insert "and regulations;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Fourth. Each of said certificates shall be issued in triplicate, and shall contain the photograph of the person named therein, and in addition to the matter already mentioned shall contain whatever may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. The photographs shall be made at the time and in the manner required by said rules and regulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 18, section 21, before the word "issuing," to strike out "person" and insert "representative or officer;" so as to make the paragraph read:

The original certificate shall be, by the representative or officer issuing it, delivered open to the person named in it, or, if such person be an infant, to the person in charge of such infant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 22, section 21, before the word "officer," to insert "representative or;" on page 24, line 2, before the word "where," to strike out "or place;" and in line 4, after the word "section," to strike out "fifty-two" and insert "fifty-three;" so as to make the paragraph read:

The duplicate thereof shall be, by said representative or officer, delivered in a sealed envelope, duly addressed, to the shipmaster, railway conductor, or other person in charge of the transportation of the person for whom the original is available, whose duty it shall be to deliver it promptly to the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States at the port where entry is sought by said Chinese person. Willful neglect or failure to perform this last-mentioned duty is hereby made punishable under section 53.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 6, section 21, before the word "officer," to insert "representative or;" in line 7, before the word "said," to strike out "or place" and insert "where;" and in line 8, after the word "entry," to strike out:

Provided, That no wife or child shall be privileged to enter unless accompanied by the husband or father on relationship to whom such privilege depends: And provided further, That the privilege of a wife or child to remain in the United States, or particular territory thereof, as the case may be, shall cease when the right of the husband or father so to remain ceases for any reason. And no woman shall be deemed a wife within the meaning of this section or any other provision of this act unless she be a wife as distinguished from a concubine, the intent of this requirement being to have regard to polygamous and allied practices and customs among the Chinese, and to restrict right of entry to one wife of any Chinese man entitled to bring his wife with him into the United States or particular territory thereof, and she the woman who, under the general custom obtaining among his nation, is best entitled to be deemed his wife if he have more than one woman holding to him relationship of wifely character.

And insert:

Provided, That no woman shall be entitled to enter under this section unless she shall establish, by such proof as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, that she is the primary and lawful wife of a member of one of the classes enumerated in section 5, under a marriage contracted in such manner as to be legal and binding in the United States.

So as to make the paragraph read:

The triplicate thereof shall be, by the representative or officer issuing the certificate, immediately sent by mail to the appropriate Treasury officer at the port where said Chinese person seeks entry: Provided, That no woman shall be entitled to enter under this section unless she shall establish, by such proof as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, that she is the primary and lawful wife of a member of one of the classes enumerated in section 5, under a marriage contracted in such manner as to be legal and binding in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 22, on page 25, line 13, before the word "Secretary," to strike out "Commissioner-General of Immigration, under direction of the;" so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 22. That the preceding sections shall not apply to Chinese diplomatic or consular officers or their attendants or servants, who shall be admitted to the United States under special instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury, without production of other evidence than that of personal identity.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 22, on page 25, line 18, before the word "rules," to insert "the;" in the same line, before the word "prescribed," to insert "and regulations;" and in line 20, before the word "of," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Other Chinese officers of China or any other foreign government shall establish their identity as such, and the identity of their attendants and servants, in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 23, page 25, line 22, before the word "landed," to strike out "persons are" and insert "person is;" in line 24, before the word "brought," to strike out "persons" and insert "person;" in the same line, after the word

"border," to strike out "point" and insert "port;" on page 26, line 2, before the word "brought," to strike out "they were" and insert "he was;" in line 3, after the word "Chinese," to strike out "persons" and insert "person;" in line 4, after the word "comparing," to strike out "their certificates" and insert "his certificate;" and in line 5, after the word "Chinese," to strike out "persons" and insert "person;" so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 23. That before any Chinese person is landed from any vessel on territory of the United States, or, in case of inland immigration, before any Chinese person brought to any inland border port of the United States shall be permitted to leave the car or other conveyance in which he was brought thither, the appropriate Treasury officer shall examine such Chinese person, comparing his certificate with the lists given under succeeding provisions hereof, and also with such Chinese person; and no Chinese person shall be allowed to land or to enter in violation of law. The examination and comparisons herein required shall be made immediately after the arrival at port or border.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 24, page 26, line 13, after the word "Chinese," to strike out "passengers" and insert "passenger;" in line 22, after the word "and," to strike out "the names and other" and insert "such;" in the same line, after the word "particulars," to strike out the comma; in line 23, before the word "shown," to insert "to each as are;" and in line 24, after the word "required," to insert:

And such other information as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

So as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 24. That the master of any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place shall, immediately on arriving and before landing or permitting to land any Chinese passenger, deliver to the appropriate Treasury officer of the customs district in which such vessel shall have arrived a separate list of all Chinese persons taken on board his vessel at any port or place, and all such persons on board the vessel at that time. Such list shall show the names of such persons (and in the case of accredited officers of the Chinese or other foreign Government traveling on the business of such Government, or their servants or attendants, a note setting forth such facts), the port or place at which each was taken on board, and such particulars as to each as are shown by their respective certificates hereinbefore required, and such other information as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and such list shall be sworn to by the master in the manner required by law in cases of manifests of cargo.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 24, on page 27, line 7, after the word "territory," to strike out "or possessions;" in line 9, after the word "insular," to strike out "possessions" and insert "territory;" in line 13, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" and in line 14, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" so as to make the paragraph read:

The foregoing requirements shall apply also to the masters of all vessels arriving in the American-mainland territory of the United States from any of the insular territory of the United States; and to masters of all vessels arriving at any point in any such insular territory from the American-mainland territory of the United States; and to the masters of all vessels arriving in the Philippine Islands, Hawaii, Porto Rico, or any other insular territory of the United States from any other insular territory of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 25, page 27, line 20, after the word "border," to strike out "point" and insert "port;" in line 22, after the word "any," to strike out "of;" in line 23, after the word "Chinese," to strike out "persons" and insert "person;" on page 28, line 6, before the word "particulars," to strike out "the names and other" and insert "such;" in the same line, before the word "shown," to insert "to each as are;" and in line 7, after the word "required," to insert "and such other information as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 25. That in the case of Chinese persons brought to an inland border port of the United States, the railway conductor or other person so bringing them shall, immediately on arriving there and before enabling or permitting any such Chinese person to cross the border into territory of the United States, deliver to the appropriate Treasury officer a list of all Chinese persons so brought. Such list shall show the names of all such Chinese persons (and in the case of accredited officers of the Chinese or other foreign government traveling on the business of such government, or their servants and attendants, a note setting forth such facts), the port or place at which each was taken in charge, and such particulars as to each as are shown by their respective certificates hereinbefore required, and such other information as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and such list shall be sworn to by the person bound to deliver it, the oath to be administered by the said Treasury officer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 25, on page 28, line 16, after the word "section," to strike out "fifty-two" and insert "fifty-three;" and in line 21, before the word "employer," to strike out "the" and insert "his;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Any refusal or willful neglect of any such conductor or other person bound to deliver such list to comply with the provisions of this section shall be deemed a felony and shall be punishable under section 53. Should the offender not be subject to punishment in the United States, then any rule or regulation which may be made by the Secretary of the Treasury for cases of that class shall be enforced; and as well against his employer as against himself, if his employer be a person or corporation interested in the transportation of the Chinese person as to whom the offense was committed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 26, page 29, line 2, after the word "provisions," to strike out "designed to prevent said privilege of transit from being abused;" so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 26. That Chinese laborers shall continue to enjoy the privilege of transit across territory of the United States in the course of their journey to or from other countries, subject to the following provisions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 26, on page 29, line 4, before the word "shall," to strike out "Transit privilege" and insert "Privilege of transit;" in line 6, after the word "the," to strike out "place" and insert "port;" and in line 7, after the word "such," to strike out "place" and insert "port;" in line 19, after the word "the," to strike out "transit;" in the same line, after the word "privilege," to insert "of transit;" in line 20, after the word "from," to strike out "an" and insert "any;" in the same line, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" in line 21, after the word "seek," to strike out "transit" and insert "the;" in the same line, after the word "privilege," to insert "of transit;" in line 24, after the word "seek," to strike out "transit" and insert "the;" in the same line, after the word "privilege," to insert "of transit;" in line 25, after the word "from," to strike out "one" and insert "any;" in the same line, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" on page 30, line 1, after the word "seek," to insert "the privilege of;" in the same line, after the word "transit," to strike out "privilege;" in line 2, after the word "across," to strike out "another" and insert "other;" in the same line, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" in line 9, after the word "the," to insert "privilege of;" in the same line, after the word "transit," to strike out "privilege;" in line 16, after the word "be," to insert "required;" in the same line, after the word "by," to insert "the;" in the same line, after the word "rules," to insert "and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval;" and in line 18, after the word "Treasury" to strike out "prescribed;" so as to make the paragraph read:

First. Privilege of transit shall be denied if the applicant fail to produce to the appropriate Treasury officer at the port where entry is sought a through ticket entitling said applicant to transportation from such port to the point of ultimate destination in the foreign country whither he claims to be bound, such ticket in good faith requiring transit across territory of the United States and having been fully paid for; or if he fail to produce, additionally, to the said officer a certificate as follows: (a) If the applicant come from a foreign country, the certificate shall have been issued to him by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence he departed, and shall show that after investigation said representative believed it to be true that said applicant intended to go directly to, and to reside in, the foreign country designated, and did not seek to abuse the privilege of transit applied for; (b) if the applicant come from any insular territory of the United States and seek the privilege of transit across American-mainland territory of the United States, or come from American-mainland territory of the United States and seek the privilege of transit across insular territory of the United States, or come from any insular territory of the United States and seek the privilege of transit across other insular territory of the United States, then the certificate shall have been issued to him by the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States at the port or place whence said applicant departed, and shall show that after investigation said officer believed it to be true that said applicant intended to go directly to, and to reside in, the foreign country designated, and did not seek to abuse the privilege of transit applied for. And it is hereby made the duty of the diplomatic and consular representatives of the United States and of the appropriate Treasury officers of the United States to investigate all applications for the said certificates, and to issue such certificates where the applications are shown to be in good faith, but not otherwise, and in such form and carrying such additional information as shall be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 26, on page 30, line 19, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" in line 21, after the word "suspend," to strike out "transit privilege" and insert "the privilege of transit;" in line 23, after the word "from," to strike out "and" and insert "any;" and in the same line, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" so as to make the paragraph read:

But the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may at any time suspend the privilege of transit in any case or in all cases where the transit is sought by laborers coming from any insular territory of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 26, on page 30, line 25, before the word "shall," to strike out "Transit privilege" and insert "Privilege of transit;" on page 31, line 1, after the word "refuse," to strike out "and" and insert "or;" in line 4, after the word "the," to strike out "place" and insert "port;" in the same line, after the word "entry," to insert "for the exercise of such privilege;" in line 7, before the word "ultimate," to strike out "an" and insert "the;" in the same line, after the word "destination," to strike out "not in the United States" and insert "which is named in this certificate;" in line 8, after the word "the," to strike out "transit" and insert "said;" and in line 9, after the word "privilege," to strike out "applied for;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Second. Privilege of transit shall be denied if the applicant refuse or fail to submit to such examination of his person and baggage and to such investigation as may be deemed necessary by the appropriate Treasury officer at the port where entry for the exercise of such privilege is sought, or if he fail to establish to the satisfaction of said officer that he intends to proceed directly and immediately to the ultimate destination which is named in his certificate, and is not seeking to abuse the said privilege.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 26, on page 31, line 10, before the word "shall," to strike out "Transit privilege" and insert "Privilege of transit;" in line 11, before the word "have," to insert "first;" in line 12, after the word "than," to strike out "in" and insert "for the purpose of;" and in line 13, after the word "have," to strike out "failed in that regard, the intent of this provision being to prevent user of transit privilege as an alternative" and insert "being refused such admission;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Third. Privilege of transit shall be denied if the applicant shall first have sought admission into the United States or some territory thereof otherwise than for the purpose of transit and shall have been refused such admission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 26, on page 31, line 16, before the word "shall," to strike out "Transit privilege" and insert "Privilege of transit;" in line 18, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" and in line 21, before the word "privilege," to strike out "transit" and insert "such;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Fourth. Privilege of transit shall be denied if the applicant fail to comply with any rule or regulation which the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may from time to time prescribe with a view to prevention of abuse of such privilege.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 26, on page 31, line 24, after the word "port," to strike out "or place;" in line 25, after the word "for," to insert "the privilege of;" on page 32, line 1, after the word "transit," to strike out "privilege;" in line 7, after the word "and," to strike out "whatever else" and insert "such other matter as;" and in line 9, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Fifth. The master of any vessel, the conductor of any railway train, or the manager or director of any other conveyance, bringing to any port in the United States, or on the border thereof, any applicant for the privilege of transit shall, immediately after arrival there and before landing or permitting to land, or enabling or permitting to cross the border, as the case may be, any such applicant, deliver to the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States a separate list of all such applicants so brought, which list shall show the name of each applicant, the matter contained in the certificate he bears, and such other matter as may be required by the rules and regulations from time to time prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and this list shall be sworn to by the person bound to deliver it, the oath to be administered by the said officer to whom it is delivered. Failure to comply with any of the requirements of this subdivision shall be punishable in the case of masters of vessels as in violations of section 21, and in the case of others as in violations of section 22.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 26, on page 32, line 17, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" in line 19, after the word "ports," to strike out "or places;" in line 20, after the word "thereof," to insert "for the purpose of exercising the privilege of transit;" in line 21, after the word "be," to strike out "gained by" and insert "granted to;" in line 22, after the word "said," to strike out "transit;" on page 33, line 2, before the word "designation," to strike out "the" and insert "said;" in line 4, after the word "any," to strike out "place" and insert "port;" in line 8, after the word "Immigration," to insert "with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury;" in line 10, after the word "such," to strike out "place" and insert "port;" in line 12, after the word "laws," to insert "and regulations;" in line 14, after the word "as," to strike out "being proposed by said Commissioner-General of Immigration;" in line 16, after the word "such," to strike out "place" and insert "port;" in line 19, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" in line 20, after the word "such," to strike out "place" and insert "port;" and in line 21, after the word "privilege," to strike out "on concluding that" and insert "if in his judgment;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Sixth. The Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall designate the ports at which entry into the United States or particular territory thereof for the purpose of exercising the privilege of transit may be granted to persons entitled to exercise said privilege; and said privilege shall be exercisable at no other ports or places. But in the case of entry along the boundary between the United States and the Republic of Mexico and the boundary between the United States and the Dominion of Canada said designation shall be subject to this restriction: No place along either of said boundaries shall be so designated, nor shall any port along either of said boundaries be designated as a place of entry for any Chinese person whatever, whether in transit or otherwise, until there shall have been executed between the said Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, on the part of the United States, and the persons or corporations purposing to bring Chinese to such port contracts binding such persons and corporations to observe all the laws and regulations of the United States relating to exclusion, entry, or transit of Chinese persons, under such money penalties as shall be set forth in said contracts; and no such port shall remain open to entry of Chinese persons, in transit or otherwise, beyond the life of such contracts in unviolated state. But the said Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may at any time close any such port to transit privilege if in his judgment such privilege is being abused there.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 27, page 34, line 4, after the word "until," to strike out "the United States shall have given;" in line 2, before the word "as," to insert "shall have been rendered;" in line 3, after the word "or," to strike out "particular" and insert "any portion of the;" in line 4, after the word "thereof," to insert "for any purpose;" in line 5, after the word "border," to strike out "point" and insert "port;" in line 6, after the word "detained," to strike out "without the territory of the United States" and insert "at such port;" in line 7, after the word "until," to strike out "the United States shall have given;" in line 8, after the word "decision," to insert "shall have been rendered;" in line 9, after the word "or," to strike out "particular" and insert "any portion of the;" in line 10, after the word "thereof," to insert "for any purpose;" in line 16, after the word "border," to strike out "point" and insert "port;" in line 19, after the word "rules," to insert "and regulations;" in the same line, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" in line 22, after the word "entry," to strike out "transit;" in the same line, after the word "residence," to insert "and no privilege of transit;" in line 24, after the word "temporary," to insert "detention and;" in the same line, after the word "landing," to strike out "or entry" and insert "authorized;" in line 25, after the word "such," to strike out "Treasury rules" and insert "rules and regulations;" on page 35, line 2, after the word "temporary," to insert "detention and;" and in the same line, after the word "landing," to strike out "or entry;" so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 27. That every Chinese person brought by vessel to any port of the United States shall be detained aboard such vessel until a final decision shall have been rendered as to the right of such Chinese person to enter the United States, or any portion of the territory thereof, for any purpose; and every Chinese person brought to an inland border port of the United States shall be detained at such port until a final decision shall have been rendered as to the right of such Chinese person to enter the United States, or any portion of the territory thereof, for any purpose; and in the first class of cases the duty of such detention shall rest on the master, owner, agent, and consignee of the vessel concerned, collectively and singly, and in the second class of cases said duty shall rest on the person, persons, corporation, or agent, collectively and singly, by whom said Chinese person was transported or aided to the inland border port: Provided, That Chinese persons may be otherwise and elsewhere detained pending such final decisions, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may from time to time prescribe: And provided, That no right of entry or residence and no privilege of transit shall result to any such Chinese persons by reason of temporary detention and landing authorized under such rules and regulations, and that no release from liability or obligation under this act shall be worked by such temporary detention and landing in favor of any vessel, or the master, owner, consignee, or agent of any vessel, or any other person or corporation whatsoever.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 5, to insert:

Every person bound under this section to detain a Chinese person who shall refuse or willfully neglect promptly to perform such duty, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 28, page 35, line 13, after the word "person," to strike out "not entitled to enter" and insert "finally refused admission to;" in line 15, before the word "country," to strike out "foreign;" and in line 16, after the word "after," to strike out "the United States shall have denied him the privilege of entry or transit" and insert "such refusal;" so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 28. That every Chinese person finally refused admission to the United States must be returned to the country of which he is a citizen or subject immediately after such refusal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 17, to insert:

The duty of returning said Chinese person is hereby imposed on the master, owner, consignee, or agent of the vessel, and on the railway corporation, its general officers and agents, and on the owners or general officers and agents of other transportation lines or modes of conveyance, collectively and severally, bringing him to the port at which entry is denied him or aiding him thither.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 24, to strike out:

The duty of returning him is hereby imposed on the vessel, shipmaster, shipowner, consignee, railway corporation, or other person or agent, collectively and severally, bringing him to the port or place at which entry is denied him or aiding him thither.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 5, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" so as to make the paragraph read:

But the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may elect to effect such return in some other way than as above prescribed, and at the expense of the United States, in which case the vessel, persons, or corporation that would otherwise have been bound to effect such return shall be jointly and severally liable to the United States for the costs thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 12, after the word "case," to strike out "the" and insert "such," and in line 16, before the word "territory," to strike out "particular" and insert "any portion of the;" so as to make the paragraph read:

And in every case such vessel, persons, or corporation shall be jointly and severally liable to the United States for all costs connected with the inquiry concerning the right of such Chinese person to enter or pass through the United States or any portion of the territory thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 17, after the word "in," to strike out "all cases" and insert "every case;" in line 18, after the word "where," to insert the letter "a;" in the same line, after the word "Chinese," to strike out "persons are" and insert "person is;" in line 19, after the word "from," strike out "an" and insert "any;" in the same line, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" in line 21, after the words "United States," to strike out "and in cases where Chinese persons are" and insert "and in every case where a Chinese person is;" in line 23, after the word "to," to strike out "an" and insert "any;" in the same line, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" in line 24, after the word "territory," to strike out "and in cases" and to insert "But in any case;" in line 25, after the word "where," to insert the letter "a;" in the same line, after the word "Chinese," to strike out "persons are" and insert "person is;" in the same line, after the word "to," to strike out "an" and insert "any;" on page 37, line 1, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" in the same line, after the word "from," to strike out "another" and insert "other;" in line 2, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and to insert "territory;" and in the same line, after the word "thereof," to strike out "the return to be" and insert "he shall, when refused admission or transit, be deported;" so as to make the paragraph read:

The provisions of this section shall apply likewise in every case where a Chinese person is brought from any insular territory of the United States to the American mainland territory of the United States, and in every case where a Chinese person is brought to any insular territory of the United States from said mainland territory, but in any case where a Chinese person is brought to any insular territory of the United States from other insular territory thereof, he shall, when refused admission or transit, be deported to China.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 4, to insert:

Every person bound under this section to return a Chinese person, who shall refuse or willfully neglect promptly to perform such duty, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000 for every Chinese person not returned as required, or by imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment: Provided, That any subordinate officer, agent, or employee of any such vessel, railway corporation, other transportation line, or other mode of conveyance, who is charged with the duty as such subordinate officer, agent, or employee of returning any Chinese person, and shall refuse or willfully neglect promptly to perform such duty, shall be subject to all the pains and penalties imposed by this section upon persons bound to return a Chinese person who refuses or willfully neglects to do so.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 21, to strike out:

SEC. 29. That every person bound under section 27 to detain a Chinese person, or under section 28 to return a Chinese person, who shall refuse or willfully neglect promptly to perform such duty shall be deemed guilty of a felony and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000 for every Chinese person not detained as required, or by imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

And insert:

SEC. 29. That every owner, officer, agent, or employee of any transportation line, railway corporation line, vessel, vehicle, or other mode of conveyance by sea or land, who shall aid or abet or willfully or through neglect permit or connive at the escape of any Chinese person held in detention pending final adjudication of his claims, or as provided by sections 27 and 28 of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000 for every Chinese person not detained as required, or by imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 31, page 39, line 13, after the word "not," to strike out "exceeding" and insert "less than;" in line 14, after the word "or," to insert "by;" in line 15, after the word "than," to strike out "two years" and insert "six months;" and in the same line, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "ten" and insert "five;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 31. That any person who, as principal or accessory, shall knowingly bring into or attempt to bring into or conspire to bring into the United States any Chinese person otherwise than as prescribed by this act, or who, pending a final decision as to the right of any Chinese person to enter or pass through territory of the United States, shall knowingly bring into or attempt to bring into or conspire to bring into territory of the United States such Chinese person, or who shall knowingly harbor or attempt to retain within or conspire to retain within the United States or any territory thereof any Chinese person unlawfully therein and subject to deportation therefrom, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not less than $2,000, or by imprisonment for a term not less than six months and not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 32, page 40, line 2, after the words "in the," to strike out "particular" and insert "portion of the;" and in line 6, before the word "district," to strike out "the" and insert "said;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 32. That any Chinese person found within any portion of the United States in violation of any provision of this act shall be arrested by any United States officer and shall be forthwith taken before a United States judge in the district wherein the arrest is made, or before the United States commissioner designated by the United States attorney of said district, who shall proceed to inquire into the case. Unless upon the hearing the person so arrested shall establish, by affirmative proof, to the satisfaction of said judge or commissioner, that he has a lawful right to be or to remain in the United States, or in the portion of the territory of the United States wherein found, it shall be the duty of said judge or commissioner to order that he be deported. It shall be the duty of the United States attorney of said district to attend the hearing, and the testimony of at least two credible witnesses other than Chinese shall be required to establish the right claimed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 33, page 40, line 10, after the word "any," to strike out "particular" and insert "portion of the;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 33. That if any Chinese person shall enter the United States or any portion of the territory thereof without having first obtained from the appropriate Treasury officer the required permission to enter, he shall be deported, notwithstanding that had he properly applied he would have been entitled to enter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 34, page 40, line 17, after the word "person," to strike out "coming" and insert "who came;" so as to read:

SEC. 34. That wherever herein it is provided that a Chinese person shall be deported it is meant:

First. In the case of a person who came from a foreign country, that he shall be forthwith returned thither or to the country of which he is a subject or citizen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 24, after the word "person," to strike out "coming" and insert "who came;" on page 41, line 1, after the words "United States," to strike out "as from the Philippine Islands to the American-mainland territory of the United States, for example;" and in line 4, after the word "to," to strike out "China" and insert "the country of which he is a citizen or subject;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Second. In the case of a person who came without right from one portion of the territory of the United States to another portion of the territory of the United States that he shall be forthwith sent to the country of which he is a citizen or subject.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 35, page 41, line 12, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" in line 13, before the word "not," to strike out "have" and insert "has;" in line 14, after the word "and," to strike out "have" and insert "has;" in line 17, after the word "such," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" in line 18, before the word "marshals," to insert "attorneys and;" in line 19, after the word "such," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" and in line 20, after the word "territory," to strike out "But whenever the letter of the foregoing sections can apply in such insular possession, said local officers shall cease to exercise these temporarily given functions;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 35. That in any insular territory of the United States where the United States has not established Federal courts and has not provided Federal marshals the judicial functions herein vested in United States judges shall be vested in judges of the highest local courts in such territory, and the executive functions herein vested in United States attorneys and marshals shall be vested in the corresponding local officers in such territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. On behalf of the committee, I offer an amendment to come in following the word "territory," in line 20, at the end of section 35.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, line 20, after the word "territory," insert:

In any insular territory of the United States wherein the government of civil affairs is subject to the jurisdiction of the War Department, the authority conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States and the Commissioner-General of Immigration by this act is suspended for the period of time such territory remains subject to the jurisdiction of the War Department and a like authority conferred upon the Secretary of War, who shall do and perform for said territory the several duties and functions required of and from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner-General of Immigration by the provisions of this act.

In any insular territory of the United States wherein the government of civil affairs is subject to the jurisdiction of the War Department, the several duties, acts, and functions required by this act to be performed by the officers of the Treasury of the United States other than the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner-General of Immigration shall be done and performed by the collector of customs at the port of said insular territory wherein the duty, action, or function is to be performed.

Mr. GALLINGER. In reference to this amendment I wish to inquire of the Senator from Indiana what territory we now have that is under the authority of the War Department?

Mr. PENROSE. The Philippine Islands.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Philippine Islands. This was addressed to the Philippine Archipelago.

Mr. LODGE. It is simply to make effective the administration of the law.

Mr. GALLINGER. I supposed that the Philippine Archipelago was being governed by a Commission appointed by the President of the United States.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. And under the civil authority.

Mr. LODGE. All their reports come through the War Department.

Mr. GALLINGER. They may make their reports through the War Department, but I am quite unwilling to admit that the War Department is governing the Philippine Islands at the present time. We gave the President authority to do that.

Mr. LODGE. That is not the statement in the amendment.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If that is the case this would not apply.

Mr. LODGE. It could not apply.

Mr. PENROSE. It only applies temporarily.

Mr. GALLINGER. My judgment is that it does not apply and that is the reason why I asked the question, but I may be wrong.

Mr. PENROSE. Then the amendment would not be operative if it does not apply.

Mr. GALLINGER. On that theory we might put in the Ten Commandments. I do not think that is a satisfactory answer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 36, page 42, line 4, after the word "by," to strike out "the" and insert "a," and in line 5, after the word "attorney," to strike out "of said district;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 36. That any Chinese person who violates any of the provisions of this act shall be deported. Accusation and hearing in such case shall be before a United States judge in the district wherein said Chinese person is found, or before a United States commissioner designated by a United States attorney.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 37, page 42, line 13, before the words "of transit," to strike out "right" and insert "privilege;" in line 18, after the word "issued," to insert "or any other person;" in line 20, after the word "rules," to insert "or regulations;" in line 22, after the word "not," to strike out "exceeding two" and insert "less than one;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "nor more than $5,000;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 37. That any person who shall knowingly and falsely alter or substitute any name for the name written in any certificate provided for in this act or by the Treasury rules thereunder, or who shall knowingly utter any such certificate, if forged or fraudulent, or who shall forge any such certificate; or who shall, whether an officer of the United States or not, issue to any person a certificate as to the status or right of entry, or right of residence, or privilege of transit, or right of return of any Chinese person (other than a certificate authorized by law to be by him issued), with intent to defeat any provision of this act, or any Treasury rule thereunder, or with intent to deceive the person to whom or the Chinese person for whom issued, or any other person; or who shall falsely personate any person named in any certificate authorized by this act or Treasury rules or regulations thereunder, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000 or imprisoned for a term not less than one year nor exceeding five years, or shall be both so fined and imprisoned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 38, page 43, line 9, after the word "brought," to insert "who is bound to do so under this act;" and in line 10, after the word "port," to strike out "who is bound so to do under this act;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 38. That the requirements and penalties imposed by this act on masters, owners, agents, and consignees of vessels shall not apply in the case of any vessel bound to a port not within the United States which shall come within the jurisdiction of the United States by reason of being in distress or because of stress of weather. But if any Chinese person brought on any such vessel shall be permitted to land in the United States in violation of law, or if every Chinese person so brought, who is bound to do so under this act, does not depart with the vessel when it leaves port, then the penalties of this act shall be imposed on said vessel, and the master, owner, agent, and consignee thereof, jointly and severally.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that section 39 with the amendments of the committee may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the whole of section 39 may be passed over for the present. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The next amendment was, in section 40, page 45, line 8, after the word "admission," to insert "and becomes a laborer within the meaning of this act;" in line 10, before the word "territory," to strike out "particular;" in the same line, after the word "thereof," to strike out "as the case may be;" in line 12, before the word "in," to strike out "the same result shall follow;" and in line 14, after the word "attendant," to strike out "of that officer" and insert "he shall be deported;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 40. That any Chinese person who, having been admitted into the United States, or from one portion thereof into another portion thereof, as a teacher, student, merchant, or traveler for curiosity or pleasure, ceases to be of the status gaining him such admission and becomes a laborer within the meaning of this act shall forfeit the privilege of remaining in the United States, or the territory thereof, and shall be deported. And in every case where a Chinese person, having gained admission by virtue of being a servant or an attendant of a Chinese officer, ceases to be such servant or attendant he shall be deported.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 41, page 45, line 16, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 41. That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe and enforce rules and regulations whereby the Treasury Department shall have a complete record of the date, place, and circumstances of birth of every Chinese person hereafter born within the jurisdiction of the United States, together with data as to parentage. And a certified copy of the record as to any person whose birth is recorded hereunder shall be admissible as evidence in all inquiries under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 43, page 46, line 12, after the word "his," to insert "right to;" and in line 13, after the word "return," to strike out "privilege;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 43. That two years after the departure from the United States of a Chinese laborer to whom has been issued a return certificate hereunder the Treasury Department shall cancel all official papers and entries concerning him: Provided, That he shall not within said period have exercised his right to return.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 45, page 46, line 20, before the words "of the," to strike out "under direction" and insert "with the approval;" and in line 23, after the word "act," to insert "or of any other law of the United States or of any treaty relating to Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent;" so as to make the paragraph read:

The said Commissioner-General, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby authorized to make and to enforce any and all rules and regulations by him deemed needful to an efficient execution of this act or of any other law of the United States or of any treaty relating to Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent: Provided, That he shall make no rule or regulation inconsistent with this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 4, before the word "or," to strike out "is used;" in the same line, after the word "equivalent," to insert "is used;" in line 6, after the word "and," to insert "is designated;" in line 7, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "is designated" and insert "with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury;" in line 11, after the word "Immigration," to insert "with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury;" in line 13, after the word "designations," to strike out "in that regard;" and in line 14, after the word "act," to insert "and the duty of inspecting and investigating all immigrants under this law or under the general immigration laws of the United States shall be performed whenever practicable by Chinese or immigrant inspectors under the Bureau of Immigration;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Wherever in this act the term "appropriate Treasury officer" or its equivalent is used, that officer of the United States is meant who is appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury and is designated by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to perform the duty or to exercise the authority mentioned. And it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to make all needful appointments and of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to make all needful designations forthwith on the passage of this act; and the duty of inspecting and investigating all immigrants under this law or under the general immigration laws of the United States shall be performed whenever practicable by Chinese or immigrant inspectors under the Bureau of Immigration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 21, after the word "enter," to strike out "to pass through;" and in line 23, after the word "thereof," to insert "or touching the privilege of transit through any part thereof;" so as to make the paragraph read:

All officers appointed or designated to enforce the provisions of this act are hereby empowered to administer oaths touching the right of any Chinese person to enter or to remain in the United States or any territory thereof, or touching the privilege of transit through any part thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 46, page 48, line 1, after the word "port," to strike out "or place;" in line 2, after the words "for the," to strike out "privilege" and insert "right;" in line 5, after the word "whether," to strike out "the" and insert "such right or;" in line 10, after the words "United States," to strike out "with the proviso;" in line 11, after the word "person," to strike out "and also any United States attorney;" in line 13, after the word "decision," to strike out "to" and insert "through;" and in line 14, after the word "Immigration," to strike out "and from any decision of said Commissioner-General;" so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 46. That when the appropriate Treasury officer at the port of arrival of any Chinese person shall have passed upon the application of such person for the right of entry into the United States or any of the territory thereof, or for the privilege of transit through the United States or any of the territory thereof, whether such right or privilege be sought for the first time, or under a return certificate, or under claim of former residence as a merchant, or otherwise, then the decision so given shall be final and not subject to review by the judicial branch of the Government of the United States: Provided, That said Chinese person and also any officer of the Treasury Department of the United States, may appeal from said decision through the Commissioner-General of Immigration to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 21, after the word "or," to insert "his claim to privilege;" in line 23, after the word "any," to strike out "possession" and insert "of the territory;" on page 49, line 4, after the word "by," to strike out "the" and insert "a;" in the same line, after the word "attorney," to strike out "of said district;" in line 5, before the words "United States," to strike out "said" and insert "the appropriate;" in line 9, after the word "cases," to insert "and if such decision is adverse to such claimant he shall be returned as provided in section 28;" in line 12, after the word "enter," to strike out "or to pass through;" in line 13, after the word "within," to insert "or his claim to the privilege of passing through;" in line 14, after the word "any," to strike out "particular" and insert "portion of the;" in line 15, after the word "on," to strike out "alleged citizenship of the United States or any particular possession thereof" and insert "any claim recognized by this act or any law of the United States;" in line 20, after the word "enter," to strike out "or to pass through;" in the same line, after the word "within," to insert "or any claim of privilege to pass through;" and in line 22, before the word "territory," to strike out "particular" and insert "portion of the;" so as to make the paragraph read:

But where the applicant for entry or transit shall base his claim of right to enter or his claim to privilege to pass through the United States or any of the territory thereof on alleged citizenship of the United States or any of the territory thereof, and upon that solely, no administrative officer of the Government of the United States shall pass upon his case, but he shall forthwith be taken before a United States judge in the district wherein he shall have applied for entry or transit, or before the United States commissioner designated by a United States attorney, and, the appropriate United States attorney attending, a judicial hearing shall be had, as on writ of habeas corpus; and pending a final decision on his application he shall be detained in the custody of the United States marshal of said district, as in deportation cases. And if such decision is adverse to such claimant he shall be returned as provided by section 28. And whenever any Chinese person bases his claim of right to enter or to reside within, or his claim to the privilege of passing through, the United States, or any portion of the territory thereof, on any claim recognized by this act or any law of the United States, and such claim is under inquiry or such claim has been decided adversely to him, he can not assert alternatively another claim of right to enter or to reside within, or any claim of privilege to pass through, the United States or any portion of the territory thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 48, page 50, line 6, after the word "act," to insert "or any other law or any treaty of the United States relating to Chinese persons, or persons of Chinese descent;" and in line 9, before the word "of," to strike out "Supreme Court" and insert "circuit court of appeals;" so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 48. That when any United States district court shall have given a decision, on appeal or otherwise, in any case under this act or any other law or any treaty of the United States relating to Chinese persons, or persons of Chinese descent, an appeal therefrom may be taken to the circuit court of appeals of the United States, within five days from the rendering thereof, by the Chinese person concerned or by the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I offer, on behalf of the committee, an amendment to be inserted at the end of line 11 on page 50.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. In section 48, page 50, at the end of line 11, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That in any case which involves the consideration or construction of the Constitution of the United States, or the status of the inhabitants of the insular territory of the United States at the time of its acquisition by the United States, an appeal may be taken direct from the United States district court to the Supreme Court.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does that amendment include a case where the construction of a United States statute is involved?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. No; the construction of constitutional questions or the status of the inhabitants of the insular territory.

Mr. MITCHELL. Did the committee consider the propriety or impropriety of providing that in cases involving the construction of United States statutes they should go to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It did not. The committee thought that it would be sufficient that such cases should go to the circuit court of appeals, and not to the Supreme Court.

Mr. MITCHELL. What struck me at the moment was this: That if this bill becomes a law and questions are raised in regard to the constitutionality of any statute, or as to whether it is in conflict with some other statute, that question ought to be passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States. I shall not, however, insist on pressing the matter at this time.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It was thought by the committee that we should not burden the Supreme Court with the consideration of appeals, except in the mere particulars of the construction of the Constitution of the United States and the status of the inhabitants of the insular territory.

Mr. PATTERSON. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that he let the amendment be printed and go over.

Mr. PENROSE. It was thought it would be much more convenient for litigants to allow them to go before the circuit court of appeals than to put them to the trouble and expense of coming all the way to Washington.

Mr. MITCHELL. I entirely agree with the provision as far as it goes. The only question with me was whether it might not be proper, in case a question arose involving a United States statute, that it should go to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The circuit court of appeals now has jurisdiction in cases involving the construction of all United States statutes, and this does not change the law.

Mr. PATTERSON. I suggest that the amendment go over.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I hope the Senator will not insist upon that, for, if he so desires, a separate vote may be had upon the amendment when the bill shall have been reported to the Senate.

Mr. PATTERSON. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 48, on page 50, line 17, after the word "appeal," to strike out "to said Supreme Court;" so as to make the paragraph read:

But in case of appeal under this section by the United States, a certified copy of the testimony taken on the hearing before the district court shall, within ten days after said hearing, be transmitted to the Attorney-General of the United States, who may direct the appropriate district attorney to move for a dismissal of the appeal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 18, after the word "the," to strike out "Supreme Court" and insert "circuit court of appeals;" so as to make the paragraph read:

In appeals under this section the circuit court of appeals may review all facts as well as all questions of law, and shall have power to make all necessary orders, either for discharge of the Chinese persons or for deportation thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 49, page 50, line 23, after the words "to the," to strike out "Supreme Court" and insert "circuit court of appeals;" on page 51, line 2, after the words "or the," to strike out "Supreme Court" and insert "circuit court of appeals;" and in line 7, after the word "the," to strike out "Supreme Court" and insert "circuit court of appeals;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 49. That on appeal to a district court of the United States or to the circuit court of appeals of the United States, under this act, a transcript of the record and copies of all testimony taken on the hearing before the commissioner or court whose decision is appealed from shall be transmitted to the district court or the circuit court of appeals, as the case may be; and either court may order sent to it, in addition, or in lieu, any original document or other evidence used or considered in the lower court or tribunal. But no new evidence shall be received in the circuit court of appeals, except by order of said court upon motion duly made for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. In section 49, on page 50, line 24, after the words "United States," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 49, page 50, line 24, after the words "United States," it is proposed to insert "or to the Supreme Court of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I wish to offer an amendment following the words "court of appeals," in line 3, on page 51, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "appeals," in the amendment just adopted, in section 49, page 51, line 3, it is proposed to insert "or the Supreme Court."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. On behalf of the committee, I move an amendment to follow the word "appeals," in line 7, on page 51.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "appeals," in the amendment just adopted, in section 49, on page 51, line 7, it is proposed to insert "or the Supreme Court."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 50, page 51, line 9, after the word "in," to strike out "cases" and insert "every case;" and in line 10, after the word "person," to insert "who is the subject of such proceedings;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 50. That in every case of appeal under the foregoing sections the Chinese person who is the subject of such proceedings shall remain in the custody of the appropriate United States marshal pending final decision, and without bail: Provided, That if the appeal be prosecuted from a decision discharging him from custody, he may be admitted to bail pending decision on appeal, but in a sum not less than $2,000. And this section shall apply likewise in every case arising under this act where a Chinese person sues out a writ of habeas corpus; and as well to the time before the first hearing on habeas corpus as to appeals from the first or any later decision in the proceeding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 51, page 51, line 25, after the word "insular," to strike out "possession" and insert "territory;" in the same line, before the word "used," to strike out "as;" on page 52, line 1, after the word "all," to insert "island;" and in the same line, after the words "United States," to strike out "and in any way subject to the jurisdiction thereof, not in North America; and as well that which may hereafter be acquired as that which is now possessed" and insert "not forming a part of any State or of Alaska;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 51. That the term "United States," when used in this act as a geographical designation, is meant to include all the lands and waters in any way subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, both continental and insular. And the term "insular territory" used in this act is meant to include all island territory of the United States not forming a part of any State or of Alaska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 52, page 52, line 7, before the word "used," to strike out "as;" in line 8, before the word "persons," to insert "male and female;" in line 9, after the word "descent," to strike out "and;" and in line 10, after the word "blood," to strike out "and as well females as males;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 52. That the term "Chinese" and the term "Chinese person," used in this act, are meant to include all male and female persons who are Chinese either by birth or descent, as well those of mixed blood as those of the full blood. And wherever herein personal pronouns are used the masculine includes the feminine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 53, page 52, line 15, after the word "not," to strike out "exceeding" and insert "less than;" and in line 17, after the word "not," to strike out "exceeding" and insert "less than;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 53. That any violation of any provision of this act whereof punishment is not otherwise provided shall be deemed a felony, and shall be punishable by fine not less than $1,000, or by imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 18, to strike out section 54, as follows:

SEC. 54. That no certificate of status required to be procured from a foreign government as a condition precedent to the entry or transit of any member of a class mentioned in section 4 shall have any force, effect, or value under this act if the foreign government by which it is issued is at the date thereof imposing no restrictions on the free immigration into its dominions of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 53, line 1, to change the number of the section from 55 to 54.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 3, to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 55. That wherever by this act or any Treasury rule or regulation thereunder a certificate or other paper is required to be issued in duplicate or triplicate, the original shall be marked "Original," the duplicate shall be marked "Duplicate," and the triplicate shall be marked "Triplicate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 8, to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 56. That the provisions of this act shall not be suspended at any time, nor shall any exemption be made in order to permit the admission of Chinese persons to the United States, or any of its territory, for the purpose of participating in any fair or exposition.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that section be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri

asks that the section which has just been read be passed over. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

The next amendment was, on page 53; line 14, to change the number of the section from "56" to "57."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. In section 20, on page 21, I ask that the vote by which the amendment from line 11 to line 16 was adopted be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it will be so ordered.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. After the word "of," in line 15, I move that the word "section" be changed to "sections," and to insert, after the word "section" the words "six, seven, and," and after the word "eight," in the same line, to insert "under which he may be entitled to admission;" so that if amended the clause will read:

But it shall be the right of any such person to elect to waive all of the provisions of the second and third subdivisions of this section, and for readmission into the United States or any portion of the territory thereof to depend upon the provisions of sections 6, 7, and 8, under which he may be entitled to admission, and provisions in pursuance thereof.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that there may be a reprint made of the pending bill as it has been amended by the Senate, so that it will all be printed in roman characters, except those sections which have been passed over, which will remain with the amendments printed as now in italics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, the Senator was specifying as to how he desires to have the bill printed; but I do not think he went far enough. The reprint ought to show the bill as it was and as it has been amended.

Mr. LODGE. The present print of the bill shows, of course, the amendments of the committee. I want to get a print which will show the bill as it has been amended by the Senate. There are some amendments which have not been agreed to, and of course those will remain in italics.

Mr. PETTUS. Ought not the amendments to be so designated as that we should be able to see what amendments have been made since that bill was reported to the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. That of course is shown by the present print of the bill.

Mr. PETTUS. Ought not that to be continued in the reprint?

Mr. LODGE. Then there is no object in reprinting the bill. We have plenty of copies of the present bill in print. There are a great many verbal amendments in this bill, and I want to get a print made showing it all in roman characters as agreed to, so that it will read smoothly, and we can see what the condition of the bill is. Of course the existing bill will show every amendment. I thought it would be more convenient to adopt the suggestion I have made, and it is a mere matter of convenience.

Mr. PETTUS. Very well; I shall make no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will suggest that the order for the reprint of the bill be made special, so that we shall have it upon our tables to-morrow morning.

Mr. LODGE. Of course that will be done.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Pennsylvania if this proposed reprint is to appear as the original text of the bill without italics?

Mr. LODGE. What I want to get is a print of the bill that will get rid of all these small verbal changes and get rid of the confusion which now exists on the face of the bill. I want to get a smooth print. It is perfectly easy, if it is desired, to put in brackets the adopted amendments, so as to show what amendments have been adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what ought to be done, because, while some of us have raised no objection to these amendments being perfunctorily adopted, we think some of them are very important, and they ought to be designated in the print of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is wise. Let the bill be printed in roman characters as it has been agreed to, with the amendments agreed to placed in brackets, and of course the passed-over sections will be printed as proposed amendments in italics, as now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ALLISON. I think there will be some difficulty in printing within brackets the amendments agreed to. As I understand, though I have not been here very regularly during the consideration of the bill, in making amendments a great many words have been stricken out and others inserted.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. In the bill as reported to the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. In the bill as thus far agreed to in the Senate.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Some portions have been stricken out, but not very considerable portions.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to see the bill in the form the committee and the Senate thus far has agreed to it, and then have the entire bill open to amendment.

Mr. LODGE. That is my precise object, to get a print of the bill in convenient form for future treatment and amendment. Now, we have the print of the bill as reported from the committee with the original amendments—

Mr. ALLISON. Has all of the bill been read?

Mr. LODGE. The bill has all been read. I thought if we could have one print that would get rid of this multiplicity of verbal amendments, which simply confuse the eye in following the bill, it would be a great advantage to have such a reprint as I have suggested.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not precisely see how we can get all of the amendments inserted in brackets, where we have stricken out one provision and inserted another.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think it would be better to print the bill now as if it were an original bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I think so.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is what I supposed was going to be done.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I wanted to have done.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There was some talk about it in the Senate, and that then the whole bill should be open to amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the better way by far.

Mr. MITCHELL. The old bill shows where the amendments are.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The old bill shows where the amendments are.

Mr. LODGE. That was my first proposition.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think that is the better way.

Mr. LODGE. What I thought was wanted was to have a clean print of the bill, with all the Senate amendments adopted in it, printed in roman characters, and that the passed-over sections should be printed as they stand in the bill as reported from the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that the old bill and the new one be stitched together. Then we will have them to refer to.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. That will answer the purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, coupled with the request of the Senator from Iowa? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PATTERSON. What sections have been passed over?

Mr. LODGE. Section 39.

Mr. PENROSE. And 56.

Mr. LODGE. And I think 56.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the pending bill which I ask may be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Perhaps it had better be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to its being read. It is not very long.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That nothing in the provisions of this act or any other act shall be construed to prevent, hinder, or restrict any foreign exhibitor, representative, or citizen of any foreign nation or the holder—who is a citizen of any foreign nation—of any concession or privilege from any fair or exposition, authorized by act of Congress, from bringing into the United States under contract such mechanics, artisans, agents, or other employees—natives of their respective foreign countries—as they or any of them may deem necessary for the purpose of making preparation for installing or conducting their exhibits or of preparing for installing or conducting any business authorized or permitted under or by virtue of or pertaining to any concession or privilege which may have been or may be granted by any said fair or exposition, in connection with such exposition, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, both as to admission and return of such person or persons.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suggest that the amendment be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; it is to be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

GEORGE C. TILLMAN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4071) granting an increase of pension to George C. Tillman; which was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "sixteen."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference with the House on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. DEBOE, and Mr. CARMACK were appointed.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 8, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 7, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13360. An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. HITT. I call up the special order for this day, the Chinese-exclusion bill, and move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13031) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose on Saturday the general debate on the bill had been concluded, and it remained to proceed with the consideration of the bill by paragraphs. I ask that the Clerk now proceed to read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the coming, except under the conditions hereinafter specified, of Chinese laborers from any foreign country to the United States or its possessions shall be prohibited.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word. I wish to say that after consultation between the members of the committee and the gentlemen of the California delegation, who are deeply interested in this bill, the changes that are desired by the membership from the Pacific coast and by members of the committee have been substantially agreed upon; and as we proceed with the reading of the paragraphs gentlemen having amendments to offer will present them, and we will give notice to the House where they are agreed upon, so as to abbreviate as far as possible the discussion. There is one clause, that in regard to the shipping, which we will reserve. I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I renew the motion to strike out the last word. Much as I would like to vote for this bill and to exclude the objectionable Chinese from our territory, I can not see my way clear to vote for the bill so long as it contains section 2, which I will read:

SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act the entry into the mainland territory of the United States of Chinese laborers coming from any of the insular possessions of the United States shall be prohibited, and the prohibition shall apply to all Chinese laborers, as well those who were in such insular possessions at the time or times of acquisition thereof, respectively, by the United States as to those who have come there since, and those who have been born there since, and those who may be born there hereafter. And the same prohibition shall apply to Chinese laborers coming to one of the insular possessions of the United States from any other insular possession of the United States, except from one island to another of the same group. But the privileges of transit hereinafter given to other Chinese are hereby given to Chinese laborers in all territory of the United States, subject to the conditions hereinafter expressed.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman will allow me to say that section 2 has not yet been read by the Clerk.

Mr. KLEBERG. I am aware of that; but I may as well state my objection now, and for that purpose I have moved a merely formal amendment. I realize that possibly there will be no record vote on this bill, and I may have no opportunity of stating my objections to this provision except right here.

I think that this clause is clearly unconstitutional. I believe that our insular possessions are a part of the United States. There can be no question of that kind as to the case of Hawaii and Porto Rico. And the Supreme Court having held in the case here cited—of Wong Kim Ark v. The United States (169 U. S. Reports)—that a person born of alien Chinese parentage in the State of California is a citizen of the United States, I can not see how hereafter that court can hold a Chinese born in Hawaii, in Porto Rico, or in the Philippines since their acquisition or hereafter is not a citizen of the United States. I can not, therefore, see my way clear of voting for this bill, much as I would like to do so. I acquiesce and agree with everything that has been said as to the necessity of excluding the Chinese from our ports by a reasonable exclusion act, but we have also taken an oath to support the Constitution, and I can not in the face of the facts and the face of the decisions of the highest court of the land, and in the face of my own conscience, bring myself to support this bill, and when it comes up I shall vote no, unless this section is stricken out.

I withdraw my pro forma amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act the entry into the mainland territory of the United States of Chinese laborers coming from any of the insular possessions of the United States shall be prohibited; and the prohibition shall apply to all Chinese laborers, as well those who were in such insular possessions at the time or times of acquisition thereof, respectively, by the United States, as to those who have come there since, and those who have been born there since, and those who may be born there hereafter. And the same prohibition shall apply to Chinese laborers coming to one of the insular possessions of the United States from any other insular possession of the United States, except from one island to another of the same group. But the privileges of transit hereinafter given to other Chinese are hereby given to Chinese laborers in all territory of the United States, subject to the conditions hereinafter expressed.

Mr. NAPHEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 3, after the word "since," strike out the words "and those who have been born there since, and those who may be born there hereafter."

Mr. NAPHEN. Mr. Chairman, I propose to vote for this bill, though the majority insists upon retaining this portion of it. This part is clearly unconstitutional. Mr. Chairman, I can not as a member of this House vote for any measure that will deprive any man of his constitutional rights, no matter whom he may be, or where he comes from. The question involved in this section has been decided by the Supreme Court.

I am sworn here to support the Constitution as I understand it, to support the Constitution as it has been interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States, and this question has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S., 649. The court decided that under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution every person born in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof becomes at once a citizen of the United States. The court said "in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof." The first sentence of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution must be presumed to have been understood and intended by Congress, which proposed the amendment, and by the legislatures, which adopted it, in the same sense as the like words had been used by Chief Justice Marshall in the well-known case of the Exchange and as equivalent of the words "within the limits and under the jurisdiction of the United States" and the converse of the words "out of the jurisdiction of the United States." It has been urged that the fourteenth amendment was not intended to confer rights of citizenship upon the children of Chinese parents. An examination of the debate in the Senate and House when the fourteenth amendment was under consideration proves that it was understood that children born of Chinese parents in the United States would come under the terms of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it has been decided in the recent case of De Lins v. Bidwell (182 United States, 1) that our insular possessions are domestic territory. They are as much our territory—our domestic territory—as our inland Territories are. The question then comes as to what right we have to deprive persons who have been born there since our acquisition of those possessions of their constitutional rights. It may be said that we have a right to define their civil and their political status; but that referred to those who resided in the possessions at the time of the acquisition. It could not refer to those who were born there since or who will be born there hereafter.

The Constitution takes care of their rights. Though we may suspend their political rights and define what their civil status may be, we can not take away their natural right to go to any part of the United States. They have the freedom of the Republic. This personal right is secured to them by the principles of constitutional liberty. Therefore I say, Mr. Chairman, that it is clearly unconstitutional to deprive those people of those rights, and I hope the majority will consent to have that part of section 2 of the bill stricken out.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I will only say that the points that the gentleman makes, which are in my view to a considerable extent well taken, are answered by the gentleman from Missouri, who made the points and then swallowed them. This is the way to get the case to the Supreme Court.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is based upon the principle for which he contends, that the Philippine Islands are to such an extent a portion of the United States that persons thereafter born become necessarily of the United States, and as such entitled to the rights held by those who were born in this country.

Mr. NAPHEN. Will the gentleman explain what he means by our "insular possessions"—what it includes?

Mr. PERKINS. I should say it included the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, and Hawaii.

Mr. NAPHEN. Very well; then this prohibition applies to those three possessions, and we have already legislated for Porto Rico, and we have reserved the right to have all laws enacted by the legislature of Porto Rico "reported to the Congress of the United States, which has power and authority, if deemed advisable, to annul the same." The people born within those possessions we say they are not citizens of the United States; that their "personal rights are unprotected by the provisions of the Constitution," and "that they are subject to the arbitrary control of Congress." This is repugnant to justice and common sense.

Mr. PERKINS. If the gentleman is right in saying that Porto Rico and Hawaii will not be held by the Supreme Court to be included within the term "insular possessions," then of course this law does not apply to them. Certainly it applies to the Philippine Islands. I trust that the day will never come when the Supreme Court will decide that the Philippine Islands are so much portions of this country that every man there residing or to be born there hereafter will be entitled to the rights held by the citizens of this land. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, the Congress of the United States, I am confident, does not wish to anticipate any such decision. The result of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts would be that by this act, as a necessary result, every man born in the Philippine Islands, every Chinese, every Filipino, would be entitled to all the rights held by a citizen of Massachusetts or a citizen of New York or of any other State. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, I feel sure it can not be the desire of this committee or of this Congress that by act of Congress, in anticipation of a decision which I believe will never be made, such a construction should be put upon the situation of those islands.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, when the Porto Rico bill was before the House, one of the strongest of the reasons for passing that was to make a test case as to the rights of Congress to legislate law in regard to those possessions that have fallen to us as a part of the fruit of the Spanish war. If by annexing the Philippine Islands we simply remove the barrier we had drawn against Chinese immigration 9,000 miles farther west so as to include the Philippine Islands and make them the ports from which the Chinese emigration could start to the United States of America, the damage to this country would be incalculable. It becomes necessary to draw a line in the very start, and the result of the enactment of the Porto Rican law was that we obtained at least in part an authoritative construction by the Supreme Court of the United States as to our power in this possession. I believe the legitimate and logical result of the Porto Rican decision is that the Congress has the power that it is now proposed to exercise in section 2. We should not permit those islands to become merely the means of peopling this country with the Mongolian race.

Mr. KLEBERG. Does the gentleman think that the island of Hawaii is a part of the United States, by virtue of the resolution which admitted it?

Mr. LACEY. So far as the islands of Hawaii are concerned, the number of Chinese there is comparatively small. It is not an unknown quantity.

Mr. HITT. That resolution excluded them.

Mr. LACEY. And the resolution in terms excluded them; but in the Philippine Islands, adjacent as they are to the shores of China, they would become points from which the Chinese could be smuggled into this country almost without limit.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to state that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is clearly incorrect in saying that the number of Chinese is infinitesimally or comparatively small. There are about 10,000 white people in the Hawaiian Islands, 26,000 Chinese, and 61,000 Japanese, who are equally a menace to American labor, and this is out of a total population in the islands of Hawaii of 154,000.

Mr. LACEY. Very well, then; I will amend my statement and say that the entire population, Chinese, white, and everything else in Hawaii, is infinitesimally small, hardly worthy of consideration in connection with a proposition of this kind, for if every man, woman, and child in the Hawaiian Islands should get up to-morrow and move into the United States of America, we could put them in one small city and hardly notice them; but the problem as to the Philippines is a great one—and it is a point of wisdom in the very outset of this bill to meet that question and to meet it squarely, as has been done by the committee in this report.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the general law, my impression would have been that, in view of the fact that almost every line and sentence of the existing statutes have been construed by the courts of the country, it would have been wiser to have reenacted those laws, with such amendments as would apply to the situation, growing out of our recent acquisitions from the Spanish war; but the committee in their wisdom have gone over this question and I am prepared to yield my judgment to theirs as to the necessity of enacting an entirely new law in place of reenacting the old ones. At first thought it would have seemed to me perfectly plain that laws that have been construed, however imperfect they may be, are safer than laws which have yet to be construed, and we know the force of the opposition that every feature of this bill will meet in the courts, and it might have been safer not to reopen the question along the old lines, as we will of necessity do when we enact an entirely new law.

I know when we framed the Alaskan code we left out many matters of the utmost importance; I know when we framed a code for the District of Columbia we made inadequate provision for the grand jury, and the courts of the District of Columbia, after the laws had been passed, found themselves in a state of chaos; and we run that same danger as to this law. I shall vote, however, for the bill, in the hope that this committee have carefully endeavored, and I hope succeeded, in avoiding all of those various difficulties.

The propriety of Chinese exclusion can not be regarded as subject to much question at this time. The various laws relating to the subject have been upon the statute books for many years, and the amendments made have always been in the direction of greater stringency.

The Geary Act will expire in a few weeks, and it is important that prompt action should be taken so that we may not have even a short period in which the bars may remain down. The laws now in force, with the various amendments made from time to time, appear to have operated to accomplish the desired result. Chinese immigration had been practically suppressed, and under the Census of 1900, there are only 93,280 Chinese in the United States, exclusive of Hawaii, as against 105,465 in 1880 and 107,475 in 1890. In Hawaii there are 25,767, who were there when we annexed those islands.

The law having been found effective as it now exists, the most natural and easy course, as I have said, would have been to extend these laws for another term or indefinitely. To enact an entirely new statute, however stringent and drastic, may again reopen all disputed questions to new construction by the courts, and the Chinese companies in the past have shown how determined they are to contest every inch of the ground.

I feel some apprehension that, while attempting to close the controversy, we may in fact reopen it and leave some unexpected loophole for further controversy.

This, however, is a question not of ultimate ends to be accomplished, but of the means by which they may be attained.

Confronted as we are with the danger of renewing active immigration from the most populous country on the globe, we may well apprehend the danger of a radical change in our population if we take no steps to stay the flood. Our country is the most desirable in the world in climate, soil, and natural advantages. It will be fully populated and in time contain as many inhabitants as it can well support.

The Damascus steel was the product of a combination of the various mines, but all the ore in the combination was the best of metal.

So the mingling of the blood of the different nations of the same race from Europe has produced and is producing a new people in our country.

The European nations furnish an ample supply from which to people this continent, and it is for us to choose whether the future progress of this young nation shall be clouded by adding the perils of a new Asiatic invasion.

Four hundred million Mongolians are within less than two weeks' distance from our Pacific shores, and the low price of transportation and high rate of wages in this country would induce an overwhelming tide of cool labor, which would reverse the course of our progress toward the general improvement of industrial conditions in the United States.

Our country is still in a great measure unoccupied and we are in a position to choose its future inhabitants. We declared some years ago that the Mongolian race was not a desirable addition to our population, and, with the world to choose from, we should select the best instead of the least desirable of the world's races.

We have racial problems enough without increasing their complexity.

In peopling this Republic labor is a prime necessity. But it is of the first importance that our working people should not only be citizens by birth or adoption, but worthy in all respects to exercise the duties as well as to enjoy the privileges of such citizenship.

A country whose natural attractions annually draw a half a million of immigrants may well select its adopted children and carefully choose only those who will in the next generation be Americans in the full sense of the word.

Near my home in Iowa is a colony of sturdy Hollanders from the shores of the North Sea. They are of that rugged stock who were the admiration of the world in their struggle for independence against the Spanish rule in the sixteenth century.

Fifty years ago that little colony at Pella bought its land, and so exclusive were they that the only two American-born settlers living in the township were bought out regardless of expense, so that none but those of Holland blood should occupy the land.

I visited that town two years ago at the reunion of a regiment partly recruited there, and 600 little school children, all carrying American flags, came out, singing, to meet us, and they were all American born and speaking what they fondly insist upon calling the "American language." They were as thoroughly American as if their ancestors had landed at Plymouth Rock or at Jamestown.

With stock of this sort you can not keep the Americans out, for in one generation, from being all foreigners, they become all Americans.

From nations like these we can draw our immigrants freely and safely. Their descendants are to the manor born.

When Prince Henry was with us I think the best thing attributed to him was his saying that he did not know any such thing as a "German-American." Americans were Americans to him, whether by birth or adoption. It has been to the honor of the German, the English, the Scotch, the Welsh, the Scandinavian, the Irish, and many other nationalities of Europe that, on arrival in America, they at once have set about the acquisition in the fullest and completest term the rights of American citizenship. The people who assimilate with us and who, in the next generation, are welded into the common mass of the great composite American race have always been and will ever be a welcome addition to our progressive country.

But the Mongolian comes to America for no such purpose, and could not adapt himself to our institutions if he were to try—and he has never tried. He comes as a bachelor, houseless and homeless. No family ties grow up around him to attach him to the soil. When he acquires enough to live upon in China he eagerly returns to his native land in that ancient civilization which was old when Moses led the children of Israel out of Egypt. Should the Chinaman die in America his bones are not permitted to fertilize our soil, but are carefully carried back to the home of his forefathers. When he is among us he is not of us. No man should eat anything that he can not digest. No immigrants should be taken into the body politic who can not be assimilated.

So by common consent, and regardless of party politics, we to-day are discussing the most effective method of preserving America for the Americans by admitting into our country only those who may be fitted to become an integral part of the citizenship of the American people. To continue our past policy in this regard is necessary for self-preservation. Enacting a protective law upon this question is a statutory recognition of the law of nature.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, it is interesting and gratifying to note that the Republican party, which was responsible for the annexation of Hawaii, and which is responsible for the present conditions in the Philippine Islands, even at this late day, are now engaged with us in an effort to protect labor against the scourge of the Asiatics. They sowed the winds, they will reap the whirlwinds.

In the Hawaiian Islands to-day, out of 154,000 population, there are only about 10,000 whites. Among the population there are 26,000 Chinese and 61,000 Japanese, who are an equal menace to American labor with the Chinese in the islands. The American Chamber of Commerce, of Manila, in the Philippine Islands, is petitioning members of Congress, is petitioning the President, to permit the admission of Chinese, and say in their petition that it is absolutely necessary in order to secure the promotion and advancement of the interests of the Philippines.

The petition sent us reads:

The American Chamber of Commerce, of Manila. An appeal to Congress for the enactment of laws allowing cooly labor to enter the Philippine Islands under such restrictions and laws as the Philippine Commission may from time to time enact.

To the Congress of the United States of America:

The American Chamber of Commerce, of Manila, P. I., respectfully represent to your honorable body that by authority and under instruction of resolution adopted at a full meeting of this chamber, held on the 3d day of January this chamber does petition and earnestly request the enactment of laws by Congress allowing cooly labor to enter the Philippine Islands under such restrictions and laws as the Philippine Commission may from time to time enact.

The present restrictive law does not benefit the Filipinos, nor is it of benefit to anyone. This labor will not enter into competition with American labor, and its entry into the Philippine Islands is imperatively needed.

Tobacco, hemp, and sugar plantations are only partially cultivated by reason of insufficiency of manual laborers. There are at present people in the city of Manila who came here for the purpose of investing in plantations, and to cultivate them upon lines in advance of the primitive ideas now in vogue. Investors are compelled to either leave these islands or await such time as laborers can be secured. This being the situation at present, without this legislation the Philippine Islands can not be properly developed.

Building in the city of Manila has been retarded for months, and only since the quarantine has been raised and those Chinese entitled to land have returned to these islands has building actively revived.

For the development of these islands, the urgent necessity for the immediate enactment of such laws can not be placed too strongly before Congress. For which relief this chamber, composed of American citizens, representing the commercial interests of the Philippines, does most respectfully pray.

F. E. GREEN, President.

ROGER AP C. JONES, Secretary.

The Hawaiian sugar planters are saying that white labor can not work in the Hawaiian Islands, and that the rice industry and other industries will be injured, if not entirely destroyed, unless Chinese labor is admitted to the islands. This opinion was rather forecast by the distinguished Commission that visited the islands before the organic law was passed.

This petition comes to us from Hawaii:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, greeting:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, do hereby represent—First. That the present and future prosperity of this nation depends in a great measure on the maintenance of the present high standard of living of its inhabitants.

Second. That this standard can not be maintained if the sphere of the American mechanic is invaded by the hordes of Asia, whose mode of life enables them to live comfortably on a sum which to an American would be a mere pittance.

Third. That at present fully 75 per cent of all the labor of the Hawaiian Islands, both skilled and unskilled, is being performed entirely by Orientals.

Fourth. That practically all the labor, both skilled and unskilled, which has been performed on buildings and grounds in this Territory for the Federal Government has been and is still being performed entirely by Japanese and Chinese, to the entire exclusion of competent American mechanics, who, by reason of these conditions, are at present forced into almost complete idleness.

Fifth. That the population of the Hawaiian Territory is 150,000, of whom the Chinese and Japanese number nearly 87,000, the Americans about 5,000, and the natives 37,000.

Sixth. That by rigidly excluding all Orientals from this Territory and from the United States conditions would soon become such that American citizens would be enabled to earn a living for themselves and families, which they are now practically unable to do on account of the deplorable and entirely un-American conditions now existing here.

Seventh. That, for the reasons above set forth, your petitioners earnestly ask that suitable legislation be framed the results of which would be—

First. The complete exclusion of both Japanese and Chinese or their descendants from American territory.

Second. The requirement that all labor of every description whatsoever which is performed for the Federal Government shall be done by, and only by, citizens of the United States.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

The Manila Critic editorially appeals to Congress in an article headed "Cooly labor necessary," saying that it is necessary for the exploitation of this noncontinental part of the country—that the Republicans admitted within our domains—that it is absolutely necessary to have cooly labor to exploit all the enterprises there. This is what it says in its issue of March 3, 1902:

The Chinese-exclusion bill which the Pacific coast representatives have agreed to support is a direct menace to the very best interests of the Philippine Islands, and if it should pass would render well-nigh impossible the exploitation of these islands by the Americans, and would cause an irretrievable loss of much capital now in the archipelago. The bill denies the right of entry to the Chinese not only into the mainland ports of the United States but also into any of the insular possessions, including the Philippines.

The cumulative evidence of many years proves that the native labor here is not to be depended upon. If the business of the archipelago be developed as it can be and ought to be, the services of the Chino are absolutely necessary. It is to be hoped that the memorial of the American Chamber of Commerce and the recommendation of the Commission will raise up some friends for the Philippines in Congress. It is late to contemplate the idea, probably, but an authorized delegation of business men in Washington would be very valuable just now.

And again in like manner and in the same issue it says:

THE SLOPE AND THE CHINOS.

At a meeting of the Senators and Representatives of the Pacific slope held in Washington the following paragraph was adopted, to be made a part of the Chinese-exclusion bill now pending in Congress:

"That from and after the passage of this act the entry into the American mainland territory of the United States of Chinese laborers coming from any of the insular possessions of the United States shall be absolutely prohibited, and the prohibition shall apply to all Chinese laborers, as well as to such as were in insular possessions at the time or times of acquisition thereof respectively by the United States, or to those who have come there since and those who have been born there since, and those who may come there hereafter and those who may hereafter be born there."

It will be noticed that the paragraph contains nothing that will prevent the importation of cooly contract labor in the archipelago, and Congress will doubtless be governed by the recommendations of the Commission in that regard; therefore the recent communications to the American Chamber of Commerce becomes of additional importance.

This Manila newspaper was sent to the members of Congress, evidently with the intention of giving us the real conditions in reference to labor that prevails there.

It is clear that an article signed "Observer," which bears the earmarks of one having authority and knowing whereof he speaks, in the same issue had a like purpose. It reads:

COOLY LABOR NECESSARY.

With the several requests already made on the Philippines for a labor supply for other countries, the question as to what this country will do for a stable and assured labor in the future is brought very distinctly to mind. Regarding the new territory of the United States, Hawaii, it must be borne in mind that the country now asking for labor is practically without a labor supply of its own, and is dependent on other lands for men to till its fields and carry on the necessary work of its different business and plantations.

The conditions are quite similar in many ways to the state of affairs here, notwithstanding the fact that in these islands there is an ample supply of men perfectly able physically to work, but apparently without the disposition to exert themselves any more or for a longer time than is necessary to accumulate a few pesos for food, fiesta, or cockfight. In the one instance the money investor and producer is unable to secure a home labor for the reason that it is very limited and not nearly sufficient for the needs, and in the other case, while the supply is ample the quality does not seem, from general appearance and experience, to be trustworthy enough to be depended on in time of real necessity.

In all agricultural pursuits there are certain seasons of the year in which the entire success of the twelve months' work and expense is dependent on the time in which harvesting must be accomplished, else the complete loss of the crop will follow. Especially at this time is it required that the employer should be assured of such labor as can be depended on for the work in hand, and in order to do this he is necessarily compelled to keep a greater number of men under pay through part of the year, in which he derives little benefit from their names on his pay roll.

Now, with ignorant labor under the control of a gang or labor boss, and subject to his will and dictation, the boss will possess absolute control of the plantation owner's interest and be able to dictate the price of his men at the time when it is absolutely required that the employer shall have men or suffer the loss of his entire investment for the year. If large capital is expected to seek this country as a field for investment in tropical agricultural pursuits, it must be borne in mind that the success of a plantation is dependent on labor for its welfare, and until this matter is settled beyond a reasonable doubt capital will not be overanxious to locate in a place where it is not assured of a reasonable amount of protection by the law.

Ignorant labor can not be controlled by honeyed phrases or fair treatment at all times. The cooly class is not gifted with any unusual amount of judgment in matters beyond the present, and if left to its own way in work which would be better done at once in place of the future, no place dependent on it would ever see a successful year. The only way of settling the question for the general welfare of the country in general would seem to be the enactment of a just and fair contract law, under which the laborer would be given every protection of the laws of the country, yet at the same time would be bound in such a way that he could be compelled to work in times of necessity, provided of course that his health and general condition were not affected.

This country is naturally an agricultural country, and its wealth in that line is equal, at least, to any other country in the world. Its development depends entirely on the question of labor, and it is not a question to be passed over without the most serious of thought and consideration.

OBSERVER.

It is gratifying, Mr. Chairman, to find, even after this one step of misfortune, that the Republican party are closing the door after the steed is stolen, and are seeking to avoid the evils of their former action, and are trying under the whip and spur of the minority to protect the great American laboring interests from the scourge of the Chinese. But with all these islands admitted, with the coasts that need defense and patrol to keep them out, with the cupidity of the navigation corporations that have brought so many to our shores, how are you going to defend American labor in Hawaii, in the Philippine Islands, in Porto Rico, or in the Danish West Indies when you admit such territories as these into the domain of the United States?

Rapid transit on land and sea, the swiftness and ease of telegraphic and other communication, and the facilities for combinations of enterprises have of themselves produced in recent years an evolution, if not a revolution, in labor. Economic changes that come as the result of improvement in human agencies and affairs, and are not the outgrowth of selfishness, should be heralded as benefactions; and though they affect in a measure established conditions, ultimately they will show results of universal good. It is not to such changes that I shall address myself, but to the process now going on which seems to be bringing the labor of different classes and different climes to a common level.

If any benefit arises to American labor from the acquisition of the insular possession, it must be in profit from labor performed on American soil outside of the islands acquired. The distance of the islands, the climate, and the labor conditions bring no hope for the profitable employment of American labor either in Hawaii, in Porto Rico, or in the Philippine Islands.

The Hawaiian Islands, lying 2,100 miles southwest of San Francisco, were the first acquisition under the recent policy of expansion. They were annexed by a resolution of Congress passed July 7, 1898. The area of the eight islands of the group is 6,740 square miles, equaling in extent the State of New Jersey, one fifth the area of Indiana. Although these islands had treaty relations with the United States from the year 1826 and with England and France from almost the same period and frequent communication with these and other European countries, yet at the time of annexation in 1898, out of a total population of 110,000, we find the following distribution in races and countries: Americans, 3,086; British, 2,250; Germans, 1,432, and French, 101. At that time there were 21,600 Chinese, 24,400 Japanese, 15,200 Portuguese, and 39,500 native Hawaiians and mixed Hawaiians. Of the total population two-thirds were males.

The principal industries of the islands in the order of their importance are sugar, rice, and coffee, the latter but slightly developed. The Chinese and the Japanese work in the sugar mills and on the plantations. Americans and Europeans can not work in the marshy land required for the cultivation of rice, and as the Japanese decline to do so, this work is performed almost entirely by the Chinese.

After the islands were annexed in 1898 something like 40,000 Japanese laborers were brought in under a labor contract similar in terms to that under which nearly all the Chinese and Japanese theretofore had been bound. The obligation of these contracts was dissolved by the act of Congress providing a government for Hawaii, passed April 13, 1900; but the laborers remain and work at wages ranging from $15 to $17 a month and furnish their own board and clothes.

The resolution of annexation provided that a commission of five should investigate and report legislation deemed necessary and proper. In its report on the labor conditions we find this statement: "The question whether white labor can be profitably utilized in the sugar plantations is yet a problem." This report was made by Senator CULLOM as chairman of the commission. With these labor conditions prevailing, and with the large proportion of cheap oriental laborers already there, the problem of labor seems to be solved in favor of the oriental elements of the population.

The Japanese show an adaptability and quickness, an alertness and ambition that are menacing labor, not only in Hawaii, but in the States along the Pacific coast as well. By the annexation resolution it was provided that nothing therein contained should be construed to permit the Chinese in the islands to enter the United States, and by the subsequent organic law for the government of the islands they were expressly prohibited from doing so.

As the islands were annexed without any restrictions in the act, like those imposed on Porto Rico, it is doubtful whether the Chinese in Hawaii can be excluded from the United States. Be that as it may with reference to the Chinese already there, yet there is a real menace to American labor in the Japanese immigration to the United States.

The Chinese are prohibited from coming to our country by the Chinese-exclusion act; but, stringent as the act is, they hover along the northwestern and northeastern boundaries and break across; and in this way and through Mexico thousands come into the United States every year. This system, encouraged by navigation and transportation companies engaged in the traffic and in collusion with agents, greatly harasses the United States authorities, who so far have been unable successfully to cope with it.

Japan, with its 40,000,000 of population, is a greater menace to this country than is China with her 400,000,000. This is due to the difference in the characteristics of the people.

The Chinese are conservative and religiously attached to their country, and always expect to return to it. The Japanese are bold, adept, and alert, and when they secure a favorable location they hope always to remain. The Japanese are quick to learn and adapt themselves to surroundings with great facility.

The Commissioner-General of Immigration in his last report referred to the increase of Japanese immigration and expressed the opinion that unless checked it would produce serious trouble where aliens are used as cheap laborers to take the place of American workmen.

It may be inquired why legislation similar to the Chinese-exclusion act is not enacted against the Japanese. In some sense at least the answer can be traced to the policy of expansion. We have in the Japanese treaty of 1894 a saving clause which reserves to the United States a right to legislate as it will with reference to the immigration of laborers from Japan; but in the late Chinese troubles the favors shown by Japan in quickly responding with troops, and the aid she gave to the allies, gives her a prestige that seems to cause our Government to hesitate in taking any drastic measures against Japanese immigration. It should be restricted by a law similar to the Chinese-exclusion act.

The difficulties now encountered in the enactment of laws and their enforcement will only be augmented by the increase of interests in the opposite direction, by the increase of lines and borders to be guarded, and by the acquisition of islands which must perforce furnish bases from which cheap labor can more readily enter into the United States.

The observations I have suggested on the exclusion from profitable employment of the American in the Hawaiian Islands obtain also with reference to the Philippines, where he must come into competition with the Chinese, the Japanese, and the Filipinos. The Filipino has many of the characteristics of the Japanese, and if the same free ingress to this country is accorded them as is given to the Japanese the like evil will result. The conditions in Porto Rico with reference to labor are not dissimilar to those prevailing in the two other insular possessions, save that there are no Chinese and Japanese; and the native Porto Ricans are not a class with which Americans can compete in price of wage.

In addition to this comparison of the Philippines with Hawaii, we find in the report of the Philippine Commission, under the head of public health, a condition, climatic and otherwise, that would make it impossible for American labor to find a field for occupation. It says:

There is a custom prevailing in Manila of keeping within doors from 12 to 3, which is universally commended. It is doubtful whether the white race could work in the sun.

It is clear from the facts and conditions I have mentioned that American laborers have not profited in expansion by securing a field for their labor outside of their own country, nor are they secure against the influx into the United States of those against whom they can not compete abroad.

It is well known, also, and recognized that American labor is not, and will not be, preferred in manning vessels on the sea, if profit alone is looked to; for the American can not work for the wages on board ship that people of many foreign countries are willing to take.

Therefore the conclusion must be drawn that the American laboring man must expect to profit, under the present policy of expansion, from labor performed in this country, and not from that in fields to which he might go. It is equally clear that he must be protected against the incoming flood of labor, cheaper than his own, or he will suffer.

Mr. Chairman, the pathway for the Republican party and for its representatives in this House—knowing, as they do, of these evils; knowing that these evils are here—is to face the problem and stand against the labor conditions in the Philippine Islands and in the insular possessions—stand against the Chinese and Japanese and the cheap labor scourge in the Philippine Islands—by declaring upon this floor and in this Congress that it is the purpose of the United States to establish a stable form of government in the Philippines, and then let that government and its people take care of the million or two millions of Chinese and Japanese there themselves. The Democracy in Congress in the meantime is performing its duty and promoting the cause of the laboring man of this country, who will hold the party in power responsible for the condition that exists to-day as to the Chinese and the Japanese in our insular possessions.

It is a cause of congratulation that the Democratic minority of this House has presented a substitute for the bill recommended by the Republican majority of the committee.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has rendered his party and his country a signal and valuable service in presenting for the Democratic minority its substitute, and in so vigorously presenting the principles embodied in it, and such as should inspire every American.

With the courtesy of the House, I present with my remarks the substitute bill of the minority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the report of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] thereon. It reads:

APPENDIX.

The question of Chinese exclusion is largely a racial question and largely a labor question.

Because our Pacific coast is the chief place of entrance of Chinese into our country, because a vast majority of Chinese immigrants settle on the Pacific coast, and because American citizens resident on the Pacific coast have had more experience with Chinese than the rest of our people, they understand the Chinese character better and are better fitted to know what legislation is necessary to solve the numerous and difficult problems connected with Chinese immigration.

The substitute proposed is substantially the bill desired by our Pacific coast citizens and by the laborers of the whole country.

The substitute is identical with Senate bill 2960, as reported to the Senate unanimously by the Committee on Immigration, except section 56 of said Senate bill, for which the minority recommended the following:

"Sec. 56. That nothing in the provisions of this act shall be construed to prevent the admission of Chinese into the United States for the purpose of participating in any fair or exposition authorized by act of Congress: Provided, That such admission be in accordance with rules and regulations of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, prescribed with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The minority entertain some doubt as to the constitutionality of the following words of section 2 of the substitute: "And it shall also apply to those who have been born there since and to those who may be born there hereafter;" but because it is claimed that under the treaty of Paris Congress is charged with the duty of fixing the status of the people of the Philippine Islands, because our citizens of our Pacific coast and the laborers of the land are insistent on retaining the aforesaid words in the bill, and because their retention in the bill will compel a speedy judicial determination of the questions involved, the minority recommend that they be retained in the bill.

For the foregoing reasons the minority report the substitute and recommend that it be enacted into law.

Substitute for H. R. 19031.

A bill to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the coming, except under the conditions hereinafter specified, of Chinese laborers from any foreign country to the United States, its Territories, or any territory under its jurisdiction, shall be absolutely prohibited.

SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act the entry into the American-mainland territory of the United States of Chinese laborers coming from any of the insular territory of the United States shall be absolutely prohibited; and this prohibition shall apply to all Chinese laborers, as well to those who were in such insular territory when the same was acquired by the United States as to those who have come there since, and it shall also apply to those who have been born there since and to those who may be born there hereafter. And the same prohibition of entry shall apply to Chinese laborers coming to one island of the United States from any other insular territory of the United States, except territory of a group whereof such island is a member. But the privileges of transit hereinafter given to other Chinese persons are hereby given to Chinese laborers in all territory of the United States, subject to the conditions hereinafter expressed.

SEC. 3. That the term "laborer," used in this act, shall be construed to mean both skilled and unskilled manual laborers, Chinese persons employed in mining, fishing, huckstering, peddling, or laundry work, and those engaged in taking, drying, or otherwise preserving shellfish or other fish for home consumption or exportation; and every Chinese person shall be deemed a laborer, within the meaning of this act, who is not an official, a teacher, a student, a merchant, or a traveler for curiosity or pleasure, as hereinafter defined.

SEC. 4. That from and after the passage of this act the privilege of Chinese persons other than laborers to enter or remain in the United States shall be restricted to officials, teachers, students, merchants, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure, as hereinafter defined.

SEC. 5. That the term "official," used in the foregoing section, shall be construed to mean only one who, being in the service of a foreign government, is regularly accredited as such by the home government he represents, or, if he be a consul of China, is regularly accredited as such under the usual practice of the Imperial Chinese Government; but the attendants and servants of any such official shall be similarly privileged to enter, on being identified as such attendants or servants, in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 6. That the term "teacher," used in this act, shall be construed to mean only one who, for not less than two years next preceding his application for entry into the United States, has been continuously engaged in giving instruction in the higher branches of education, and who proves to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer that he is qualified to teach such higher branches and has completed arrangements to teach in a recognized institution of learning in the United States and intends to pursue no other occupation than teaching while in the United States.

SEC. 7. That the term "student," used in this act, shall be construed to mean only one who intends to pursue some of the higher branches of study, or to be fitted for some particular profession or occupation for which adequate facilities for study are not afforded in the foreign country or the territory of the United States whence he comes, and for whose support while studying sufficient provision has been made, and who intends to depart from the territory of the United States immediately on the completion of his studies.

SEC. 8. That the term "merchant," used in this act, shall be construed to mean only one who is engaged in buying and selling merchandise, at a fixed place of business, and who, during the time he claims to be a merchant, does not engage in the performance of any manual labor, except such as is necessary in the conduct of his business as such merchant.

And where an application is made by a Chinese person for entry into the United States as one formerly or at the time engaged in China as a merchant, or in some other foreign country as a merchant, or where such application calls for entry into one portion of the United States from another portion thereof, then, as a prerequisite to entry, the applicant must have been engaged as a merchant for at least one year next preceding his application; and it must appear to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer at the port of entry that he comes to exercise in good faith his calling as a merchant, and that calling exclusively, and that he has the means under his immediate control for forthwith becoming, and has completed the arrangements for forthwith becoming, the owner, in whole or in part, of a good-faith mercantile business in the United States or any portion of the territory thereof, a business strictly within the meaning given by this act to the business of a "merchant."

And where an application is made by a Chinese person for entry into the United States as one formerly engaged in the United States as a merchant, he shall, unless he produce the return certificate hereinafter provided for, establish to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer, by the testimony of two credible witnesses other than Chinese, that he conducted such business as hereinbefore defined for at least one year before his departure from the United States, and that during said year he was not engaged in the performance of any manual labor except such as was necessary in the conduct of his business as such merchant; and in default of such proof it shall be held that he is not a merchant within the meaning of this act.

SEC. 9. That the term "traveler" used in this act shall be construed to mean only one who shall establish to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer that he is in present possession of adequate funds for paying the costs of the intended travel within the territory of the United States and that his purpose in seeking entry is in good faith solely to travel for pleasure or curiosity, and who intends to depart from the territory into which he is permitted to pass promptly on the conclusion of his itinerary.

SEC. 10. That the prohibition of section one shall not apply to the return to the United States of any registered Chinese laborer who has a lawful wife, child, or parent in the United States, or property therein of the value of $1,000, or debts therein of like amount due him and pending settlement. This exception is subject to the following provisions:

First. A "registered Chinese laborer" is: (a) One who, being lawfully a resident of Hawaii or the American-mainland territory of the United States at the time of the passage of this act, is the rightful holder of a certificate of residence issued to him under the acts of Congress in effect at the time of the passage of this act affecting exclusion of Chinese persons from the United States, such certificate being valid and operative at the time of the passage of this act. And every such certificate of residence valid and operative at the time of the passage of this act is hereby continued valid and operative, but in accordance with the provisions of this act. (b) One who, being lawfully a resident of any of the insular territory of the United States (Hawaii excepted) at the time of the passage of this act, rightfully obtains and retains a certificate of residence therein under subsequent provisions of this act.

Second. The marriage to the wife referred to by this section must have taken place at least one year prior to the application of the laborer for permission to return, and must have been followed by continuous cohabitation of the parties as husband and wife. And it must appear that the applicant had no other wife (under Chinese or other laws or customs) living at the time of such marriage.

Third. If the right to return be claimed on the ground of property or debts, it must appear: (a) In the case of property, that the ownership is of property other than money and is in good faith; that the requisite minimum value is over all incumbrances, liens, and offsets, and that the title was not colorably acquired for the purpose of evading this act. (b) In the case of debts, that the debtor is solvent; that the amount due is not less than the required sum, clear of offsets and discounts; that the debts do not consist of promissory notes or similar acknowledgments of ascertained or settled liability, and that the indebtedness was not created with a view to evasion of this act.

Fourth. It must appear, where family, property, or debt qualifications are relied on, that the applicant possesses them at the time of return to the United States as well as at the time of departure therefrom.

SEC. 11. That a Chinese laborer claiming the right to return to the United States on any of the grounds stated in the foregoing section shall apply to the appropriate Treasury officer of the district in which he resides, at least one month prior to the time of his departure, said application to be accompanied by his certificate of residence, and said Chinese laborer shall make under oath before the said officer a full statement, in triplicate, descriptive of his family, or property, or debts, as the case may be, and shall furnish to said officer such proof of the facts entitling him to return as shall be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and for any false swearing in relation thereto he shall incur the penalties imposed by law for perjury.

He shall permit the said officer to take a full description of his person, which description the said officer shall retain and mark with a number.

The original and each copy of said statement shall contain the photograph of the applicant, made at the time and in the manner required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The original of said statement shall be retained by the Treasury officer before whom it is made, and the duplicate and triplicate copies thereof shall be by him transmitted to the appropriate Treasury officer at the port whence the applicant intends to depart from the United States.

And if the last-named officer, after hearing the proofs and investigating all the circumstances of the case, shall decide to issue a certificate of return, he shall, at such time and place as he may designate, sign and give to the said applicant a certificate containing the number of the description last aforesaid, which shall be the sole evidence given to such person of his right to return.

If the last-named certificate be transferred it shall become void, and the person to whom it was originally issued shall forfeit his right to return to the United States.

The right to return under said certificate shall be limited to two years from the date of leaving the United States.

And no Chinese laborer shall be permitted to reenter the United States without producing to the appropriate Treasury officer at the place of such entry the return certificate herein required. A laborer presenting a certificate of return required by this section shall be admitted to the United States only at the port from which he departed.

But no Chinese person, whether laborer or of another class, other than Chinese diplomatic or consular officers and their suites, shall be permitted to enter the United States except at the ports of San Francisco, Portland (Oregon), Port Townsend, Boston, New York, New Orleans, Manila, Honolulu, San Juan (Porto Rico), or such other ports as may be designated by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, subject to the restrictions imposed by section 26.

SEC. 12. That it shall be the duty of every Chinese laborer rightfully in, and entitled to remain in, any of the insular territory of the United States (Hawaii excepted), at the time of the passage of this act, to obtain within six months after the passage of this act a certificate of residence in the mainland territory or the insular territory wherein he resides.

To obtain such certificate he shall apply to the appropriate Treasury officer, who, if satisfied on inquiry that the applicant is rightfully within the United States and rightfully within the portion of the territory of the United States where he applies, shall issue to him such certificate without charge. The certificate shall contain the name, age, local residence, and occupation of the applicant, his personal signature, and such other matter as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. It shall further contain the photograph of the applicant, made at the time and in the manner required by said rules and regulations. A duplicate of the certificate shall be retained by the officer issuing the original, and the duplicate shall contain a duplicate photograph, provided as in the case of the original.

Any person bound under this section to obtain a certificate of residence who shall neglect, fail, or refuse to comply with the provisions hereof, or who, after the expiration of the said six months, shall be found within the jurisdiction of the United States without such certificate of residence, shall be deemed and adjudged to be unlawfully within the United States, and may be arrested by any officer of the United States and taken before a United States judge, or before a commissioner of any United States court to be designated by a United States attorney; and it shall be the duty of said judge or said commissioner to order that he be deported from the United States unless he shall clearly establish to the satisfaction of said judge or commissioner that by reason of accident, sickness, or other unavoidable cause he has been unable to procure his certificate, and that the six months time limit aside, he is rightfully entitled to such certificate; and if upon showing it shall appear that he is thus circumstanced, a certificate of residence shall be granted him.

No person shall be given a certificate of residence under any section of this act or be entitled to a reissue of any lost certificate of residence who, prior to his application therefor, shall have been convicted of any crime within the jurisdiction of the United States or any State or Territory or insular territory thereof. Any such person, being thus without such certificate, shall be deported.

Immediately after the passage of this act the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe and enforce all needful rules and regulations for the registration and certifications by this section required, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint the officers for effecting such registration and certifications, authorizing the payment to them of such compensation in the nature of fees, in addition to their salaries as now allowed by law, as he shall deem necessary, not exceeding $1 for every certificate issued.

SEC. 13. That should it appear that any laborer to whom was lawfully issued a certificate of residence under this act has lost such certificate, or that it has been destroyed, he shall be given a new certificate by the appropriate Treasury officer, on establishing to the satisfaction of the United States judge or commissioner before whom he is brought for deportation that the loss or destruction was not in bad faith.

SEC. 14. That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to prevent the readmission of any Chinese laborer who departed from the United States prior to the passage of this act, possessing a return certificate valid under the acts repealed hereby: Provided, That on his return he comply with the requirements of the said acts hereby repealed.

SEC. 15. That to entitle such Chinese persons as are mentioned in section 4 to admission into the United States, or into any portion of the territory of the United States, they shall produce a certificate from their Government, or the government where they last resided, viséed by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence they depart; or if such persons are residents of the American-mainland territory of the United States and seek entry into any insular territory of the United States, or are residents of any insular territory of the United States and seek entry into other insular territory or into the American-mainland territory of the United States, then such certificate shall have been issued by the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States.

SEC. 16. That the certificate mentioned in the preceding section shall be in the English language, shall be made in triplicate, and shall contain the personal signature of the person to whom issued; and it shall state his individual, family, and tribal names in full, his title and official rank, if any, his age, height, and all physical peculiarities, his former and present occupation or profession, and (in detail) when, where, and for how long pursued, and his residence and such other particulars as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. If the said person be a merchant, the certificate shall state, in addition to the aforesaid matter, the nature and estimated value of the business carried on by him prior to and at the time of his application therefor, and the duration of his continuance in such business. If the certificate be sought for the purpose of travel for pleasure or curiosity, it shall state, in addition to the matter first aforesaid, whether the applicant intends to pass through, or travel within, the territory of the United States, and shall show his financial and class standing in the country or insular territory whence he comes.

In every case the original and each copy shall contain the photograph of the person to whom the certificate is issued, made in the manner and at the time required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 17. That before any representative of the United States shall visé any certificate of the kind mentioned in the preceding two sections, and before any Treasury officer of the United States shall issue any such certificate, he shall carefully examine into the facts of the particular case; and if he shall find, after inquiry that any of the statements of the certificate are false, or any of the statements the Chinese applicant seeks to have it contain are false, it shall be his duty to refuse to visé or to issue such certificate.

SEC. 18. That the original certificate issued under the last three sections shall be, by the said diplomatic or consular representative of the United States viséed, or the said Treasury officer issuing the same, delivered open to the Chinese person named therein.

The duplicate thereof shall be, by the said representative or the said Treasury officer, delivered, in a sealed envelope, suitably addressed, to the shipmaster, railway conductor, or other person in charge of the transportation of the person to whom the original is given, whose duty it shall be promptly to deliver it to the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States at the place where entry is sought by said Chinese person. Willful neglect or failure to perform this last-mentioned duty is hereby made punishable under section 53.

The triplicate thereof shall be, by the said representative or the said Treasury officer, immediately sent by mail to the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States at the port at which said Chinese person seeks entry.

SEC. 19. That the certificate mentioned in the four sections next preceding this section shall be, when duly viséed by the proper diplomatic or consular representative of the United States, or when issued regularly by the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States, as the case may be, prima facie evidence of the facts therein set forth, and shall be produced to the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States in the port in the United States at which the person named therein seeks entry; and if such entry is permitted, said certificate, properly indorsed by the appropriate Treasury officer, shall be returned to and retained by the person named therein, while he desires to remain in territory of the United States, as a means of indicating his original status, and it shall afterwards be produced to the proper authorities of the United States whenever lawfully demanded, and shall be the sole evidence permissible on the part of the person so producing it to establish a right of entry into the United States. But said certificate may be controverted, and the recitals thereof disproved, by the authorities of the United States. And if any of such recitals be disproved, or if any certificate be fraudulently used or in any manner forged or altered, then such certificate shall be null and shall be forthwith canceled.

SEC. 20. That in the case of a Chinese person who, being a member of any of the classes mentioned in section 4, is lawfully in the United States at the time of the passage of this act, the following provisions shall govern:

First. To enable the United States to identify him he shall be entitled to have issued to him by the appropriate Treasury officer a certificate of registration setting forth his personal signature, his name, his personal description, his residence, his occupation and place of pursuing it, together with such details concerning it and such other matter as may be required by rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. This certificate shall be made in duplicate, and the copy shall be retained by the officer issuing the certificate. The original and the copy shall each contain the photograph of the applicant, made as required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Persons entitled to such certificates who fail to obtain them shall be, in any proceeding inquiring into their status under this act, presumed to be laborers not entitled to remain within territory of the United States, but such presumption may be rebutted.

Second. When any Chinese person who, being a member of any of the classes mentioned in section 4, desires to depart from the United States or any portion of the territory thereof, intending to return thereto, he may, if he so desire, apply to the appropriate Treasury officer in the district wherein he resides, at least one month prior to the time of his departure, such application to be accompanied by his certificate of his registration, and in that event shall make under oath before said officer a full statement, in triplicate, descriptive of his professional, business, or other position or status, and shall furnish to said officer such proof of his status as shall be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and for any false swearing in relation thereto he shall incur the penalties imposed by law for perjury, and he shall permit the said officer to take a full description of his person, which description the said officer shall retain and mark with a number.

The original and each copy of said statement shall contain the photograph of the applicant, made at the time and in the manner required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The original of said statement shall be retained by the Treasury officer before whom it is made, and the copies thereof shall be by him transmitted to the appropriate Treasury officer at the port whence the applicant intends to depart from the United States.

And if said last-named officer, after hearing the proofs and investigating all the circumstances of the case, shall decide that the representations of status are true, he shall, at such time and place as he may designate, sign and give to the said applicant a certificate containing the number of the description last aforesaid, which shall be the sole evidence given to such person of his right to return.

If the last-named certificate be transferred, it shall become void, and the person to whom it was originally issued shall forfeit his right to reside in, or return to, the United States.

Third. To entitle any such Chinese person as is mentioned in this section to readmission to the United States or any portion of the territory thereof, he shall produce to the appropriate Treasury officer at the port of entry the return certificate in this section provided for; and he shall be permitted to reenter only at the port whence he departed. But it shall be the right of any such person to elect to waive all of the provisions of the second and third subdivisions of this section, and for readmission into the United States or any portion of the territory thereof to depend upon the provisions of section 8 and provisions in pursuance thereof.

SEC. 21. That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the entry into the United States, or any portion of the territory thereof, of the lawful wife or the minor children of any Chinese person of any of the classes mentioned in section 4 actually domiciled in the United States at the time of such proposed entry: Provided, That no such wife nor any of such children shall be permitted to enter who shall fail to establish to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer at the port of entry that the required relationship exists and to produce to him a certificate as follows:

First. If the wife or child come from a foreign country, the certificate shall have been issued to such person by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence such person departed, and shall show that after investigation said representative believes it to be true that the relationship asserted genuinely exists.

Second. If the wife or child come from any insular territory of the United States and seek entry into American mainland territory of the United States, or come from American mainland territory of the United States and seek entry into insular territory of the United States, or come from any insular territory of the United States and seek entry into other insular territory of the United States, the certificate shall have been issued by the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States at the port whence such person departed, and shall show that after investigation said officer believes it to be true that the relationship asserted genuinely exists.

Third. It is hereby made the duty of diplomatic and consular representatives of the United States, and of the appropriate Treasury officers, to make rigid investigations of all applications for such certificates, and to issue them when the relationship required and claimed is clearly established, but not otherwise.

Fourth. Each of said certificates shall be issued in triplicate and shall contain the photograph of the person named therein, and in addition to the matter already mentioned shall contain whatever may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. The photographs shall be made at the time and in the manner required by said rules and regulations.

The original certificate shall be, by the representative or officer issuing it, delivered open to the person named in it, or, if such person be an infant, to the person in charge of such infant.

The duplicate thereof shall be, by said representative or officer, delivered in a sealed envelope, duly addressed to the shipmaster, railway conductor, or other person in charge of the transportation of the person for whom the original is available, whose duty it shall be to deliver it promptly to the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States at the port where entry is sought by said Chinese person. Willful neglect or failure to perform this last-mentioned duty is hereby made punishable under section 53.

The triplicate thereof shall be, by the representative or officer issuing the certificate, immediately sent by mail to the appropriate Treasury officer at the port where said Chinese person seeks entry.

Provided, That no woman shall be entitled to enter under this section unless she shall establish, by such proof as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, that she is the primary and lawful wife of a member of one of the classes enumerated in section 5, under a marriage contracted in such manner as to be legal and binding in the United States.

SEC. 22. That the preceding sections shall not apply to Chinese diplomatic or consular officers or their attendants or servants, who shall be admitted to the United States under special instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury, without production of other evidence than that of personal identity.

Other Chinese officers of China or any other foreign government shall establish their identity as such, and the identity of their attendants and servants, in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 23. That before any Chinese person is landed from any vessel on territory of the United States, or, in case of inland immigration, before any Chinese brought to any inland border port of the United States shall be permitted to leave the car or other conveyance in which he was brought thither, the appropriate Treasury officer shall examine such Chinese person, comparing his certificate with the lists given under succeeding provisions hereof, and also with such Chinese person; and no Chinese person shall be allowed to land or to enter in violation of law. The examination and comparisons herein required shall be made immediately after the arrival at port or border.

SEC. 24. That the master of any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place shall, immediately on arriving and before landing or permitting to land any Chinese passenger, deliver to the appropriate Treasury officer of the customs districts in which such vessel shall have arrived a separate list of all Chinese persons taken on board his vessel at any port or place, and all such persons on board the vessel at that time. Such list shall show the names of such persons (and in the case of accredited officers of the Chinese or other foreign Government traveling on the business of such Government, or their servants or attendants, a note setting forth such facts), the port or place at which each was taken on board, and such particulars as to each as are shown by their respective certificates hereinbefore required, and such other information as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and such list shall be sworn to by the master in the manner required by law in cases of manifests of cargo.

The foregoing requirements shall apply also to the masters of all vessels arriving in the American-mainland territory of the United States from any of the insular territory of the United States; and to the masters of all vessels arriving at any point in any such insular territory from the American-mainland territory of the United States, and to the masters of all vessels arriving in the Philippine Islands, Hawaii, Porto Rico, or any other insular territory of the United States from any other insular territory of the United States.

Any refusal or willful neglect of any such master to comply with the provisions of this section shall incur the same penalties and forfeiture provided for a refusal to report and deliver a manifest of cargo.

SEC. 25. That in the case of Chinese persons brought to an inland border port of the United States, the railway conductor or other person so bringing them shall, immediately on arriving there and before enabling or permitting any such Chinese person to cross the border into territory of the United States, deliver to the appropriate Treasury officer a list of all Chinese persons so brought. Such list shall show the names of all such Chinese persons (and in the case of accredited officers of the Chinese or other foreign Government, traveling on the business of such Government, or their servants and attendants, a note setting forth such facts), the port or place at which each was taken in charge, and such particulars as to each as are shown by their respective certificates hereinbefore required, and such other information as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and such list shall be sworn to by the person bound to deliver it, the oath to be administered by the said Treasury officer.

Any refusal or willful neglect of any such conductor or other person bound to deliver such list to comply with the provisions of this section shall be deemed a felony and shall be punishable under section 53. Should the offender not be subject to punishment in the United States, then any rule or regulation which may be made by the Secretary of the Treasury for cases of that class shall be enforced; and as well against his employer as against himself, if his employer be a person or corporation interested in the transportation of the Chinese person as to whom the offense was committed.

SEC. 26. That Chinese laborers shall continue to enjoy the privilege of transit across territory of the United States in the course of their journey to or from other countries, subject to the following provisions:

First. Privilege of transit shall be denied if the applicant fail to produce to the appropriate Treasury officer at the port where entry is sought a through ticket entitling said applicant to transportation from such port to the point of ultimate destination in the foreign country whither he claims to be bound, such ticket in good faith requiring transit across territory of the United States and having been fully paid for; or if he fail to produce, additionally, to the said officer a certificate as follows: (a) If the applicant come from a foreign country, the certificate shall have been issued to him by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence he departed, and shall show that after investigation said representative believed it to be true that said applicant intended to go directly to, and to reside in, the foreign country designated, and did not seek to abuse the privilege of transit applied for; (b) if the applicant come from any insular territory of the United States and seek the privilege of transit across American-mainland territory of the United States, or come from American-mainland territory of the United States and seek the privilege of transit across insular territory of the United States, or come from any insular territory of the United States and seek the privilege of transit across other insular territory of the United States, then the certificate shall have been issued to him by the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States at the port or place whence said applicant departed, and shall show that after investigation said officer believed it to be true that said applicant intended to go directly to, and to reside in, the foreign country designated, and did not seek to abuse the privilege of transit applied for.

And it is hereby made the duty of the diplomatic and consular representatives of the United States and of the appropriate Treasury officers of the United States to investigate all applications for the said certificates, and to issue such certificates where the applications are shown to be in good faith, but not otherwise, and in such form and carrying such additional information as shall be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

But the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may at any time suspend the privilege of transit in any case or in all cases where the transit is sought by laborers coming from any insular territory of the United States.

Second. Privilege of transit shall be denied if the applicant refuse or fail to submit to such examination of his person and baggage and to such investigation as may be deemed necessary by the appropriate Treasury officer at the port where entry for the exercise of such privilege is sought, or if he fail to establish to the satisfaction of said officer that he intends to proceed directly and immediately to the ultimate destination which is named in his certificate, and is not seeking to abuse the said privilege.

Third. Privilege of transit shall be denied if the applicant shall first have sought admission into the United States or some Territory thereof otherwise than for the purpose of transit and shall have been refused such admission.

Fourth. Privilege of transit shall be denied if the applicant fail to comply with any rule or regulation which the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may from time to time prescribe with a view to prevention of abuse of such privilege.

Fifth. The master of any vessel, the conductor of any railway train, or the manager or director of any other conveyance bringing to any port in the United States, or on the border thereof, any applicant for the privilege of transit shall, immediately after arrival there and before landing or permitting to land, or enabling or permitting to cross the border, as the case may be, any such applicant, deliver to the appropriate Treasury officer of the United States a separate list of all such applicants so brought, which list shall show the name of each applicant, the matter contained in the certificate he bears, and such other matter as may be required by the rules and regulations from time to time prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and this list shall be sworn to by the person bound to deliver it, the oath to be administered by the said officer to whom it is delivered. Failure to comply with any of the requirements of this subdivision shall be punishable in the case of masters of vessels as in violations of section 21, and in the case of others as in violations of section 22.

Sixth. The Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall designate the ports at which entry into the United States or particular territory thereof for the purpose of exercising the privilege of transit may be granted to persons entitled to exercise said privilege; and said privilege shall be exercisable at no other ports or places. But in the case of entry along the boundary between the United States and the Republic of Mexico and the boundary between the United States and the Dominion of Canada said designation shall be subject to this restriction: No place along either of said boundaries shall be so designated, nor shall any port along either of said boundaries be designated as a place of entry for any Chinese person whatever, whether in transit or otherwise, until there shall have been executed between the said Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, on the part of the United States, and the persons or corporations purposing to bring Chinese to such port contracts binding such persons and corporations to observe all the laws and regulations of the United States relating to exclusion, entry, or transit of Chinese persons, under such money penalties as shall be set forth in said contracts; and no such port shall remain open to entry of Chinese persons, in transit or otherwise, beyond the life of such contracts in unviolated state. But the said Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may at any time close any such port to transit privilege if in his judgment such privilege is being abused there.

SEC. 27. That every Chinese person brought by vessel to any port of the United States shall be detained aboard such vessel until a final decision shall have been rendered as to the right of such Chinese person to enter the United States, or any portion of the territory thereof, for any purpose; and every Chinese person brought to an inland border port of the United States shall be detained at such port until a final decision shall have been rendered as to the right of such Chinese person to enter the United States, or any portion of the territory thereof, for any purpose; and in the first class of cases the duty of such detention shall rest on the master, owner, agent, and consignee of the vessel concerned, collectively and singly, and in the second class of cases said duty shall rest on the person, persons, corporation, or agent, collectively and singly, by whom said Chinese person was transported or aided to the inland border port: Provided, That Chinese persons may be otherwise and elsewhere detained pending such final decisions, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may from time to time prescribe: And provided, That no right of entry or residence and no privilege of transit shall result to any such Chinese persons by reason of temporary detention and landing authorized under such rules and regulations, and that no release from liability or obligation under this act shall be worked by such temporary detention and landing in favor of any vessel, or the master, owner, consignee, or agent of any vessel, or any other person or corporation whatsoever.

Every person bound under this section to detain a Chinese person who shall refuse or willfully neglect promptly to perform such duty shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 28. That every Chinese person finally refused admission to the United States must be returned to the country of which he is a citizen or subject immediately after such refusal.

The duty of returning said Chinese person is hereby imposed on the master, owner, consignee, or agent of the vessel, and on the railway corporation, its general officers and agents, and on the owners or general officers and agents of other transportation lines or modes of conveyance, collectively and severally, bringing him to the port at which entry is denied him or aiding him thither.

But the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may elect to effect such return in some other way than as above prescribed, and at the expense of the United States, in which case the vessel, persons, or corporations that would otherwise have been bound to effect such return shall be jointly and severally liable to the United States for the costs thereof.

And in every case such vessel, persons, or corporation shall be jointly and severally liable to the United States for all costs connected with the inquiry concerning the right of such Chinese person to enter or pass through the United States or any portion of the territory thereof.

The provisions of this section shall apply likewise in every case where a Chinese person is brought from any insular territory of the United States to the American-mainland territory of the United States, and in every case where a Chinese person is brought to any insular territory of the United States from said mainland territory. But in any case where a Chinese person is brought to any insular territory of the United States from other insular territory thereof, he shall, when refused admission or transit, be deported to China.

Every person bound under this section to return a Chinese person, who shall refuse or willfully neglect promptly to perform such duty, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000 for every Chinese person not returned as required, or by imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment: Provided, That any subordinate officer, agent, or employee of any such vessel, railway corporation, other transportation line, or other mode of conveyance, who is charged with the duty as such subordinate officer, agent, or employee of returning any Chinese person, and shall refuse or willfully neglect promptly to perform such duty, shall be subject to all the pains and penalties imposed by this section upon persons bound to return a Chinese person who refuses or willfully neglects to do so.

SEC. 29. That every owner, officer, agent, or employee of any transportation line, railway corporation line, vessel, vehicle, or other mode of conveyance by sea or land who shall aid or abet or willfully or through neglect permit or connive at the escape of any Chinese person held in detention pending final adjudication of his claims, or as provided by sections 27 and 28 of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000 for every Chinese person not detained as required, or by imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 30. That every vessel whose master, owner, agent, or consignee shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed forfeited to the United States, and shall be liable to seizure and condemnation in any customs district of the United States wherein found. Violations of section 27 or section 28 are among the offenses to which this provision applies.

SEC. 31. That any person who, as principal or accessory, shall knowingly bring into or attempt to bring into or conspire to bring into the United States any Chinese person otherwise than as prescribed by this act, or who, pending a final decision as to the right of any Chinese person to enter or pass through territory of the United States, shall knowingly bring into or attempt to bring into or conspire to bring into territory of the United States such Chinese person, or who shall knowingly harbor or attempt to retain within or conspire to retain within the United States or any territory thereof any Chinese person unlawfully therein and subject to deportation therefrom, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not less than $2,000 or by imprisonment for a term not less than six months and not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 32. That any Chinese person found within any portion of the United States in violation of any provision of this act shall be arrested by any United States officer and shall be forthwith taken before a United States judge in the district wherein the arrest is made, or before the United States commissioner designated by the United States attorney of said district, who shall proceed to inquire into the case. Unless upon the hearing the person so arrested shall establish, by affirmative proof, to the satisfaction of said judge or commissioner, that he has a lawful right to be, or to remain in, the United States, or in the portion of the territory of the United States wherein found, it shall be the duty of said judge or commissioner to order that he be deported. It shall be the duty of the United States attorney of said district to attend the hearing, and the testimony of at least two credible witnesses other than Chinese shall be required to establish the right claimed.

SEC. 33. That if any Chinese person shall enter the United States or any portion of the territory thereof without having first obtained from the appropriate Treasury officer the required permission to enter, he shall be deported, notwithstanding that had he properly applied he would have been entitled to enter.

SEC. 34. That wherever herein it is provided that a Chinese person shall be deported it is meant:

First. In the case of a person who came from a foreign country, that he shall be forthwith returned thither or to the country of which he is a subject or citizen: Provided, That in any case where a country of which such person shall claim to be a subject or citizen shall demand any tax as a condition of the removal of such person to that country, he shall be sent to China.

Second. In the case of a person who came without right from one portion of the territory of the United States to another portion of the territory of the United States, that he shall be forthwith sent to the country of which he is a citizen or subject.

And orders of deportation in the foregoing and all other cases shall be executed by the United States marshal of the district wherein the said orders are made; and he shall execute the same with all convenient dispatch, and pending such execution shall detain in his custody the person ordered to be deported, who shall not be admitted to bail, save in cases of appeal as set forth in the proviso of section 50.

SEC. 35. That in any insular territory of the United States where the United States has not established Federal courts and has not provided Federal marshals the judicial functions herein vested in United States judges shall be vested in judges of the highest local courts in such territory, and the executive functions herein vested in United States attorneys and marshals shall be vested in the corresponding local officers in such territory.

SEC. 36. That any Chinese person who violates any of the provisions of this act shall be deported. Accusation and hearing in such case shall be before a United States judge in the district wherein said Chinese person is found, or before a United States commissioner designated by a United States attorney.

SEC. 37. That any person who shall knowingly and falsely alter or substitute any name for the name written in any certificate provided for in this act or by Treasury rules thereunder, or who shall knowingly utter any such certificate, if forged or fraudulent, or who shall forge any such certificate; or who shall, whether an officer of the United States or not, issue to any person a certificate as to the status or right of entry, or right of residence, or privilege of transit, or right of return of any Chinese person (other than a certificate authorized by law to be by him issued), with intent to defeat any provision of this act, or any Treasury rule thereunder, or with intent to deceive the person to whom or the Chinese person for whom issued, or any other person; or who shall falsely personate any person named in any certificate authorized by this act or Treasury rules or regulations thereunder, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or imprisoned for a term not less than one year nor exceeding five years, or shall be both so fined and imprisoned.

SEC. 38. That the requirements and penalties imposed by this act on masters, owners, agents, and consignees of vessels shall not apply in the case of any vessel bound to a port not within the United States which shall come within the jurisdiction of the United States by reason of being in distress or because of stress of weather. But if any Chinese person brought on any such vessel shall be permitted to land in the United States in violation of law, or if every Chinese person so brought, who is bound to do so under this act, does not depart with the vessel when it leaves port, then the penalties of this act shall be imposed on said vessel, and the master, owner, agent, and consignee thereof, jointly and severally.

SEC. 39. That the master of any foreign vessel which shall bring to the United States in the crew of such vessel, or otherwise in its service, any Chinese persons not entitled to entry, shall be required to execute a bond satisfactory to the Treasury Department, in the sum of $2,000 for each of said Chinese persons, the condition of said bond being that none of such Chinese persons shall be permitted to land from said vessel for any purpose whatever, with or without the permission of said master, while said vessel remains within the United States. The bond shall be canceled upon the certificate of the appropriate Treasury officer that all Chinese persons covered by it have departed from the United States on said vessel.

And it shall be unlawful for any vessel holding an American register to have or to employ in its crew any Chinese person not entitled to admission to the United States, or into the portion of the territory of the United States to which such vessel plies; and any violation of this provision shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $2,000.

But said penalty shall not accrue in the case of any such vessel which shall suffer the loss of a portion of her crew by reason of distress or stress of weather in any foreign jurisdiction or port and shall be compelled thereby to employ Chinese seamen to complete her complement of officers and men: Provided, That to relieve from said penalty in such case it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer that in such foreign jurisdiction or port no seamen other than Chinese were obtainable, and that every such Chinese seaman was discharged from the service of such vessel immediately upon the arrival thereof at the first port where seamen other than Chinese could be obtained, and that if so discharged at any port under the jurisdiction of the United States no such Chinese seaman was permitted to depart from such vessel, but that each such Chinese seaman was forthwith transported as a passenger on such vessel, and at the expense thereof, to a foreign port, and that no such Chinese seaman did reenter the service of such vessel after such discharge.

SEC. 40. That any Chinese person who, having been admitted into the United States, or from one portion thereof into another portion thereof, as a teacher, student, merchant, or traveler for curiosity or pleasure, ceases to be of the status gaining him such admission and becomes a laborer within the meaning of this act, shall forfeit the privilege of remaining in the United States or the territory thereof, and shall be deported. And in every case where a Chinese person, having gained admission by virtue of being a servant or an attendant of a Chinese officer, ceases to be such servant or attendant he shall be deported.

SEC. 41. That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe and enforce rules and regulations whereby the Treasury Department shall have a complete record of the date, place, and circumstances of birth of every Chinese person hereafter born within the jurisdiction of the United States, together with data as to parentage. And a certified copy of the record as to any person whose birth is recorded hereunder shall be admissible as evidence in all inquiries under this act.

SEC. 42. That no certificate issued under this act shall be pawned, sold, or transferred. Violation of this provision shall be followed by cancellation of the particular certificate, and, if the offender be a Chinese person not a citizen in mainland territory of the United States, by deportation of such person. If the offender be of any other class, then he shall be punished under section 53.

SEC. 43. That two years after the departure from the United States of a Chinese laborer to whom has been issued a return certificate hereunder the Treasury Department shall cancel all official papers and entries concerning him: Provided, That he shall not within said period have exercised his right to return.

SEC. 44. That hereafter no State court, or court of the United States, shall admit any Chinese person to citizenship.

SEC. 45. That the administration of this act shall be in charge of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, under direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The said Commissioner-General, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby authorized to make and to enforce any and all rules and regulations by him deemed needful to an efficient execution of this act or of any other law of the United States or of any treaty relating to Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent: Provided, That he shall make no rule or regulation inconsistent with this act.

Wherever in this act the term "appropriate Treasury officer" or its equivalent is used, that officer of the United States is meant who is appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury and is designated by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to perform the duty or to exercise the authority mentioned. And it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to make all needful appointments and of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to make all needful designations forthwith on the passage of this act; and the duty of inspecting and investigating all immigrants under this law or under the general immigration laws of the United States shall be performed whenever practicable by Chinese or immigrant inspectors under the Bureau of Immigration.

All officers appointed or designated to enforce the provisions of this act are hereby empowered to administer oaths touching the right of any Chinese person to enter or to remain in the United States or any territory thereof, or touching the privilege of transit through any part thereof.

SEC. 46. That when the appropriate Treasury officer at the port of arrival of any Chinese person shall have passed upon the application of such person for the right of entry into the United States or any of the territory thereof, or for the privilege of transit through the United States or any of the territory thereof, whether such right or privilege be sought for the first time, or under a return certificate, or under claim of former residence as a merchant, or otherwise, then the decision so given shall be final and not subject to review by the judicial branch of the Government of the United States: Provided, That said Chinese person, and also any officer of the Treasury Department of the United States, may appeal from said decision through the Commissioner-General of Immigration to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Any appeal hereunder to the said Secretary of the Treasury must be filed with the officer making the decision appealed from within five days after the making of such decision.

But where the applicant for entry or transit shall base his claim of right to enter or his claim to privilege to pass through the United States or any of the territory thereof on alleged citizenship of the United States or any of the territory thereof, and upon that solely, no administrative officer of the Government of the United States shall pass upon his case, but he shall forthwith be taken before a United States judge in the district wherein he shall have applied for entry or transit, or before the United States commissioner designated by a United States attorney, and, the appropriate United States attorney attending, a judicial hearing shall be had, as on writ of habeas corpus; and pending a final decision on his application he shall be detained in the custody of the United States marshal of said district, as in deportation cases. And if such decision is adverse to such claimant he shall be returned as provided by section 23. And whenever any Chinese person bases his claim of right to enter or to reside within, or his claim to the privilege of passing through, the United States, or any portion of the territory thereof, on any claim recognized by this act or any law of the United States, and such claim is under inquiry or such claim has been decided adversely to him, he can not assert alternatively another claim of right to enter or to reside within, or any claim of privilege to pass through, the United States or any portion of the territory thereof.

SEC. 47. That when any commissioner of the United States shall have given a decision in any case under this act an appeal therefrom may be taken to the United States district court, within five days from the rendering thereof, by the Chinese person concerned or by the United States.

SEC. 48. That when any United States district court shall have given a decision, on appeal or otherwise, in any case under this act, or any other law or any treaty of the United States relating to Chinese persons, or persons of Chinese descent, an appeal therefrom may be taken to the circuit court of appeals of the United States, within five days from the rendering thereof, by the Chinese person concerned or by the United States.

But in case of appeal under this section by the United States a certified copy of the testimony taken on the hearing before the district court shall, within ten days after said hearing, be transmitted to the Attorney-General of the United States, who may direct the appropriate district attorney to move for a dismissal of the appeal.

In appeals under this section the circuit court of appeals may review all facts as well as all questions of law, and shall have power to make all necessary orders, either for discharge of the Chinese persons or for deportation thereof.

SEC. 49. That on appeal to a district court of the United States or to the circuit court of appeals of the United States, under this act, a transcript of the record and copies of all testimony taken on the hearing before the commissioner or court whose decision is appealed from shall be transmitted to the district court or the circuit court of appeals, as the case may be; and either court may order sent to it, in addition, or in lieu, any original document or other evidence used or considered in the lower court or tribunal. But no new evidence shall be received in the circuit court of appeals, except by order of said court upon motion duly made for that purpose.

SEC. 50. That in every case of appeal under the foregoing sections the Chinese person who is the subject of such proceedings shall remain in the custody of the appropriate United States marshal pending final decision, and without bail: Provided, That if the appeal be prosecuted from a decision discharging him from custody he may be admitted to bail pending decision on appeal, but in a sum not less than $2,000. And this section shall apply likewise in every case arising under this act where a Chinese person sues out a writ of habeas corpus; and as well to the time before the first hearing on habeas corpus as to appeals from the first or any later decision in the proceeding.

SEC. 51. That the term "United States," when used in this act as a geographical designation, is meant to include all the lands and waters in any way subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, both continental and insular. And the term "insular territory" used in this act is meant to include all island territory of the United States not forming a part of any State or of Alaska.

SEC. 52. That the term "Chinese" and the term "Chinese person" used in this act are meant to include all male and female persons who are Chinese either by birth or descent, as well those of mixed blood as those of the full blood. And wherever herein personal pronouns are used the masculine includes the feminine.

SEC. 53. That any violation of any provision of this act whereof punishment is not otherwise provided shall be deemed a felony, and shall be punishable by fine not less than $1,000, or by imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 54. That for every case passed upon by him under this act $5 shall be paid to the commissioner of the United States duly bound to act therein.

SEC. 55. That wherever by this act or any Treasury rule or regulation thereunder a certificate or other paper is required to be issued in duplicate or triplicate, the original shall be marked "Original," the duplicate shall be marked "Duplicate," and the triplicate shall be marked "Triplicate."

SEC. 56. That the provisions of this act shall not be construed to prevent the admission of Chinese into the United States for the purpose of participating in any fair or exposition authorized by act of Congress: Provided, That such admission shall be in accordance with rules and regulations of the Commissioner-General of Immigration prescribed with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 57. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with any provision of this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect any prosecution or other proceeding, criminal or civil, begun under laws in effect prior to the passage hereof, but all such prosecutions and proceedings shall proceed as if this act had not been passed.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I want to restate some remarks I made last Friday, because there may be some here now who were not here then. I am in favor of the retention of this second section of the bill. I have a great deal of respect for the legal information and perfect integrity of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. NAPHEN]. I never have deceived this House and never will.

Mr. HITT. That is true.

Mr. CLARK. This second section flies in the face of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, providing the Philippines are a part of the United States and providing that the citizens of the Philippine Islands are citizens of the United States.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman from Missouri permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CLARK. Yes; certainly.

Mr. KLEBERG. Does not this include Hawaii and Porto Rico?

Mr. CLARK. No; it has nothing to do with Hawaii.

Mr. KLEBERG. That is excluded from the bill?

Mr. CLARK. That is excluded, because it has a special provision of its own in the act of annexation.

Mr. KLEBERG. What does the gentlemen comprehend in the term "insular possessions?"

Mr. CLARK. That includes all the insular possessions except Hawaii.

Mr. KLEBERG. Why do you not say that in the bill?

Mr. CLARK. We do say so in the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say something else, and it is this: I do not believe that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in one hundred and sixty-ninth, in the case of Wong Kim Ark against the United States, declaring that Chinese born in this country of Chinese parents are subject to our jurisdiction, is good law. That decision was rendered by a divided court; six judges decided in favor of it, two judges dissented from it, and one judge did not sit.

I say, under the circumstances, it will be something appalling if by our act we make the Philippines a breeding ground for Chinese laborers to come into the United States. Now, gentlemen, I will tell you what I believe is another thing that you will find. If the United States Supreme Court ever decides that the residents of the Philippine Islands are American citizens, and that we have no right to keep out of this country Filipino Chinese, then the American people will rise in their might and drive Congress into getting rid of the Philippine Islands, and that is just exactly what I want to see done—precisely.

You might as well understand what the issue is and be through with it. They must pass upon that question sooner or later, and the way to make them pass upon it at once and have done with it is to put this section in the bill and then they must pass upon it speedily. Then the American people will be fully informed, and can act intelligently, and do as they please. To use a familiar phrase, we will then know "where we are at." Because, as I said on Friday, I do not believe the American people, in their sober senses, are ever going to agree that the Philippine Islands shall be made a breeding ground for hundreds of thousands of Chinese to be brought in here to compete with American labor. For these reasons I want this section to stay in the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the term "official," as used in the foregoing section, shall be construed to mean one who, being in the service of a foreign government, is regularly accredited as such by the home government he represents, or if he be a consular officer of China, is regularly accredited as such under the usual practice of the Imperial Chinese Government; and the attendants and servants of any such official shall be similarly privileged to enter.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 5 and insert a new section 5, to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the term 'official' used in the foregoing section shall be construed to mean only one who, being in the service of a foreign government, is regularly accredited as such by the home government he represents, or, if he be a consul of China, is regularly accredited as such under the usual practice of the Imperial Chinese Government; but the attendants and servants of any such official shall be privileged to enter, on being identified as such attendants and servants, in accordance with the rules and regulations subscribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. HITT. Had not the gentleman better make that "consular officers?"

Mr. COOMBS. The idea is to eliminate consular officers and insert in place consul of China, and confine it to the consul and not to the officers that might be appointed.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is assented to by all the members of the committee.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in place of section 5 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was read.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I see that my amendment applies to a subsequent section of the bill, and I will withdraw it and offer it at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman's amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the term "teacher," as used in this act, shall be construed to mean one who, for not less than two years next preceding his application for entry into the United States has been continuously engaged in teaching and who proves to the satisfaction of the appropriate officer that he has completed arrangements to teach in a recognized institution of learning in the United States and intends to pursue no other occupation while in the United States.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, to that section I offer two amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 9, section 6, after the word "teaching" insert the words "the higher branches of education."

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read the second amendment, as follows:

On page 3, line 10, section 6, after the word "he" insert "is qualified to teach such higher branches and."

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the term "student," as used in this act, shall be construed to mean one who intends to pursue some of the higher branches of study, or to be fitted for some particular profession or occupation, and for whose support while studying sufficient provision has been made.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, to that section I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 18, after the word "made," the following: "and who intend to depart from the territory of the United States, to which he comes for such study, immediately on the completion of said studies."

Mr. PERKINS. I would suggest to the gentleman that he strike out the words "to which he comes for such study."

Mr. COOMBS. Has the gentleman an amendment drawn to cover this provision?

Mr. PERKINS. I have the amendment which the gentleman from California drew himself.

Mr. COOMBS. Very well, I will offer that. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment and offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 18, after the word "made," insert "and who intends to depart from the territory of the United States immediately on the completion of said studies."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the term "merchant," as used in this act, shall be construed to mean one who is engaged in buying and selling merchandise at a fixed place of business, and who, during the time he claims to be a merchant, does not engage in the performance of any manual labor, except such as is necessary in the conduct of his business as such merchant.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs a question with relation to the term "merchant." If I correctly understand the section which has been read, in order to gain an entry as a merchant a Chinaman must not only establish the fact that he is conducting a place of business in his own country, but also that he comes here to establish a mercantile business in a fixed place in this country, and that he has the means with which to carry it on.

Now, I learned from the chairman, while he was explaining this bill, that we are selling about a million dollars' worth of cotton in China a month, and it occurs to me that some merchant or some manufacturing corporation may desire to come here, or the officer of a corporation or member of the firm be sent, for the purchase of raw material in this country. I want to ask whether it would be possible under this provision for such merchant or manufacturing company to come here, either by its officers or a member of the firm or agent having the necessary funds to purchase our raw materials or manufactured products? Is it possible under this provision of the bill for him to enter this country for that purpose? We certainly should not exclude persons who desire to come here with money in their pockets to purchase the products of American labor, and thus provide additional work for the American laborer. The question in my mind was whether some provision should not be inserted to cover that matter.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], let me say that I do not think there is any provision of this bill under which a purchasing agent could come into this country unless he should have the ingenuity to come in under either clause 4 or clause 9, which allow travelers to come in. Under those clauses he would have to show that he was coming to this country for purposes of pleasure or curiosity, and I think a reasonable Treasury official would say that a Chinese desiring to enter the country to investigate the question of cotton goods was coming in on a matter of legitimate curiosity which should be gratified. Otherwise, Mr. Chairman, he could not come.

The reason for the provision is this: The evasions of the Chinese-exclusion laws have been almost entirely under two heads, either under the head of transit or under the "merchant clause," under which persons claiming to be merchants, but who really were not merchants in any legitimate sense, have entered this country as such and have employed themselves in this country as cool laborers.

There was some talk in the committee of inserting in the bill a clause by which purchasing agents, as such, should be allowed to come into the country; but it was the opinion of the gentleman from California, in which the committee finally agreed, that such a provision inserted in the law would afford very great opportunities for evasion, and that the provision now in the bill would provide sufficiently for cases where it might be desirable to admit persons intending to purchase.

Let me say in further reply to the question of the gentlemen from Pennsylvania that we have endeavored to deal with this question from a practical standpoint. The committee recognizes the desirability of facilitating the sale of American goods in China; and it also recognizes, on the other hand, the practical phases of this question. The American goods that are sold in China are sold by the representatives of American houses there. The amount of American goods bought by agents sent from China to this country is, in my belief, utterly insignificant.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. The invariable custom in doing business in China is that the merchants there make purchases from agents sent from the foreign country; and, indeed, our consuls in China now advocate that a museum of American products be established in Shanghai, so as to stimulate trade. Agents of the Chinese do not go into foreign countries to make their purchases.

Mr. OLMSTED. Is not one reason that they do not come into this country the fact that our laws have prohibited them from coming?

Mr. KAHN. That is not the reason. The English consul at Niu-chwang in reporting to his Government said that he consulted merchants of China as to the place of manufacture of goods they were selling, and they did not know whether they were made in the United States or England.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OLMSTED. I will ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Such consent has already been given.

Mr. CANNON. If I may be allowed, I should like to ask a question. This legislation, as I understand, cuts out the purchasing agent or the commercial traveler who may desire to come to the United States for the purpose of making purchases—cuts him out unless the Treasury official elects to say that he comes on a mission of curiosity.

Mr. PERKINS. I would answer the gentleman from Illinois by saying that so far as this provision is concerned the bill here presented leaves the law exactly where it finds it. Ever since the passage of the Geary law there has been no provision which allowed a purchasing agent as such to come to this country from China.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; then such a purchasing agent can not come in now.

Mr. PERKINS. Not unless in the manner I have suggested.

Mr. CANNON. For curiosity?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. But that provision, as I understand the gentleman to state, does not work any hardship, because, as I gather from his remarks, our selling agents may go into China.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. In other words, China has not legislated to keep out our selling agents.

Mr. PERKINS. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON. And they go over there and get along comfortably well—

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. While we shut out their purchasing and selling agents?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman will permit me to say that the treaty between the United States and China also specifies the exempt classes, and it mentions simply merchants, students, teachers, officials, and persons traveling for curiosity or pleasure. The minds of the two Governments met upon that point.

Mr. CANNON. I am not criticising that matter. The gentleman says that the treaty regulates this question and that this provision cares for the matter. But the state of facts with reference to this question is interesting, and I wanted to know it. I did not know that in fact a purchasing agent can not come from China to our country for the purpose of buying our goods. The only way in which the minds of the two Governments have met in this bargain seems to be that we may send our selling agents abroad and they are permitted to enter China, so that trade goes on.

Mr. COOMBS. Well, Mr. Chairman, if you will permit me, I think if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] gives a more careful perusal to this section he will ascertain that it is not intended in any sense—

Mr. CANNON. I am not criticising you at all. I just want to get at the facts.

Mr. COOMBS. I think you misapprehend the meaning of this particular section.

Mr. CANNON. Possibly so.

Mr. COOMBS. This section permits merchants to come over here and engage in mercantile business. All it intends to do is to draw a line between merchants who come here honestly representing mercantile business in China and those who would come here under the pretense of being merchants, but really to engage in laboring pursuits in this country. Now, if you will read this section—it is as follows:

Where an application is made by a Chinese for entry into the United States as one formerly or at the time engaged in China, or in some other foreign country, or in the insular possessions of the United States, as a merchant, as a prerequisite to entry, the applicant must have been engaged as a merchant for at least one year next preceding his application.

Mr. HILL. Read the whole of it:

It must also appear to the satisfaction of the appropriate officer at the port of entry that he comes to exercise in good faith his calling as a merchant, and that calling exclusively, and that he has the means or has completed arrangements for forthwith becoming the owner, in whole or in part, of a mercantile business in the United States.

Now, the question I would like to ask is whether if we are permitted to send a commercial drummer into China, can an honest Chinese merchant, who is established in business in China, send a commercial drummer here, under the provisions of this bill—not to establish a place of business, but to do precisely what we want to do there? That is what I would like to know.

Mr. COOMBS. Now, I apprehend that the essential idea of this bill is to prevent laborers from coming to this country and competing with our labor. If the merchant goes to China, or if the representative of the merchant goes to China, it is not possible, not expected in the very nature of affairs, that he will go there to engage in labor or in any occupation outside of his calling, and there is a distinction which must forever be made in order for the proper enforcement of the laws of exclusion—a distinction between motives and intents of people going from here to China and of people coming from China here. That is a distinction made in the treaty, a distinction upon which the treaties are founded, a distinction upon which all of the laws with reference to their enforcement must rely.

Now, if you will notice, he must come here intending to pursue a mercantile business. Can it possibly be anticipated that a man comes here to pursue a mercantile business, whether to engage in the purchase of cotton or any other goods, who is not equipped at that time with funds sufficient to launch him forth into his business, or that he is unable at that time to establish in this country a mercantile business, is there any possible requirement in that which would throw around his endeavors the embarrassments which are anticipated by the gentlemen? I can see none, and if he does come here honestly engaged in mercantile pursuits, in order to confine him to them it seems to me necessary that he should be connected with some established mercantile business in this country, and that, as I understand it, is the idea of this section.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, just a word more to explain to the committee the practical situation of this amendment. We endeavored to draw a bill that should be practical, and that should not, so far as it could be avoided, do any injury to the legitimate development of American commerce. Now, Mr. Chairman, these are the facts: The Chinese can send their purchasing agents into England, and the Chinese can send purchasing agents into Germany or into France or Russia, the four countries that with the United States do the volume of business with the Empire of China. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a fact that in those four great commercial countries where the Chinese have a perfect right to send purchasing agents, if they see fit, not one dollar out of $1,000,000 that is bought by the Chinese from England or Germany or France or Russia is bought by Chinese purchasing agents. It is sold practically without exception by the agents which those countries send into China.

That is the way and the only way in which the United States merchants can sell their goods in China. If we made an amendment allowing the purchasing agents to come here it would be a mere matter of form. We should sell no more American goods through the medium of Chinese purchasing agents than England or France or Germany or Russia sell through that medium—in other words, none at all. In other words, Mr. Chairman, allowing the entry of these agents—purchasing agents, so called—into this country, in my judgment, would not increase the sale of American products a thousand dollars a year. It would be a provision that could be used as a means of fraud and that would be utterly unproductive in increasing the volume of American commerce with China. You have got to do business in China as other nations do business in China—by sending our men there to sell the goods; and unless we send our agents there, if we wait here until Chinese agents come to purchase our goods, I say we will wait forever without entering the Chinese markets.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I only want to say a word. I am not proposing an amendment to this bill. I have had my own matters of legislation, with which I am charged to look after, and I have not given much of attention to the provisions of this bill because I have not had time to do it, and even if I had had the time, I am not so well equipped as the gentlemen who have made a study of this question. I am quite in harmony, let me say, so that I may not be misunderstood, with the proposition to continue to prohibit Chinese laborers from coming into our territory, and for the simple reason that with their customs and habits and with our customs and habits we can not compete. That is, stated in a sentence, why I have heretofore supported this kind of legislation and why I support it now.

But I was led to ask a question a moment ago on the statement that my friend on my left [Mr. COOMBS] made that there was no provision here by which a Chinese purchasing agent could come into the United States to make a purchase of goods unless he could come in in fraud of the law, and that it is now, and as I understand, deemed necessary to prevent frauds being perpetrated upon the law that even purchasing agents should be shut out. I am not here to put up my opinion against that of the gentleman. Of course there is no law that can be made touching the Chinese or anybody else but what here and there it will be violated. For that reason you have the courts, for that reason they are always open, for that reason you have your inspectors and officers. Whether it was necessary to have it made so severe I am not here to express an opinion about, but as long as we are to have trade with China, and we are blowing a good deal about our proposed trade with China, I must be permitted to express the opinion that it is exceedingly fortunate that our commercial agents can go into China along with the Russian and the British and German commercial agent. I am not prepared to say whether there is any legislation that might be enacted by China that would throw our purchasing agents out or not.

Mr. KAHN. She has the power.

Mr. CANNON. She has the power.

Mr. KAHN. She has the power under our existing treaty.

Mr. PERKINS. She has never exercised it.

Mr. CANNON. My friend says she has never exercised it.

Mr. PERKINS. And never will.

Mr. CANNON. And he says she never will. Why?

Mr. PERKINS. Because it is not to her interest.

Mr. CANNON. It is not to her interest? Very well. Well, the trade goes on. They can not come from there here to buy, but we can go from here there to sell. That seems to be the situation, but I am not here to put my opinion up against that of the experts you know touching this matter.

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York having stated that the committee favored this provision, I want to state that as a member of the committee I in the committee opposed the exclusion of all except laborers, and I am opposed to it now. The gentleman from California did not answer the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL]; there is no question that this law will prevent a purchasing agent from China coming into this country. I think it is a shame that we should not allow purchasing agents of China to come in here, that we should not allow lawyers, ministers, doctors, bankers of China to come into this country, and the statement of the gentleman that up to to-day no Chinese goods are sold by purchasing agents does not prove that it is not going to be done.

We are hoping we will have a great trade in the future, and China is likely, it seems to me, to imitate us in methods as trade increases, and a proposition was made in the committee that five agents of every mercantile house should be admitted, and it was discussed, and I am sorry to say it was lost, and if it were lost in committee I have no doubt it will be in the House, and I do not wish to make any ineffectual aim at something I know can not be accomplished; but I do wish to state for myself I think we are wrong in limiting the people of China who come into this country to merchants, teachers, and travelers. My friend from California says the treaty so provides.

I differ from him. I think he will find other lawyers differ from him. I admit one Attorney-General has given that opinion, but it seems to me that anybody who will inquire and impartially compare our treaties and the history of that clause will say that the only persons under the treaty we have the right to exclude are Chinese laborers. Now, we all want to exclude them. To that there is no opposition. I think, under the treaty, everybody else has a right to come in; and I think it is good policy for this country to allow everybody else to come in. I will agree that it shall be limited, so that no one should be able to come in under the guise of either class as a laborer. I understand that is all anybody wants; and I do not see why it is not as easy to prevent the laborer coming in as a purchasing agent as to prevent him coming in as a merchant; and I believe we ought to allow the purchasing agents to come in. The treaties and justice and self-interest all demand that we should exclude no one except laborers.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word about this provision. The whole intent of this law is to shut out Chinese laborers. If there was some way of branding the Chinaman right across his forehead that he is a laborer, there would be no trouble about it. You can not do that. You can define the merchant in a fairly accurate way. You have hedged him around with conditions so that you can find out who a merchant is. You have defined a teacher so that with some certainty you know who he is. You have defined a student so that you know who he is.

There is a sort of hazy provision which applies to people traveling for pleasure, etc. But as to the commercial travelers or purchasing agents who are to come over here; if you simply use those terms and say nothing else, then every Chinese coolie that wants to get into the United States will instantly become a purchasing agent.

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. I would not say simply that.

Mr. CLARK. If you are going to have a provision in there at all, you should place a definition in it that is comprehensive and clear.

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CLARK. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. Why can not the Treasury Department draw a regulation defining a purchasing agent as they have defined a merchant and teacher?

Mr. CLARK. It may be that the Treasury officials can do it. But if you put that provision in the bill at all that they shall come in, then you surely ought to draft your definition yourself or empower the Treasury officials to do it, because if you do not you may as well take the whole bill and stick it in the stove and be done with it. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HILL. Is there a provision in this bill by which a Chinese merchant having sold goods in Shanghai to a merchant of New York, and a failure on the part of the New York merchant to pay his bill, that it would be possible for the Chinese merchant to come here and attend to the collection of this debt, or is he shut out?

Mr. CLARK. I think he is shut out.

Mr. HILL. I think it is an infernal injustice, if that is the case.

Mr. CLARK. That is all right. You have just as much right to your opinion as I have to mine. The men that drew this bill, and the proponents of this bill, are simply trying to keep Chinese coolies out of here, and the reason that they have not succeeded in doing so before is, as I have explained in my main speech, on account of the duplicity of the Chinese character.

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. Has there been any definition of merchant or traveler under the law?

Mr. CLARK. I do not know.

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. I can tell the gentleman that there has not; and as the Treasury Department has made such a regulation as to effectually define the merchant and traveler, why can not exactly the same thing be done as to purchasing agents?

Mr. CLARK. Perhaps it can. If so, all right.

Mr. OLMSTED. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting on page 4, line 12, by adding at the end of said line the words "or that he intends purchasing American products for the purpose of manufacture or sale in China or elsewhere, and has the means to make such purchases."

Mr. CLARK. I should like to hear that amendment read over again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I have not before me a copy of the treaty between the United States and China, but I have no doubt that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] correctly states the wording of that treaty, which permits the entry of "merchants, students, teachers, officials, and persons traveling for curiosity or pleasure." There is no doubt that, as he states, "the minds of the two Governments met upon that point." But we have in this section made a definition of the term "merchants" which is not within any fair construction of that term as used in the treaty, and which it is not, in my judgment, for the best interests of our country to enforce. As the section now stands, it requires that in order to be considered a merchant a Chinaman must not only have a place of business in China, but must come here for the purpose and have the means of establishing a mercantile house in this country. The bill as it now stands permits Chinamen to come here to sell their own goods, but does not permit them to come here to buy our products. It seems to me more important that we sell goods to the Chinese and obtain their money than that they sell goods to us and obtain our money. What we want is, not to extend our opportunities for buying from the Chinese, but to extend the markets for the products of American farms and American labor. As I learn from Mr. Austin, the very efficient Chief of the Bureau of Statistics in the Treasury Department, there were during the calendar year 1901 exported from the United States into China various American products of value as follows:

Wheat flour .....	$271,643	Mineral oil, refined .....	$4,689,179
Cars .....	9,302	Canned beef .....	15,383
Clocks and watches .....	15,842	Bacon .....	14,395
Cotton cloth .....	10,224,215	Hams .....	20,963
Cotton manufactures, other .....	125,164	Butter .....	6,563
Fruits and nuts .....	59,208	Cheese .....	16,771
Scientific instruments .....	24,151	Tobacco manufactures .....	752,606
Builders' hardware .....	53,349	Lumber .....	163,125
Sewing machines .....	13,547	Furniture .....	25,678
Typewriters .....	17,626	Other articles .....	2,290,195
Naval stores .....	5,922
Turpentine spirits .....	71,648	Total exports .....	18,886,475

There were also exported by way of Hongkong articles of the value of $8,058,473, making a total of $26,945,348 of American goods sold to China in one year.

Now, every pound of American wheat flour, of canned beef, bacon, hams, butter, cheese, tobacco, or fruits sold to China, means just that much money brought into the United States for the American farmer. It means just that much of an extension of the foreign market for the products of the American farm. Every yard of cotton cloth, every car, sewing machine, typewriter, or other article of American manufacture sold to China, means just that much money coming into the United States for the help of American labor. It means that much more money in circulation in the United States. Twenty-six millions added to our circulation each year is of much importance, but we ought to have ten times as much from the same source. China affords a vast field for the exploitation of American goods and wares.

My objection to this section of the bill as it now stands is that it permits a Chinaman to come to this country and establish a place for the sale of Chinese goods, but does not permit a Chinese corporation or firm or individual to come or send an agent here for the purpose of buying our goods. My amendment proposes that Chinese capitalists may come or send their agents here to purchase American goods and American raw material for the purpose of sale or manufacture at their own places of business in China. This bill provides, in section 9, that a Chinaman may come into this country to travel "for pleasure or curiosity," and my friend from New York [Mr. PERKINS] suggests that if he is sufficiently ingenious he can get in under that section, and act as a traveling agent for a Chinese firm desiring to buy our products. Why should he have to come in by subterfuge? Why enact a bill that requires him to cheat? We ought not to put into this bill any provision the terms of which can be evaded by trickery and deception. If we do not wish the Chinese merchants to buy our goods, then let us say so, but if we do wish it, let us give them that privilege squarely and honestly, without requiring them to come in by deception, as intending solely to travel "for pleasure or curiosity."

To my mind it is more important that they purchase our products than it is that they gratify their curiosity and pleasure by traveling among us. Let us provide every safeguard, so that none but purchasers, or their authorized agents, with means to purchase our goods, shall come in for that purpose. Let us safeguard the provision so that laborers can not come in under the guise of merchants, nor, indeed, as those who travel for pleasure or curiosity, but let us encourage the purchase of our products by China and every other nation. I insist that it is in accordance with the spirit of the treaty which permits Chinese merchants to come here, that they may come to purchase as well as to sell. It is certainly much more to the advantage of the American farmer, the American laborer, and the American people generally, that a Chinese capitalist shall be permitted to spend his money here in the purchase of our products than it is that he shall come here to establish a place of business for the sale of Chinese goods to our people. I should prefer to exclude the seller rather than the purchaser. Let us make the bill as perfect as possible, so that our citizens may derive the greatest good from it.

We are all in favor of the provisions excluding the Chinese coolies from this country. It may seem ungracious to select one nation from among all the nations of the world and say to her "Your citizens shall not be permitted within our borders," but self-preservation demands it. The protection of American labor demands it, and the protection of American labor is one of the most important objects which the Republican party has in view. We desire to continue, and if possible improve, the present prosperous condition of affairs. In order to do that we believe it to be necessary to continue to exclude the Chinese, and, indeed, to so improve the existing exclusion law as to make evasion of its provisions more difficult.

This bill does not present a dividing line politically. Members of all parties favor it. China, with her 400,000,000 inhabitants, is as thickly populated as an ant-hill. Throw down the bars and the lower classes of her people will swarm in upon us, lowering the present high grade of American citizenship, lowering the character and dignity of American labor, and lowering the compensation of labor. Centuries of privation have taught these people to live upon what would starve an American family to death. We believe that labor should receive its just reward, that the families of our laborers may live respectably and comfortably and their children have educational advantages, so that in the race of life the child of the humblest citizen may not be handicapped, but his chances for political or other preferment may be as good as those of the child of the wealthiest parents.

These lower orders of Chinese do not come here for the purpose of becoming American citizens. They come here, frequently under contract, to make what they can to carry back to their own country. They do not assimilate with our people, they are not interested in our institutions, and do not breathe their spirit. We do not deem it wise to permit them to pour into this country to the displacement or disadvantage of intelligent, patriotic American citizens who now occupy the field of honest labor.

Mr. PERKINS. One word, Mr. Chairman, about this amendment, which I hope will not be adopted. As I have already said, the Chinese merchant of whom my friend from Pennsylvania speaks does not go to any country where he is allowed to go to purchase goods. That being so, it must be manifest to members that he will not come here to purchase goods. It is not the custom of the Chinese to go to England, to Russia, or to Germany for the purchase of goods, and therefore they will not come to the United States for the purchase of goods.

Mr. LANDIS. Neither will they come here for the purpose of selling their goods.

Mr. PERKINS. They do not come here or go to other countries for either purpose; so that the committee, by adopting this clause, for which my friend from Pennsylvania has made a plausible argument, would not furnish facilities to purchasing agents, because there is no such class. They would furnish an opening, not for trade, but for fraud.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to reply by saying that while the gentleman's premises are undoubtedly correct, that because up to the present time the Chinese do not come here largely or send his emissaries here, that is not a good argument, for there is a good reason why they do not come. They can not come. In trying to keep them out I think you are making a mistake.

Mr. PERKINS. What I said was that they did not go to certain countries, where they could go. Of course they could not come here. But they do not send their agents to England, to Russia, or to Germany, where they can go if they desire, and if it was the custom of their trade so to do.

Mr. DOUGLAS. They are now sending them to France and to Germany very largely, and there is no reason why they should not send them here. It will do us far more good in the way of trade to have them come here and see the industries of the country than it will benefit us to force the American merchant to send samples there. There is no good reason why these merchants should not come in, as they have plenty of money to spend and buy our goods. I think we ought to put a liberal construction on this clause. I hope the committee, in giving this due consideration, will let one of these amendments go through; I do not care which amendment it is. If the idea is to keep out pretty much everything, all aliens and their goods, and put discriminating laws on our statute books covering those possessions we now possess, and shut out nations that have been trading with them heretofore, it is going to react upon us. We will find that we are doing ourselves a great amount of injury in the next few years if we keep up this procedure.

To-day the English colonies are agitating the question of putting on discriminating duties against us simply because we propose to exclude English goods from markets where they have been trading before this country was known in the world's trade. China is a smart nation, and there is no reason why we should not have an enormous amount of trade with them, and I am in favor of securing it. I am in favor of a liberal law which will allow the representatives of the Chinese merchants to come here and have every access to this country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CLARK. I would like to inquire what became of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The CHAIRMAN. It is pending.

Mr. PERKINS. I will suggest that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOUGLAS] is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Clerk report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, after the words "United States," line 12, insert "commercial travelers or purchasing agents sent by any established importing house and exporting house in China shall be authorized to free entry into the United States or possessions on giving a bond that residence will be for not over one year and they will engage in no labor whatever during their stay here. Said bond must be signed by two responsible Chinese residing in the United States or possessions, or by two citizens of the United States, and the penalty to be $500 for infringement."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOUGLAS] whether his amendment is proposed as a substitute for that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] or as an amendment to that amendment?

Mr. DOUGLAS. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania cares to accept my amendment as a substitute for his, I shall be very glad. I am simply seeking to secure some provision which will give proper rights to these men to come in under suitable restrictions.

Mr. OLMSTED. As the amendment of the gentleman from New York seems to have been pretty carefully drawn, I am willing to accept it in lieu of my own, which I will withdraw.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be withdrawn, and the amendment of the gentleman from New York will be regarded as pending. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that very careful consideration ought to be given to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, in view of the fact that the business which he carries on is coextensive with the world, and that his familiarity with this whole matter is such as to entitle his opinion to be carefully weighed by this House.

It strikes me that while we in the United States can get along without any intercourse whatever with the Chinese merchants, and indeed without any commercial relations whatever with that country, this bill as it now stands is going to put the people of the Philippine Islands in a very embarrassing situation. They are absolutely dependent upon the mainland for food to live upon, it being a well-known fact that the Philippine Islands are not capable of producing, especially under present conditions, the food required for the people there. The potatoes, corn, and other vegetables eaten at the hotels in Manila come almost entirely from the Chinese mainland.

Mr. KAHN. From Australia.

Mr. HILL. No; from Hongkong, not Australia. I myself saw a contract for three and a half millions rubles' worth of live cattle to be delivered in one year from China into Vladivostok. The Orient is dependent on China for food.

Now, we are proposing to say to those people in the Philippine Islands, "You may go over there and trade with those people, but they shall not come into the islands under any conditions whatever and trade with you even temporarily." It seems to me this Committee of the Whole ought to give fair consideration to a proposition of this kind.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Is it not true that under the so-called merchant clause of the present law a great many Chinese laborers have come into this country in the guise of merchants?

Mr. HILL. I have not a doubt of that, and no man can be more opposed to anything of that kind than I am.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then would it not be highly objectionable and dangerous to allow so-called Chinese "drummers" to come in here as purchasing agents, when in reality they would be coming in for the purpose of taking employment as laborers?

Mr. HILL. I believe it would be wise to safeguard the provisions of this bill to the utmost, but I do not believe we have a right in international honor to brand a whole nation as sneaks and cowards and thieves—as men who will violate their honor. As I understand the situation, the commercial honor of Chinese merchants is irreproachable, whatever may be the character or actions of the cooly. You can not find a bank in the Orient, whether English or Japanese or American, that has not as its cashier, handling its funds, a Chinese. That is the universal rule. Yet we propose to say to these people, "Not only your coolies, but your merchants—men whose ancestors dressed in silks when ours were wearing skins and living in the caves of the bears—shall all be placed under one category and shall all be treated alike." I do not think it fair thus to demand from them what we are unwilling to grant them in return.

I say, let the Chinese stay there; we do not want them, but let us be honest and say, "This is a matter of self-protection." But let us not brand these people in a body as rascals and thieves and cowards; let us not say that their word—even the word of their honored merchants—is not to be trusted.

There is another reason why I think we should be fair to them. Our State Department is spending every energy to have the Chinese ports opened to us. That nation is allowed to send its drummers and commercial agents to England, Germany, and France. Now, it strikes me that if we are going to enact any law so stringent as this bill as it stands in regard to commercial relations, we had better withdraw the hands of the State Department from bringing Russia and this country into antagonism for the sake of Great Britain, Germany, and France, who will have the exclusive control of the Chinese ports after the passage of this bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman is familiar, is he not, with the condition of affairs in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. HILL. Not much.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Somewhat?

Mr. HILL. Yes, somewhat.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, does the gentleman know whether the Chinese have been in the habit of sending their commercial agents into those islands for purposes of trade?

Mr. HILL. Well, I do not know as to that. I saw that pretty much all the trade of Manila was monopolized by the Chinese. I do not know whether they were there temporarily or not. I regretted to see that condition of things. I am in hearty sympathy with the gentlemen from California on the general proposition of this bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand this bill is drawn for the purpose of restricting Chinese commercial agents from going into the Philippine Islands as well as coming here.

Mr. HILL. I understand so; and that is where I see one of the embarrassing features of this legislation.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I was about to inquire whether any embarrassment would be created on account of the proximity of the Philippine Islands to China.

Mr. HILL. Not only would there be embarrassments from a commercial point of view on account of the Chinese that might desire to go into the Philippine Islands—within twenty-four hours of their own shores—but the people in the Philippines are, as I have said, absolutely dependent upon the Chinese mainland for even the food that they eat. This legislation would prevent the Chinese merchant who in good faith has sold his goods in the Philippine Islands or in the United States—no matter how long he may have been established in business in his own country or how clearly he has proved his honesty and good faith—from going into the Philippine Islands or coming here to collect his debts.

It strikes me, gentlemen, it is not fair; and we can not afford to be unfair in our international relations. Let us say to these people that for the protection of American labor we have no room here for your 400,000,000 people, but in our commercial transactions we have as much respect for our honor as you have in the Orient, and the honor of the Chinese merchant in the Orient is unimpeachable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, it has taken twenty years to bring the exclusion laws to their present conditions. The early enactments upon this question were exceedingly mild, so far as the merchant class was concerned, and what was the result? They streamed here in violation of the law, and year by year our Government, in order to do that very thing that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] says we should do, in order to protect the American laborer, year by year has been compelled to formulate new regulations, so as to shut out this class who were endeavoring to come in here in the disguise of merchants. Even while the hearings were pending before the Senate committee common laborers were arrested here in Washington. They had gained ingress into this country as merchants, and they were brought before the committee and they were questioned and it was shown they had purchased certificates as merchants in Hongkong and come here on them.

Now, I have here a "coaching paper," which was sent from San Francisco to China in order to teach some laborers in China how to answer questions and show that they are bona fide merchants or bona fide students or bona fide travelers. That is the trickery we have to confront all the time, and it is on that account that it has been found necessary to make these provisions as drastic as they are, if they are drastic.

Mr. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from California a question. Is it not true there has been an organization for years in San Francisco for the purpose of giving instructions to coolies desiring to come into this country, to come in under this so-called merchant clause?

Mr. KAHN. There is no doubt but that the greatest trouble we have is on account of the merchant clause. That is the one clause they are trying to violate constantly, and if you give them any additional loopholes to crawl through you may rest assured they will take advantage of every opportunity.

Mr. HILL. Is it not far easier to draw a provision in this law by which an honest commercial agent may be identified than it is to provide here that a man may come who is traveling for pleasure or curiosity? I would rather admit the honest merchant than the man who is simply traveling for pleasure and curiosity. He may spend his money, what he brings with him to the United States, but the honest merchant who comes here to sell goods or to buy goods or to buy raw material helps the whole industry of the land. You have drawn such a provision in regard to Chinese gentlemen who will travel for curiosity and pleasure. Why do you not strike that out and let in the legitimate merchants? I am with you on the exclusion, but it seems to me you have excluded the wrong class.

Mr. KAHN. Because, Mr. Chairman, before that regulation was adopted they were coming as persons traveling for pleasure and curiosity, and we had to hem around that provision in existing law with these restrictions.

Mr. HILL. Well, keep them out.

Mr. KAHN. That would be in direct violation of the treaty that the gentleman has said so much about.

Mr. HILL. I have not said a word about the treaty.

Mr. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is it true that there is such a thing as a traveling salesman for a Chinese concern?

Mr. KAHN. No, sir.

Mr. LANDIS. Is not the representative of a Chinese concern who comes to the other nations of the earth to find markets for his wares a fiction?

Mr. KAHN. It is, absolutely. I was in China this summer—

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] says he knows there are such people who go to France and Germany. And I would like to have that question settled.

Mr. KAHN. If you will take the monographs published by our Treasury Department, you will see that the German does business in this way. It is set out in full in the monograph on "China," and I call it to the attention of the gentleman because it is very instructive and shows how the business is done. Germany has been building up a trade—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. I simply want to say, Mr. Chairman, that that monograph points out how business is done there. Before the goods arrive the German calls upon his Chinese customer and asks him whether he can not sell him another order of goods, and he assures him that if the goods are not right he will make them right. Finally, when the goods come, on the very day that they arrive, the German is there, and he watches their unpacking; and then he tells his Chinese customer that he need not be in a hurry about paying for them. He gives a long credit.

The thing is stated in full in an article published by our Treasury Department, and it is held that by reason of these long credits, and by reason of the care with which the German in China nurses his trade, he has been able to build up his commerce.

The English consuls, as I stated before, say that the Chinese do not care where the goods are manufactured. All that they want is a certain class of goods, with a certain brand or "chop," as they call it; something to which they have become accustomed, and they will buy the goods they want from any country in the world. They can be offered to them by any country in the world.

Mr. DOUGLAS. May I interrupt the gentleman for a second?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That shows one of the iniquities of the law. Although the House may not know it, it is a singular fact that, leaving out the tea trade, there is almost as much trade done through English merchants with American goods going to China as through American merchants. That is because the American merchants do not have the opportunity and the Chinamen do not have the opportunity of doing that trade themselves. Therefore the orders go to London to-day; and the trade of Manila is similarly situated. We are doing more trade with Manila to-day through English merchants than we are through American merchants. I say that ought to be changed, and there ought to be a condition of the law which would enable us to change it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. Under this bill all that is necessary for a Chinaman coming in as a merchant is to make it appear to the satisfaction of the appropriate officer at the port of entry that he comes as a merchant.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no; he must have his certificate viséed by a consular officer in the country from which he departs.

Mr. OLMSTED. I want to ask you if the provision which my friend from New York has inserted in the amendment is not just as carefully guarded against fraud as this can possibly be?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think so.

Mr. OLMSTED. Requiring a bond with two sureties in the United States?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think so. After my twenty years of experience I would say that it is a loophole through which they will certainly crawl, and I hope the amendment will not pass.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. KAHN. I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be in order if this motion is agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOUGLAS].

The question being taken; on a division (demanded by Mr. DOUGLAS), there were—ayes 15, noes 67.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment which the Clerk reports.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 10, after the word "means," strike out the word "or" and insert "under his immediate control for forthwith becoming."

On page 4, in line 11, after the word "a" insert the word "recognized."

Mr. PERKINS. I only wish to offer a suggestion which I think will be concurred in by the gentleman from California. In the amendment offered by the gentleman from California, after the word "becoming" add the word "or."

Mr. KAHN. That is correct. I will accept that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendments offered by the gentleman from California, of which there are two.

Mr. PERKINS. Let them be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendments will be again reported.

The amendments were again read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the question will be put on the two amendments together.

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That the term "traveler," as used in this act, shall be construed to mean one who shall establish to the satisfaction of the appropriate officer that he has funds to pay the cost of the intended journey within territory of the United States and that his purpose in seeking entry is solely travel for pleasure or curiosity, and who intends to depart upon the conclusion of his travels.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 1, page 5, the word "has" and insert in place thereof the following, "is in personal possession of adequate."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion the highest considerations of the public welfare require and the urgent necessities of labor demand that this Congress pass without further delay as stringent a law as can be drawn to restrict Chinese immigration. The question affects the very foundation of our civilization. It is a duty we owe to posterity and to every citizen in our land. If the immigration bars are ever let down in this matter, the Chinese will come into this country in droves, overrun the land, menace our domestic institutions, threaten our tranquillity, imperil the Republic, and destroy American labor.

This bill is for self-preservation. It is largely a racial question of supremacy and essentially for the protection of labor. We offer no apologies to the Chinese for this legislation, but we declare it to be the first duty of Congress to legislate for the rights of the American workmen. We are going to pass this bill, not for the Mongolian, but for the American—for those who toil, who have created all our wealth and have made us great and prosperous. I am a friend of the American workman, and his interests demand the enactment of this bill into law. My sympathy is now, always has been, and always will be in favor of the toilers of this country. I am opposed to increasing their burdens or making their lot harder by the competition of the yellow man from the Orient.

This bill, it is said, goes much further than the present law. So it does, and I am glad of it. I have recently been on the Pacific coast and have looked into this Chinese question to some extent. To my personal knowledge the present Chinese-exclusion law is violated nearly every day. That law was loosely drawn and is full of loopholes. This bill remedies those mistakes. The people on the Pacific coast understand the methods and the habits of the Chinamen. They have come in contact with them for years and know all about them. They favor this bill. The Chinaman is very cunning, very clever, and very shrewd. As Bret Harte, one of our own poets, has most truly said:

For ways that are dark
And for tricks that are vain,
The heathen Chinese is peculiar.

Nothing about John was ever said truer than that. The American workman can not compete with the Chinaman, and if he could I would not want him to. I have too much respect for the dignity of the American. In this matter we should not quibble, we should not split hairs to favor the Chinaman. We should take broad ground in behalf of the American. I care not what others may do or say, but for myself I will never consent by my vote to place Chinese cheap labor in competition with honest, intelligent, progressive American labor. All that we are and all that we hope to be we owe to the American workman. I will never vote to lower his standard.

The toilers of the country demand the passage of this bill; and in their behalf, for their benefit, and in the best interest of the public weal I hope it will speedily pass and become a law. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That the prohibition of section 1 shall not apply to the return of any registered Chinese laborer who has, at the time of his departure and at the time of his return, in the United States a lawful wife, child, or parent, or property of the value of $1,000, or debts of like amount due him and pending settlement. These exceptions are subject to the following provisions:

First. A "registered" Chinese laborer is: One who, being lawfully a resident of the mainland territory of the United States at the time of the passage of this act, is the rightful holder of a valid certificate of residence issued to him under the acts of Congress in force at the time of the passage of this act. Every such certificate is hereby continued in force in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Second. The marriage referred to by this section must have taken place at least one year prior to the application of the laborer for permission to return. It must also appear that the applicant had no other wife (under Chinese or other laws or customs) living at the time of such marriage.

Third. If the right to return be claimed on the ground of property or debts, it must appear: (a) That the ownership is of property other than money; that the requisite minimum value is over all incumbrances, liens, and offsets; and that the title was not acquired for the purpose of evading this act. (b) That the debtor is solvent; that the amount due is not less than the required sum, above offsets and discounts; that the debts do not consist of promissory notes and were not created with a view to evade this act.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I have three amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 20, page 5, after the word "married," insert the following: "to the wife."

Insert in line 22, page 5, after the word "return," the following: "And the parties must have lived together as husband and wife continuously until the departure of said laborer." Also insert in line 7, page 6, after the word "notes," the following: "or similar acknowledgments of ascertained or settled liability."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendments will be considered together.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendments offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That a Chinese laborer claiming the right to return to the United States on any of the grounds stated in the foregoing section shall apply to the appropriate officer of the district in which he resides at least one month prior to the time of his departure, said application to be accompanied by his certificate of residence, and said Chinese laborer shall make under oath before the said officer a full statement, in triplicate, descriptive of his family, or property, or debts, as the case may be, and shall furnish to said officer such proof of the facts entitling him to return as shall be required by the rules and regulations from time to time prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and for any false swearing in relation thereto he shall incur the penalties imposed by law for perjury.

He shall permit the said officer to take a full description of his person, which description the said officer shall retain and mark with a number.

The original and each copy of said statement shall contain the photograph of the applicant, made at his expense and made as required by the rules in that regard prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The original of said statement shall be retained by the officer before whom it is made, and the copies thereof shall be by him transmitted to the appropriate officer at the port whence the applicant intends to depart from the United States.

And if the last-named officer, after hearing the proofs and investigating all the circumstances of the case, shall decide to issue a certificate of return, he shall sign and give to the said applicant a certificate containing the number of the description last aforesaid.

If the last-named certificate be transferred, it shall become void, and the person to whom it was issued shall forfeit his right to return to the United States.

The right to return under said certificate shall be limited to two years from the date of leaving the United States.

No Chinese laborer shall be permitted to reenter the United States without producing to the appropriate officer at the place of such entry the return certificate herein required. A laborer presenting a certificate of return required by this section shall be admitted to the United States only at the port from which he departed.

No Chinese, other than Chinese diplomatic or consular officers and their suites, shall be permitted to enter the United States or any of its insular possessions except at the ports of San Francisco, Portland (Oreg.), Port Townsend, Boston, New York, New Orleans, Manila, Honolulu, or such other ports as may be designated by the Commissioner-General of Immigration with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "New Orleans," in line 7, page 8, the following: "Malone, Ogdensburg, and Rouses Point, N. Y.; Richford and Alburg, Vt.; Portal, N. Dak., and Sumas, Wash."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman proposes this amendment, and I take it for granted he is animated by care for local traffic and its profits. But that traffic is really, in chief part, unlawful. It is smuggling in Chinese laborers, and is a violation of the existing law. The evidence we have is that there are runways along the northern borders to bring in these laborers. There are not many Chinese travelers coming that way; there are no considerable number of the exempt classes of Chinese—merchants, teachers, etc.—who come to the British Pacific coast and take the Canadian Pacific Railway, going thousands of miles through that country, in order to enter the United States on the northern border.

The men who really come through by that way are Chinese laborers whose admission into British Columbia is paid for, and is a source of revenue to the British dominions. They come to British Columbia, and then are brought by this railway through Canada along the borders of the United States. At some convenient runway they are smuggled into this country along bypaths or through the woods across the border line. They come here to work in competition with American labor. Our consuls at some of these border places say that 500 Chinamen have been smuggled by a single post in this criminal fashion, in violation of the law, and unknown to the officers of the Treasury of the United States, and unknown to our Government except by indirect evidence that great numbers have been brought here not in a legitimate way.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. HITT. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. The last part of that section allows the Treasury officials to designate any additional port to those mentioned in the bill. If there is any necessity for additional ports, the Commissioner-General of Immigration can designate them.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois, I think, does not mean to make his statement quite as broad as I understood him to make it—that the intention of the amendment, or its effect, was to encourage smuggling.

Mr. HITT. Oh, no, I disclaim that; I impute nothing of the kind. I knew the honorable gentleman from New York would not introduce an amendment for any such purpose. I was trying to point out that while he might be trying to promote the business interests of these localities, a very proper thing for a member to do, the committee had investigated the subject and found from the evidence, especially of our consuls, that the effect of making these ports of entry would be to promote the smuggling of Chinese laborers into the country.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is not in my mind, and I thank the Lord it is not in the mind of a majority of the members of this House, to do anything which will promote the smuggling of Chinese into this country. I believe it is the desire of the House to prevent the Chinese from coming in under the terms of this bill, which are proper and very restrictive; but it does seem to me that if we can prevent the Chinese coming in at the different ports named in the bill, it will be possible also to prevent their coming in unlawfully at the ports named in the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the answer of the gentleman from California that we do not provide in the bill for all the ports, that the Commissioner-General can designate other ports, why not apply that to all ports? What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If that provision is wide enough, let it apply to all and name no ports; but if you are going to name a part of the ports, name them all.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that all the ports named in the bill are seaports. None named are on our borders. I am sorry the gentleman was not here last Saturday, but I read from the testimony of the inspector at Malone, in New York, showing that thousands had been brought over there unlawfully. Now, this is a matter in which any transportation line can go to the Commissioner-General of Immigration and have these ports designated. That is the custom now, and I understand that Plattsburg and Ogdensburg are already designated. If any additional ones are needed, I am satisfied that the Commissioner-General of Immigration will designate them; but I hope that this amendment will not prevail, because, as the chairman of the committee has rightfully said, an investigation will show that an improper use may be made of the privileges.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the gentleman from California are laboring under a misapprehension in this matter. It seems to me that the gentleman from California was laboring under a misapprehension when he read the other day what he now refers to. It is true, in my judgment, that thousands of Chinese come over the Northern borders who ought not to be admitted into this country; but these gentlemen ought to understand that they do not come through any port. The great majority of them are not smuggled in, but they notify the United States officials that they are coming, and then they come over the line—simply walk over the line into this country—are voluntarily arrested by the United States officials and taken into custody and are then disposed of upon such evidence as is produced on each side.

Now, the entrance of all these people has nothing to do with the entrance of Chinese through established ports. The port of entrance is an entirely different thing from the place where these Chinese persons may walk over. For instance, if Richford were a port of entry, persons who might wish to appear and be examined by the Treasury Department would be taken into custody there by the customs official and would be disposed of. If they had not a right to come in and remain here they would be sent out. But, in point of fact, the Chinese who come in unlawfully do not enter through a port of entry. They simply walk over the border and are not taken into custody by the customs officials, but by the marshal, the officers of the United States courts, who take them into custody and try them in our courts.

We simply say, as has been stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], that if it is proper to have a port of entry in one part of the country, why not give us a port of entry in our part of the country, so that if a Chinese person should claim the right to come in he can make application to the Treasury Department through the custom-house at that point and establish his right to do so.

Mr. COOMBS. Does the gentleman desire to invite the entrance of Chinese persons at these ports?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No; and if you want to cut them all out I will help vote down the amendment and leave it with the Treasury Department to name all the ports.

Mr. SHERMAN. If you put San Francisco in, it is an invitation for these people to come in there.

Mr. COOMBS. We would be willing that you should transfer geographically the port of San Francisco if you would take all the Chinese coming in there and take care of them.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then let all the ports named in the bill be struck out.

Mr. COOMBS. In answer to that suggestion I would like to say a word. The law as it stands to-day, and as it must go into operation and be enforced if this bill be passed and approved by the President, provides for certain ports. I do not believe that the scope of the law with reference to that subject has been enlarged; I do not believe it has been confined or curtailed. We are simply reenacting the existing law, but we have gone further for convenience, not for our own convenience, but for the convenience of the Chinese who may desire to be admitted here, those rightfully entitled to come in. We have delegated to the proper officials the authority to determine under certain circumstances and under conditions of justice—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] has expired.

Mr. COOMBS. May I have time simply to add that the Commissioner-General may designate other ports in addition to those enumerated here?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Chairman, the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] that we strike out all the ports named in the bill would, it seems to me, lead to very great confusion. In that case you must vest in the Commissioner-General of Immigration the power to establish ports of entry for Chinese of the accepted classes, for under the bill Chinese laborers are prohibited from coming into the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Now, if you vest that officer with the power to strike out the name of any port he may choose, then between the time that a diplomatic officer accredited to the United States departs from China and the time of his arrival here the immigration commissioner may, if for any reason he desires, discontinue the port for which the officer is headed. In that way I think great confusion might result.

It appears to me it is well to have certain prominent ports known to the world as the ports at which people of this character may present themselves for admission, where our officers of the law can supervise and regulate the matter, and in drafting this bill we have named these ports, because we believed that in this way proper notice would thus be given to the world. In other words, it would be extremely unbecoming if a diplomatic officer of China accredited to this country should be obliged to scan the whole coast of our country—to travel up one side and down the other in order to find a place—a proper port of entry—where he might appropriately present himself before the examining official. For this reason we have designated the ports named, and the fewer the better, in my opinion.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with reference to the general provisions of the bill: We have undertaken by this bill to impose a very effective prohibition upon the right of Chinese laborers to enter here. We have done this because we believe it to be best for our country. It is in accord with the treaty obligations existing between China and the United States. We have the undoubted right thus to limit immigration calculated to interfere with the rights and welfare of American citizens, and it is our duty to do it. We have done it in a way which, in my judgment, reflects credit upon our own country and no discredit or dishonor upon the Chinese Empire, who, according to treaty, have recognized the peril attendant upon a large influx of Chinese laborers. We owe this protection to our own American labor, whose dignity and welfare has been temporarily placed in our hands in this measure. We would be recreant to that trust if we failed to make this bill strong in every part, and we can well afford to be guided by their wisdom. For this reason I should dislike very much to see this change adopted simply because the local port of entry of some member of Congress is not specially mentioned in the bill. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, one word upon the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] as to striking out all of these ports. The Constitution provides that—

No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another.

Now, the question is whether that provision does not prohibit us from selecting or designating any port or ports in preference to others. Under that provision are we not obliged to allow these people to enter, if they enter at all, at any port of the United States that they may select?

It has been held by the courts that the bringing of passengers into this country is commerce; and therefore if we allow a passenger to come into the country at San Francisco, we must allow him to come in at any other port of entry of the United States. Therefore it seems to me that the legal and proper thing would be for us to cut out the designation of all these ports, and allow these people who may come in here to come in at any port that they desire to enter, without making any exception.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The gentleman's suggestion does not meet the position taken by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. No, sir.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The gentleman from New York was urging that we allow the Commissioner-General of Immigration to designate the ports or discontinue them at his pleasure. Certainly the provision which the gentleman has cited would not sustain the gentleman from New York in that proposition.

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. The law as it stands allows a few designated favorite ports, and therefore, if I am correct, is in conflict with the constitutional provision.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SHERMAN, it was rejected.

Mr. KAHN. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "shall," in line 13, section 11, page 7, the words "at such time and place as he may designate."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 5 strike out the words "the ports of" and insert "such," and strike out lines 6 and 7, so that the clause will read, "except at such ports as may be designated by the Commissioner-General," etc.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. The ports which have been designated by the bill are the ports which have long been used as the established places of entry for Chinese persons. It is desirable that some ports should be named in the bill; and, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the constitutional question suggested by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET] I take the liberty of saying that it is entirely without weight. The provision of the Constitution provides that in reference to general commerce no preference shall be given to one port over another port in any other State; but when it comes to the entry of the Chinese laboring men that is a part of the general police regulations. It can be restricted to certain ports, as much as quarantine regulations or the entry of special articles of commerce subject to quarantine regulations can be placed at certain ports. There is, I assure the gentlemen of the committee, no constitutional trouble with the provision by which we have enumerated for the reception of Chinese persons certain ports and certain ports only, leaving it to the judgment of the Commissioner-General of Immigration under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury to designate such other ports as experience may show are required. I hope the amendment will not be adopted by the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be adopted. If adopted, it removes any possibility of any constitutional question being raised. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET] believes that there is a constitutional question involved. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] believes that there is not. There you have two distinguished lawyers differing on this question. I do not pretend to say which one is right, Mr. Chairman, but there is a question, and if this amendment is adopted that question is removed. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] suggests that inserting the word "Ogdensburg" is an invitation to the Chinese to enter at that port. Mr. Chairman, if that be true, the insertion of San Francisco or Portland or these other ports is an invitation for them to enter at these ports.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman misstates what I said, not, of course, with any desire to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I certainly did not so intend.

Mr. KAHN. What I did say was that it would give rise to the fraud the chairman of the committee had spoken of.

Mr. SHERMAN. Neither the gentleman from California nor myself desires to have any Chinamen enter this country except under the provisions of this law. We do not differ as to that, and we deprecate the fact, both of us, I am sure, that heretofore Chinese have unlawfully come into this country, and those that have so come into the country across the border from Canada into the State of New York, which the gentleman from Illinois refers to, have come in unlawfully, and they will not cease to come in unlawfully because the ports are not named in this bill. They can come in unlawfully just the same afterwards. Those ports were open heretofore for the entry of Chinese under the law, yet notwithstanding that the gentleman says hundreds of Chinese were illegally smuggled into this country through that northern border.

Now, what is to prevent their being smuggled in hereafter, and smuggled in in greater numbers, if there are no officers up there to permit them to come in legally? It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if we are to permit the Commissioner-General of Immigration to have power to name any ports, we ought to let him have power to name them all.

Mr. COOMBS. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. COOMBS. If it is unconstitutional to designate any port in this bill, particularly as by inclusion of certain ports and exclusion of others, how could it possibly be constitutional to give the Commissioner-General of Immigration that power?

Mr. SHERMAN. I refer my distinguished friend from California to my colleague from New York [Mr. PERKINS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET] on the constitutional question involved. [Laughter.] I distinctly stated I did not care to act as referee on that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to an amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN].

The question was taken; and on a division called for by Mr. SHERMAN, there were—ayes 22, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I submit to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] that in line 7 a verbal amendment ought to be made by striking out the word "or" and inserting the word "and."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is correct. I will offer that amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

On page 8, in line 7, strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS]. The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That any Chinese required by law to obtain a certificate of residence who shall be found within the jurisdiction of the United States without such certificate shall be deemed to be unlawfully therein, and may be arrested and taken before a United States judge, or before a commissioner of any United States court to be designated by a United States attorney, who may order that said Chinese be deported from the United States unless he shall establish to the satisfaction of said judge or commissioner that by reason of accident, sickness, or other unavoidable cause he has been unable to procure his certificate and that he is rightfully entitled to the same, and upon such showing a certificate of residence shall be granted him.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 12 and substitute the following:

"SEC. 12. That any Chinese required by law to have or to obtain a certificate of residence in the United States or any of its possessions, who shall be found therein without such certificate, shall be deemed to be unlawfully therein, and may be arrested and taken before a United States judge, or before a commissioner of any United States court, to be designated by the United States attorney of the district, or before the appropriate officer of said possession, who may order that said Chinese be deported from the United States or from said possession. If said case arise in any of said possessions of the United States where a registration is required to be taken hereafter, and said Chinese has not registered within the time required by law, and he shall establish to the satisfaction of said officer that, by reason of accident, sickness, or unavoidable cause, he was unable to procure his certificate and that he is rightfully entitled thereto, a certificate of residence shall be given to him for said insular possession.

"It shall be the duty of every Chinese laborer rightfully within any of the insular possessions of the United States (Hawaii excepted) at the time of the passage of this act to obtain, within twelve months after its passage, a certificate of residence in the insular possession wherein he resides. To obtain such certificate he shall apply to the appropriate officer, who, if satisfied on inquiry that the applicant is rightfully within the territory of the United States where he resides, shall issue to him such certificate without charge. The certificate shall contain the name, age, local residence, and occupation of the applicant, his personal signature, and such other matter as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. It shall also contain the photograph of the applicant, made at the time and in the manner required by such rules and regulations. A duplicate or the certificate, which shall also contain a duplicate photograph, shall be retained by the officer issuing the original. Said original certificate shall entitle said Chinese laborer in said insular possession to the rights and privileges therein, as are provided for registered Chinese laborers in the mainland territory of the United States under sections 10 and 11 of this act.

"Immediately after the passage of this act the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe all needful rules and regulations for the registration and certifications by this section required other than in the Philippine Islands."

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out from the last line of the amendment the words "other than" and to insert the word "except."

Mr. CLARK. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri modifies his amendment in the manner suggested by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CLARK. Yes; so that the last clause will read: "except in the Philippine Islands."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That nothing contained in this act shall prevent the readmission of any Chinese laborer who departed from the United States prior to the passage of this act possessing a return certificate valid under the acts repealed hereby: Provided, That on his return he comply with the requirements of the said acts.

Mr. COOMBS. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 9 and 10, page 9, strike out the words "under the acts repealed hereby" and insert "at the time of the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That the certificate mentioned in the preceding section shall be in the English language, shall be made in triplicate, and shall contain the signature of the person to whom issued; and it shall state his individual, family, and tribal names in full, his title and official rank, if any, his age, height, and all physical peculiarities, his former and present occupation or profession, and when, where, and for how long pursued, and his residence, and shall be accompanied by his photograph. If the said person be a merchant, the certificate shall also state the nature and estimated value of the business carried on by him prior to and at the time of his application therefor. If the certificate be issued for the purpose of travel it shall also state whether the applicant intends to pass through, or to travel within, the United States or its possessions, and shall show his financial standing in the country or possession whence he comes.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 4, page 10, after the word "photograph," the following:

"And shall contain such other particulars as may be required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I have sat here and listened to these amendments offered one after the other to the bill as reported out of the committee, and I wish now to enter my protest against all of them which tend to make the provisions of this bill more restrictive than they now are. The situation is simply this in a nutshell: This bill came before the committee and was carefully considered, and on one point we were entirely agreed. That was upon the exclusion of Chinese coolies seeking to come into this country as laborers. Then we came to the other question, as to how far the other classes of the Chinese should be excluded or allowed to enter this country. To a certain extent the sentiments of the committee were unanimous on that point that it was for the benefit of our country that free access should be given to the educated and commercial classes of China, in order to develop that trade which we all hope is going to grow out of the changed conditions in China and in the East.

Then came our friends from California, who advanced the extraordinary theory that it was impossible for the officers of the United States Government to draw the limit between an uneducated, unendowed cooly from China and these educated and commercial classes to which we have referred. They insisted upon all these restrictive measures being put into the bill in order, as they said, to safeguard against the wily Chinese getting into this country in spite of the provisions of this bill.

There were some in the committee who did not think that these stringent measures were necessary. The bill was carefully revised. Everything that in the judgment of the committee was necessary to exclude the cool laborers was done, and the bill was reported with every safeguard thrown around it which we deemed necessary. Now they ask that these stringent measures in addition be included in the bill.

I wish to say, in my best judgment, that that will not develop our trade with China and the efforts that have been made in this country as a result of the Spanish war to build up our trade with the 400,000,000 inhabitants of China. The efforts of the State Department, matching those of Europe, to keep the open door for the benefit of our commerce, will be futile if we will still continue to exclude her people from our shores who are entitled, in my judgment, to come in. Why, our extremity of views can be shown in the guards that are thrown around the class of merchants.

The gentleman from California stated that under this provision a cooly had gotten in. Granted that was true, but it came out in the testimony that the man had paid a thousand dollars to evade the law. How many coolies will be able to raise a thousand dollars to evade the law. Why, many merchants of our country have not much more capital than a thousand dollars, and where a man is able to pay that—there will not many coolies come into our country who have to pay a thousand dollars. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is my best judgment—

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. Do you not think that the Chinese Six Companies can pay a good many thousand dollars?

Mr. ADAMS. I think the Chinese Six Companies will not pour out many thousand dollars for ordinary, common labor in this country. It has never been paid in any other branch under contract or any other way where laborers have been wanted temporarily, and no business man could pay $1,000 a head for ordinary labor to be brought into this country.

Mr. Chairman, the great difficulty with our friends from California is that they are treating this as a political question, and not as an economic question. They are dealing with it from a political standpoint. The gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber are doing the same game—for political reasons. I appeal to those gentlemen who want to look to the general welfare of the country, the men who want to reap the benefits of the new conditions that are coming to our country, and I trust that they will rise here and will try to pass a bill that will be for the benefit of the entire country, and not only for the Pacific coast.

This bill is said to be brought in for the interest of the laborers of this country. I have the greatest regard for labor. I try to look a little further. Our laboring men are much interested in obtaining markets for the products and the commodities of this country. The laboring men want the markets, and we do not want Chinese competition with our labor; but they want to have more markets in which to sell our overproductions in China and other countries.

I consider that it is really in the interest of the laboring man to get the markets of China, and I know, and every man who listens to me knows, that if you will slap a country in the face and say that her people are not proper to come into this country that their educated people will not encourage trade with you. Business may be energetic and reach out, but we know that the buyer will discriminate against those who make such regulations against them, and will buy his goods elsewhere.

Mr. CLARK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Take this bill and make it as stringent as can be made, even by the adoption of the minority substitute, and then I say we will not treat the Chinese half as roughly as the English and Germans treat them.

Mr. KAHN. Or the Japanese.

Mr. CLARK. Or the Japanese.

Mr. KAHN. Or the Russians.

Mr. CLARK. Or the Russians.

Mr. ADAMS. I am not going to legislate for the benefit of other countries. I propose to do so for the benefit of our own, and for one I am going to encourage that better spirit which prevailed in this country to China, and I hope that we will reap the benefit of what we have already done in China in the stimulation that will be given to our trade.

Mr. CLARK. One other question.

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Do you not know that the three nations whose trade has increased with China more than others in recent years are Japan, Russia, and Germany? That Japan gave China a thrashing? Germany has gone over there and has taken a part of her territory, and Russia has taken another slice. Now, this bill, even as the substitute makes it more stringent than the other, would be a great deal more kindly toward China than those three nations that have increased their trade in China.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman represents, as his political party has always done, conditions that are past.

Mr. CLARK. I am talking about conditions right now.

Mr. ADAMS. They never can talk about conditions that are coming to meet us in the future. Here is the condition, and it is true it is one that appeals to the common dictates of human nature, whether it is of a Chinaman or an American, he is going to turn to the nation that treats him best. He will not go to the nation that has crushed him, and we have had evidence of that lately. I call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the spirit which our country has shown in the fair way which it has treated China during the war, in which we have shown such a light to the English and to Europe.

These things, Mr. Chairman, emphasize the position I am taking on this question, and I wish the House to understand that every one of these amendments offered now are to make this bill more stringent, to make it more difficult for merchants, for travelers, for teachers, and students, and commercial people, and others, who would develop trade between our country and China; every one of these amendments, the most of which were stricken out by the committee, are now gradually being put back into the bill, and I now enter my protest against it, and in doing so I do it in the interest of the whole country.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, the contention of my friend from Pennsylvania will not hold. I was not talking about anything in the remote past—the day that is dead. I am talking about the living present, about what is going on in China right now, and what has been going on over there in recent times. The English thrashed the Chinese into trading with them. Japan gave China an awful trouncing in the last four or five years, and Japan's trade with China has increased. Germany went over there and took a good big slice of China and is constantly reaching out for more, and Germany's trade with China has increased. Russia has gone down into Manchuria temporarily, so they say, but there is no man in this House with two ideas about a Hottentot who does not know that Russia deliberately intends never to give up that country she has got hold of.

Now, if England can thrash China into trade, if the Japanese can thrash China into trade, if the Germans can thrash China into trade with them, if the Russians can despoil them and increase their trade, surely we are not going to drive away Chinese trade by the provisions in this bill. It is nonsense to talk about any such thing. The truth is, as I stated in a quotation from Senator BEVERIDGE's speech the other day, there is only one thing that the Chinese have any respect for, and that is a display of force; and that is exactly what William of Hohenzollern is making over there now.

It is what the Russians are doing and it is what the English always have done. It is what the Japanese have done, and, as compared with these four great powers, we are treating the Chinese with a great deal of consideration, even in the minority substitute of this bill, which is a good deal tougher on them than the majority is. I am not advocating making war on China, but I am arguing that if England, Russia, Germany, and Japan have increased their trade with China by the use of the mailed hand surely we will not lose our trade with her by exclusion legislation, however vigorous.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was entirely right when I said that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] referred to past conditions. Japan did fight China, and did defeat her; but she was not allowed to reap any of the fruits of her victory. Russia, Germany, and England did come in and take away all the advantages which she would have had from that war. And what did they demand? What is known as spheres of influence over certain portions of Chinese territory.

To that extent they developed their trade along the coast in these limited spheres with China is granted. But those conditions have passed. In the war with China that has just taken place, and in which the United States for the first time took a hand and was the first to wipe out the claims of this country and the spheres of influence in China, our department has insisted that we should have an open door in every port of China, no limit of the trade of our country with that Empire.

The conditions are now changed, and I say it behooves us to do nothing to get the ill will of that country. I know whereof I speak, whether I have the brains of a Hottentot or not. I believe if some gentlemen had their brains enlarged so that they could look to the new conditions that are going to pervade, they would have a new light break upon them, and be able to judge these matters, not on the conditions of the past, but out of the conditions that are coming, and look to the future.

It is this country that is always looking to future development, and when we want to trade with another country we want no limited sphere of influence gotten by force. We want an open door of the entire country for equitable trade, for them to buy from us what they want, and for us to purchase from them what they have to sell. That is the breadth our country has gone as against the force referred to by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. Chairman, I again reiterate I think this provision tending to make this bill more restrictive and in some cases prohibitive, casting almost a slur on the educated classes of China, is not just, and will hamper this country in its trade with the Chinese Empire.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word to quiet the fears of my colleague on the Committee on Foreign Affairs. If he was willing to support the bill as reported by the committee, I assure him he can without the least trouble or strain of his conscience vote for the bill with the amendments that have been made. There has not been an amendment made to the bill, nor will there be, with the exception, perhaps, of the amendment in reference to the shipping clause, that was of sufficient importance when offered by the members from California to waste the time of the House to talk about it. We have thought that we could satisfy them and that we could save the time of the House by agreeing to a large number of amendments, almost entirely verbal, that were really not essential. I assure my friend that if he liked the bill when it came from the committee and was willing to vote for it then, there is no reason why he should not vote for it after every amendment has been accepted.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, after consultation with the gentleman from New York I find it is agreeable to those having charge of the bill to accept the general clause to be hereafter introduced, which will cover all these points and avoid, in the meanwhile, several amendments exactly like this. Therefore, under these circumstances, with the permission of the House, I ask to withdraw the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. That the original certificate issued under the last two sections shall be, by the said diplomatic or consular representative of the United States visiting the same, delivered to the Chinese named therein.

A sealed duplicate shall be suitably addressed and delivered to the shipmaster, railway conductor, or other person in charge of the transportation of the person to whom the original is given, whose duty it shall be promptly to deliver it to the appropriate officer of the United States at the place where entry is sought by said Chinese.

The triplicate thereof shall be immediately sent by mail to the appropriate officer of the United States at the port at which said Chinese seeks entry.

Mr. COOMBS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "that," in line 12, page 10, insert the following:

"Before any representative of the United States shall visit any certificate of the kind mentioned in the two preceding sections and before any officer of the United States shall issue any such certificate, he shall carefully examine into the facts of the particular case, and if he shall find, after inquiry, that any of the statements of the certificate are false or any of the statements the Chinese applicant seeks to have it contain are false, it shall be his duty to refuse to visit or to issue such certificate."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOMBS. I offer also the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "visiting," in line 14, page 10, insert "or the appropriate officer issuing."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. That the certificate mentioned in the preceding section shall be, when duly visited by the proper diplomatic or consular representative of the United States, or other official, prima facie evidence of the facts therein set forth, and shall be exhibited to the appropriate officer of the United States at the port where the person named therein seeks entry; and it shall be retained by him while he desires to remain in the United States or its possessions, and shall be exhibited to the proper authorities of the United States whenever lawfully demanded, and shall be the only evidence of the right of said Chinese to enter or remain in the United States or its possessions. If any of such recitals be disproved, or if any certificate be fraudulently used, forged, or altered, then the same shall be null and shall be forthwith canceled.

Mr. COOMBS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "be," in line 4, page 11, strike out "exhibited" and insert "produced."

After the word "and," in line 6, page 11, strike out "it shall be retained by him" and insert "if such entry is permitted, such certificate, properly indorsed by the appropriate officer, shall be returned to and retained by said Chinese."

After the word "be," in line 7, page 11, strike out "exhibited" and insert "produced."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. That a Chinese who, being a member of any of the classes mentioned in section 4, is lawfully in the United States at the time of the passage of this act or thereafter, shall be entitled to have issued to him by the appropriate officer a certificate containing his signature, name, personal description, residence, occupation, and place of pursuing it, together with such other matter as the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe. This certificate shall be made in duplicate, and a copy shall be retained by the officer issuing the same. The original and copy shall contain the photograph of the applicant, made as required by rules of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

When any Chinese being a member of any of the classes mentioned in section 4, desires to depart from the United States intending to return thereto, he may apply to the appropriate officer in the district wherein he resides, and make under oath before said officer a full statement, in triplicate, descriptive of his profession, business, or status, and furnish to said officer such proof thereof as shall be required by the rules prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and for any false swearing in relation thereto he shall incur the penalties imposed by law for perjury; and he shall permit the said officer to take a full description of his person, which description the said officer shall retain and mark with a number. The original and each copy of said statement shall contain the photograph of the applicant, made as required by the rules prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The original of said statement shall be retained by the officer before whom it is made, and the copies thereof shall be by him transmitted to the appropriate officer at the port whence the applicant intends to depart from the United States.

If said last-mentioned officer, after hearing the proof and investigating all the circumstances of the case, shall decide that the representations of status are true, he shall sign and give to the said applicant a certificate containing the number of the description last aforesaid, which shall be the evidence given to such person of his right to return.

If the last-named certificate be transferred it shall become void, and the person to whom it was given shall forfeit his right to reside in, or return to, the United States.

To entitle any such Chinese to readmission to the United States or its possessions he shall produce to the appropriate officer at the port of entry the return certificate in this section provided for; and he shall be permitted to reenter only at the port whence he departed. But it shall be the right of any such person to waive the provisions of this section, and for his readmission into the United States to depend upon the prior sections of this act.

Mr. KAHN. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 16 and 17, page 11, the words "or thereafter."

After the word "resides," in line 6, page 12, insert "at least one month prior to the time of his departure, such application to be accompanied by his certificate of registration."

After the word "shall," in line 1, page 13, insert "at such time and place as he may designate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. That the lawful wife or minor children of any Chinese of the classes mentioned in section 4, actually domiciled in the United States, shall be entitled to enter therein upon exhibiting to the appropriate officer at the port of entry a certificate as follows:

First. If the wife or child come from a foreign country, the certificate shall have been issued to such person by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence such person departed, and shall state that after investigation said representative believes that the relationship asserted exists.

Second. If the wife or child come from an insular possession of the United States and seek entry into mainland territory thereof, the certificate shall have been issued by the appropriate officer of the United States at the port whence such person departed, and shall state that after investigation said officer believes that the relationship asserted exists.

Third. It is made the duty of diplomatic and consular representatives and other officers of the United States to make strict investigation as to such certificates, and to issue them only when the relationship claimed is clearly established.

Fourth. Said certificates shall be issued in triplicate, and each shall contain the photograph of the person named in it.

The original certificate shall be, by the person issuing it, delivered to the person named in it, or, if such person be an infant, to the person in charge of such infant.

A sealed duplicate shall be duly addressed and delivered to the shipmaster, railway conductor, or other person in charge of the transportation of the person named therein, who shall deliver it promptly to the appropriate officer of the United States at the port where entry is sought by said Chinese.

The triplicate shall be immediately sent by mail to the appropriate officer at the port where said Chinese seeks entry.

No woman shall be deemed a wife within the meaning of this act unless she would be held to be legally married by the courts of the United States.

Mr. COOMBS. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 19, page 13, the words "exhibiting to" and insert "proving to the satisfaction of."

After the word "entry" in line 20, page 13, insert "That the required relationship exists and producing for him."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. That the preceding sections shall not apply to Chinese diplomatic or consular officers duly accredited to the United States or any foreign government, or to their attendants or servants.

Other Chinese officers of China or any other foreign government shall establish their identity as such, and the identity of their attendants and servants, in accordance with rules prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KAHN. I move to amend by inserting after the word "servants," in line 6, page 15, the words, "who shall be admitted under special instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 22. That, except as herein provided, before any Chinese is landed from any vessel on territory of the United States, or before any Chinese brought to any inland port shall be permitted to leave the car or other conveyance in which he was brought, the appropriate officer shall examine such Chinese, comparing his certificate with the lists required by this act, and with such Chinese, and no Chinese shall be allowed to land or to enter in violation of law. The examination herein required shall be made immediately after the arrival at port or border.

Mr. KAHN. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "inland," line 14, page 15, insert "border."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. That the master of any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or from any insular possession of the United States shall, immediately on arriving and before landing or permitting to land any Chinese passenger, deliver to the appropriate officer at the port in which such vessel shall have arrived a list of all Chinese taken on board his vessel at any port or place, and of all such persons then on board the vessel. Such list shall show the names of such persons (and in the case of accredited officers of the Chinese or other foreign government traveling on the business of such government, or their servants or attendants, a note setting forth such facts), the port or place at which each was taken on board, and such particulars as to each as are shown by their respective certificates hereinbefore required; and such list shall be verified by the master in the manner required by law in cases of manifest of cargo.

The foregoing provision shall apply to the masters of all vessels arriving at any insular possession of the United States.

The willful neglect of any such master to comply with the provisions of this section shall be punished by the penalties and forfeiture imposed upon a refusal to report and deliver a manifest of cargo.

Mr. KAHN. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "a," in line 2, page 15, insert the word "separate," so as to read "a separate list of all Chinese taken on board."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 25. That Chinese laborers shall enjoy the privilege of transit across territory of the United States in the course of their journey to or from other countries, subject to the following provisions:

First. The applicant shall exhibit to the appropriate officer at the port where entry is sought a fully paid through ticket entitling said applicant to transportation from such port to his destination in the foreign country, and shall also exhibit to said officer a certificate as follows: (a) If the applicant come from a foreign country, a certificate issued to him by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence he departed, which shall state that after investigation said representative believed that said applicant intended to go directly to, and to reside in, the foreign country designated; (b) if the applicant come from an insular possession of the United States and seek the privilege of transit across mainland territory of the United States, or come from the United States or any of its possessions and seek the privilege of transit across any insular possession thereof, he shall exhibit a certificate of like effect, issued to him by the appropriate officer of the United States at the port or place whence said applicant departed. It is made the duty of diplomatic and consular representatives and other officers of the United States to investigate all applications for such certificates, and to issue them only when the applications are shown to be in good faith, and to furnish such further information as may be prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may at any time suspend the privilege of transit where the same is sought by laborers coming from an insular possession of the United States.

Second. Privilege of transit shall be denied if the applicant refuse to submit to such examination of his person and baggage and to such investigation as may be deemed necessary by the appropriate officer, or if he fail to establish to the satisfaction of said officer that he intends to proceed directly to the destination named in his certificate and is not seeking to abuse the said privilege.

Third. Privilege of transit shall be denied if the applicant shall have sought admission into the United States or its possessions and shall have been refused.

Fourth. Privilege of transit shall be denied if the applicant fail to comply with any rule or regulation which the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may from time to time prescribe with a view to prevent abuse of such privilege.

Fifth. The master of any vessel, the conductor of any railway train, or the person in charge of any other conveyance, bringing to any port in the United States, or on the border thereof, any applicant for privilege of transit, shall, immediately after arrival and before permitting to land, or to cross the border, any such applicant, deliver to the appropriate officer of the United States a separate list of all applicants so brought, which shall show the name of each applicant, the matter contained in the certificate he bears, and whatever else may be required by the rules prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and this list shall be verified by the person bound to deliver it, the oath to be administered by the officer to whom it is delivered.

Sixth. In addition to the ports of entry named in section 11 the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may designate other ports or places at which entry into the United States or its possessions for the purpose of transit may be granted. But in the case of entry along the boundary between the United States and the Republic of Mexico and the boundary between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, no place along either of said boundaries shall be designated as a place of entry for any Chinese, whether in transit or otherwise, until there shall have been executed between the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, on the part of the United States, and the persons or corporations proposing to bring Chinese to such place, contracts binding such persons and corporations to observe all the laws and regulations of the United States relating to exclusion, entry, or transit of Chinese under such penalties as shall be set forth in said contracts; and such place shall only remain open to entry of Chinese in transit or otherwise while such contracts remain in force and unbroken. The Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may at any time close any such place to transit privilege if in his judgment such privilege is being abused.

Mr. KAHN. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 20, page 17, strike out "exhibit" and insert in lieu thereof the word "deliver."

In line 7, page 18, strike out "exhibit" and insert "deliver."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOKER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 25 and insert:

"SEC. 25. That Chinese laborers shall continue to enjoy the privilege of transit across the territory of the United States in the course of their journey to or from other countries, and in pursuance of the provisions of the second paragraph of article 3 of the treaty between the United States and China; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to make and prescribe, and from time to time to change and amend, such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary and proper to prevent said privileges of transit being abused."

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I think that we ought to allow the treaty to be observed as it originally stood, and that the right of transit to Chinamen—not of occupancy, not of residence, but the right of transit through our country from any other civilized country in which he may live—should be granted, according to the terms of the paragraph of the treaty to which I have referred, and to clothe the Secretary of the Treasury with power to adopt all regulations which may be necessary in the estimation of the Commissioner of Immigration and the Secretary of the Treasury, approved by him; to adopt any and every regulation to prevent Chinese from occupying this country in any form whatever, even for temporary residence; but I think we ought to observe the treaty which gives them the right of transit and which proposes to allow our own railways to transport them across the continent instead of compelling them to go to the railways of Canada and to get across in that way.

It is but an act of justice, of equity, of fair dealing to allow them this privilege, and I think therefore that all these minute regulations embodied and embraced in this bill ought to be taken away and that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Immigration ought to be allowed to prescribe these regulations, to give them the right which the treaty does—not of occupancy even temporarily, but of transit across the country, if they wish to, and not encumber the bill with numerous regulations, now embraced in section 25. I am not able to speak much and do not desire to. I expressed my views on this bill at length in my speech of Saturday last, and on that I stand for this amendment as well as for my general opinions as to the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I think I ought to say that the committee does not approve of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 26. That every Chinese brought by vessel to any port of the United States shall be detained on such vessel until a final decision shall have been rendered as to his right to enter the United States, and every Chinese brought to an inland border port of the United States shall be detained without its territory until the final decision as to the right of such Chinese to enter, and the duty of such detention shall rest, jointly and severally respectively, on the master, owner, agent, and consignee of the vessel or on the person, corporation, or agent by whom said Chinese was transported or aided to such port: Provided, That Chinese may be elsewhere detained pending such final decisions, in accordance with such rules as the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 4, page 21, the words "without its territory" and insert "at such port."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 29. That every vessel whose master, owner, agent, or consignee shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of this act shall be subject to a penalty of $2,000, and shall be forfeited to the United States unless such penalty be paid.

Mr. KAHN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in section 29, line 25, page 22, after the word "dollars," the following: "for each offense."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 30. That any person who shall knowingly bring into or attempt to bring into or conspire to bring into the United States any Chinese otherwise than as prescribed by this act shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000, or by imprisonment for a term not less than six months and not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, after the words "United States," insert the words "or its possessions."

Mr. PERKINS. With great respect to my colleague on the committee, I hardly think it would be proper to adopt that amendment. This is a section imposing a penalty and to make a violation of the act a felony. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin would constitute this act a felony in all the insular possessions of the United States. We have not as yet attempted to legislate for those possessions. I do not think we desire at this time to declare these acts shall be felonies within the Philippine Islands. I trust my friend will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. OTJEN. With the consent of the committee, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not discuss the details of this bill. I have heretofore presented to the House a number of petitions urging the passage of a suitable Chinese-exclusion act. The present Chinese-exclusion law will soon expire by limitation, and the whole question of Chinese exclusion is once more before us for determination.

Mr. Chairman, the Republican party is committed to the principle of tariff protection. We maintain that our manufacturers and laborers here ought to be protected against the cheaper labor of the old country. I believe in the protective principle of the Republican party, and for the same reasons I believe in a proper Chinese-exclusion act. I am not familiar enough with the civilization or the people of China to express well-formed ideas in regard to either, but it is very evident that the American laborer who has a family can not compete in cheapness of labor with the Chinaman. How many Chinese would come to our country if there were no exclusion law? I do not know. No one knows. Few might come. Many might come. The only safety for our civilization is to exclude the many who might come.

Mr. Chairman, civilization has girdled the globe. The oldest civilization is in China. And as civilization has moved westward from China it has changed in degree, character, and force until now, having encircled the world, the civilization of Europe and America is forcing its way through the entrances into the Chinese Empire.

We may perhaps find that we are waking a sleeping giant, but it is impossible for us to stop. We would not if we could. We could not if we would. The impelling forces of progress are too great for our resistance. Within a few years Japan has been revived. As the sun of Western civilization has commenced to throw his morning rays on her shores, that little Empire has awakened from its long sleep and has suddenly become one of the most active and progressive nations in the world. Who can doubt that similar results will occur in China? And when China fully awakens with her hundreds of millions of people, more economical, more imitative, and more willing to work than the people of any other nation, it will cause a reawakening of all mankind and possibly a readjustment between nations and peoples. The conflict has not yet become deadly, but the skirmishes have begun. This bill is one of them. The civilization of the West and the civilization of China are in conflict.

I wonder if the hordes of China, when that nation is thoroughly awakened, will not attempt, through mere force of numbers, to overpower American civilization as the Goths and Huns and Vandals overcame the civilization of Rome. The coming conflict with China, however, will be more desperate than the one which caused the fall of Rome. The civilization of China will never amalgamate with the civilization of America. The people of China and the people of America are of two different races, which can never coalesce.

Mr. Chairman, I do not fear for the future, but wise statesmanship requires us to prepare for its possibilities. It is not only our duty to protect the labor of this country from the degrading influence and unmeasured competition which would come through open Chinese immigration, but it is also our duty to prepare for the inevitable conflict, either of commerce or war, or perhaps both, between the mighty Chinese Empire and people on one side and Western civilization on the other. We need not think that such conflict will be easy because of the experience of the past. In our dealings with China the past can be no guide to the future. The activity of a man when he is awake can not be judged by examining him in the stillness of sleep.

Whether such conflict shall be a commercial war or a naval war, it seems to me that it is the duty of this country to hold command of the Pacific Ocean.

With a shortsightedness which looks to me like blind folly, our Democratic friends on the other side of this House insist that we shall not only break down the bars of the protective tariff and thereby let into this country the products of cheap Chinese labor, but that we shall also yield control over the Philippine Islands, and thereby lose command of the Pacific Ocean.

But, Mr. Chairman, they will not succeed. We will maintain the protective tariff. We will keep control of the Philippine Islands and the Pacific Ocean. We will maintain our own home market for our people. We will keep out the cheap and degrading labor of the Chinese coolie, and yet, through the inspiring genius, the commercial acumen, the handiness of labor, through the combination of brains and brawn peculiar to our own race, and stronger in our own country than elsewhere, we will invade the other markets of the world and maintain our supremacy of commerce both at home and abroad. [Loud applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 31. That any Chinese found within the United States in violation of any provision of this act may be arrested by any United States officer and shall be forthwith taken before a United States judge in the district wherein the arrest is made, or before the United States commissioner designated by the United States attorney of said district, who shall proceed to inquire into the case. Unless the person so arrested shall establish, by affirmative proof, to the satisfaction of said judge or commissioner, that he has a lawful right to be in the United States, it shall be the duty of said judge or commissioner to order that he be deported.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 20, page 30, after the words "United States," insert the following: "And by the production of a certificate required by this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 33. Whenever a Chinese shall be deported:

First. If he came from a foreign country, he shall be returned thither or to the country of which he is a subject or citizen.

Second. If he came without right to the United States mainland from its insular possessions he shall be returned thereto.

Orders of deportation shall be executed by the United States marshal of the district wherein the orders are made with all convenient dispatch, and pending such execution he shall detain in his custody the person ordered to be deported, who shall not be admitted to bail, save in cases of appeal, as hereinafter provided.

Mr. KAHN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in section 33, line 3, page 24, after the word "citizen," the following: "Provided, That in any case where a country whence said Chinese came shall demand any tax as a condition of the removal of such person to that country, he shall be sent to China."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 34. That the Philippine Commission are authorized and required to make all regulations and provisions necessary for the enforcement of this act in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 24, line 15, after the word "enforcement," insert "of such sections and clauses as they may deem desirable and necessary."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, it does seem that there must be some of the provisions of this act which are not justified in so far as the Philippine Islands are concerned. Those islands are nearly 10,000 miles from our shores. The Chinese have been there in force for hundreds of years, and it does seem almost unnecessary, so far as the Philippine Islands are concerned, to enforce this law as we propose to make it. It seems unnecessary to make it absolutely mandatory on the Philippine Commission to do so in order to protect the United States. I believe that we could with wisdom allow these men to have some say as to the provisions of this act and as to the extent to which it shall be enforced there.

This is a new country so far as we are concerned. The best government for that country by us is as yet unknown, and its requisites and necessities are yet to be studied and considered carefully in so far as we individually as a nation are concerned in its government, and I believe and hope that the gentlemen who are pushing this measure will be sufficiently liberal at least to allow the Philippine Commission to use discretion, and not do an absolute injustice to the Chinese to the extent of excluding them from places where they have been since before this country was practically ever heard of, when Western civilization was unknown and Eastern civilization was at its height.

We are endeavoring absolutely to preclude these people from coming into those islands as much as we are from coming into this country. I am thoroughly in accord with every provision of this act which is not illiberal and illogical; but when it comes down to a simple question of pure persecution, and unnecessary persecution at that, I believe we are putting on the statute books a law which, if extended to the islands that have recently come into our possession, and which many people think should not be in our possession at all, will be doing something that is not worthy of this country, and that will react on us to such an extent that we will be heartily ashamed of ourselves within the next year or two. I therefore hope that the committee in charge of this bill will allow my amendment to become a part of the act.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail. The committee that has had this bill in charge has given this matter a great deal of thought and attention. Governor Taft himself appeared before that committee. Our present exclusion laws and regulations are in force in the islands, as I understand it, and this provision of this bill will simply continue existing conditions in the islands, only that it will transfer the enforcement of the law from the War Department, where it now is, to the Philippine Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOUGLAS].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 35. That any Chinese who violates any of the provisions of this act shall be deported. The hearing in such cases shall be before a United States judge in the district wherein said Chinese is found, or before a United States commissioner designated by a United States attorney.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert in line 21, page 24, after the word "attorney," the words "of said district."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 38. That the master of any foreign vessel which shall bring to the United States any Chinese not entitled to entry shall be required to execute a bond satisfactory to the Treasury Department, in the sum of $2,000 for each of said Chinese, conditioned that none of such Chinese shall land from said vessel while said vessel remains within the United States. The bond shall be canceled upon the certificate of the appropriate officer that all Chinese covered by it have departed from the United States on said vessel.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Line 5, page 26, after the word "vessel" add the following:

"And it shall be unlawful for any vessel not foreign, that is to say, any vessel under the flag of the United States, to have or to employ in its crew any Chinese person not entitled to admission to the United States or into the particular territory of the United States to which such vessel plies, and any violation of this provision shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $2,000."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order. I object to this amendment on the ground that it is not germane to the bill, and I will state my views, if the Chairman desires.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Moody of Massachusetts). The Chair would be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, this bill, as is shown by its title, is a bill—

To prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent.

That is the object as stated in the caption of the bill, and that is the object sought to be secured by all the provisions of the bill which are intended to prevent the coming into the United States and its insular possessions of Chinese persons, except as allowed by law. Now, what is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri? Does it prohibit the coming of a Chinese person into the United States? It no more prohibits the coming of a Chinese person into the United States than it prohibits the coming of a Chinese person into Great Britain. But it says what? It shall be unlawful for any vessel holding an American registry to have or employ in the crew any Chinese person not entitled to admission into the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me illustrate—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state—it may not be material, but the gentleman has misquoted the language. The language is: "And it shall be unlawful on a vessel not foreign;" that is to say, any vessel under the flag of the United States.

Mr. PERKINS. That is the same thing. As it was given to me it was a vessel "holding an American register." As the amendment is submitted, "carrying the American flag," which is, of course, a vessel holding an American register. Let me illustrate here. This is a bill to prohibit the coming of Chinese into the United States. Suppose the gentleman should offer an amendment to it, and, let us say, section 25, "Be it enacted, That no American in the city of Paris shall employ a Chinese as his servant." That would not be germane to this bill. It would not be cognate to the idea. This is to prevent Chinese coming into this country.

Here is a provision which would be perfectly proper in a bill in reference to the shipping interests of the United States, and because proper there, because it would be cognate in a bill regulating the shipping of the United States, and regulating the American register of the United States, it necessarily follows that it is not germane to a bill which regulates the coming of Chinese persons into the United States. Now, this provision says what? Every ship entitled to an American register, or every ship carrying the American flag, which is the same thing, shall not employ Chinese. That ship may be sailing anywhere. It may be sailing from Alexandria to Constantinople; it may be sailing from Marseille to Gibraltar. Of course, I recognize the fact, as every man knows, that an American ship is subject to the laws of the United States, the same as an American citizen, wherever he may be, abroad or at home.

But I am confident, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment I have suggested, of an American citizen being in Paris, or anywhere else, who happens to have in his employ a Chinese servant, would not be germane to this bill; and the amendment offered by the gentleman, in the same way, is not germane to this bill, which is to prevent the coming into the United States of Chinese persons. How does that provision apply to this bill? The amendment that is offered says that no ship, whatever it may be, in the Atlantic or the Pacific, if it be making a voyage between two ports not in the United States at all, shall employ a Chinese laborer. That does not prevent, and it does not seek to prevent, and it does not purport to prevent, and it can not prevent one single Chinaman from coming into the United States. It has no more to do with that, as I said before, than it has to do with a Chinaman going into Japan or England. It is as foreign to this bill as it would be if an amendment were offered that ships having American register should be forbidden to employ Japanese or Swedes or any other class of men. It is a subject to be considered in the regulation of the American shipping, if that were before the committee, but it is thoroughly foreign to the bill we have now under consideration.

Mr. CLARK. Unless the Chair is ready to rule my way, I want to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. Now, my friend's objection divides itself into two parts. The first one is that the amendment is not covered by the title of the bill. By the simplest performance the title could be made to conform to the bill after it is amended. If it is necessary and the title does not cover it now, we could very easily say, "and also to prevent Chinese sailors being employed on board of American ships." That would dispose of objection No. 1.

Secondly, the gentleman says it is not germane to this bill, because the intention of the bill is to exclude Chinese laborers from the United States. The answer to that, and it is very short and very simple, is that the deck of every American ship is American territory, just as much as any foot of ground under the American flag. I want to say this, while I am up, and that is all I have to say about it. In 1812 the United States went to war with Great Britain on the cry of "free trade and sailors' rights." It was really the last half of that cry which created and precipitated the war with Great Britain in 1812—"sailors' rights;" and I say here to-day, without going into any extensive argument about it, because I argued it on Friday for all it was worth, that American laborers on board ship are just as much entitled to this protective legislation for American laborers as American laborers by land. [Applause.]

There is no use dodging what this bill is. I have always believed in being honest because I believe that honesty in the end wins. It is an abnormal condition of affairs that presents itself here, and that is that we know that American laborers can not compete with Chinese laborers, and this bill is entirely for the protection of American laborers. Now, you have protected everybody else, or pretended to, in the United States by the high-tariff system.

A MEMBER. Are you in favor of that?

Mr. CLARK. No; I am opposed to the whole system.

Mr. ADAMS. I thought the gentleman wanted to protect the American laborer.

Mr. CLARK. I do; and here is the chance to protect him without beating around the bush, and nobody else will get the benefit of it. You have protected the merchant, the manufacturers, and protected everybody else under the tariff system except the laborer, and this bill is intended to protect American labor against cheap Chinese labor. There is no sense nor justice in applying it to laborers by land and not by sea, and that is all I have to say about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask whether the amendment is confined, or is intended to be confined, to ships plying between American ports?

Mr. CLARK. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. And those only?

Mr. CLARK. It is intended to apply to American ships that ply between American ports, and territories, in insular possessions, or provinces, or colonies, or whatever you may call them. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman give that construction to the amendment which he offers?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask whether, in the opinion of the gentleman from Missouri, an American vessel not plying between American ports—and by American ports the Chair means those not only of the United States, but those belonging to the United States—whether this prohibition would, under the amendment, exist against the employment of Chinese on such vessels—that is, vessels that did not touch at any American port?

Mr. CLARK. I think it applies to all American vessels. If the Chair pleases, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has a substitute for my amendment.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order now, but for the information of the committee it may be read.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Missouri is willing to accept it as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri withdraw his amendment?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am willing for this to be accepted as a substitute for my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri, without objection, withdraws his amendment, and the Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, line 5, after the word "vessel," insert the following:

"And it shall be unlawful for any vessel holding an American register to have or to employ in its crew any Chinese person not entitled to admission to the United States, or into the portion of the territory of the United States to which such vessel plies; and any violation of this provision shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $2,000."

"But said penalty shall not accrue in the case of any such vessel which shall suffer the loss of a portion of her crew by reason of distress or stress of weather in any foreign jurisdiction or port and shall be compelled thereby to employ Chinese seamen to complete her complement of officers and men: Provided, That to relieve from said penalty in such case it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer that in such foreign jurisdiction or port no seamen other than Chinese were obtainable, and that every such Chinese seaman was discharged from the service of such vessel immediately upon the arrival thereof at the first port where seamen other than Chinese could be obtained, and that if so discharged at any port under the jurisdiction of the United States no such Chinese seaman was permitted to depart from such vessel, but that each such Chinese seaman was forthwith transported as a passenger on such vessel, and at the expense thereof, to a foreign port, and that no such Chinese seaman did reenter the service of such vessel after such discharge."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I raise the same point of order as on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri. I desire to call the Chairman's attention to the fact, in answer to the questions put to the gentleman from Missouri, that whatever may be the intention of any person offering this amendment, there can be no question as to what it says. It is general, Mr. Chairman; it says it shall be unlawful—that is, unlawful anywhere—for any vessel with an American register to have or employ or in its care any Chinese person not entitled to admission to the United States. It says that and no more, and there is nothing to modify it. It is unlawful for any vessel plying anywhere with an American register.

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. In regard to the question asked by the chairman of the gentleman from Missouri, allow me to remark that if he wishes his amendment to apply simply to American vessels in American ports he should modify it, so as to have it apply to vessels in the domestic trade. Possibly that is what he means.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Is it not presumable that all vessels of American registry touch American ports sooner or later? The voyage may be short or may be long, but they are presumed to touch at the home port.

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. That might not be.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, whatever may be the title of this bill, and whatever the nationality to which, as drawn, it may specifically apply, is it not true that it is legislation upon the general immigration system of the country? If the bill now before the House, called "the Chinese-exclusion act," is not a bill essentially to regulate immigration, what is it? There is practically no doubt that the United States has full jurisdiction over the question of immigration. It seems to me there can be no question that anything bearing directly upon the general system of immigration is in order on a bill dealing with the subject of immigration, though only dealing with a branch of it.

Now, for the purposes of legal regulation, criminal and civil, the deck of a vessel carrying a United States license and sailing under a United States flag is as much territory of the United States as is the District of Columbia. Where can she sail, where can she be, that in case of abuse of the crew or the commission of a felony or other similar occurrence the court of the United States will not hold that the vessel is to be regarded as a part of American territory?

Now, if this be a bill for the regulation of immigration, and if a vessel bearing the license and carrying the flag of this country is a part of the United States territory, then a provision regulating immigration—the coming of Chinese or other people on board of a United States vessel anywhere in the world—is germane to this bill; and it is equally germane to regulate the employment of such persons upon that vessel, wherever she may be, as much as though she were a part of the fixed territory of the country.

The illustration given here in regard to the employment of servants in Paris has no application whatever, because that city is not and never will be under the jurisdiction or the flag of the United States.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, just a word on this question. Admitting that the deck of an American ship is American territory, there is nothing in this bill, if I understand it, regulating the employment of Chinese by Americans. This amendment proposes to say that a Chinese shall not be employed by an American on the deck of a ship. That has nothing to do with the other provisions of the bill. We might just as well undertake to prohibit the employment of Frenchmen on a ship. That seems to me to be the whole question. The proposition is not to exclude people from coming upon an American ship—to exclude them from coming upon the deck of one of our vessels as immigrants; it has nothing to do with the employment by Americans of anybody. Therefore it is entirely foreign to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule with considerable hesitation upon this question. There is no question as to the rule which governs the point now raised by the gentleman from New York. The statement of Rule XVI is in these words:

No motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under cover of an amendment.

However simple the rule may be, its application to the varying states of fact which are brought before this body is not easy, because it is not always easy to decide what is the subject under consideration. In this case it is by the title of the bill said to be a proposition "to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under their jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent."

The title of a bill is unimportant, except so far as it correctly describes the bill itself. The Chair has examined this bill with a good deal of care, and has caused it to be examined by another person with a good deal of care. In point of fact, there is no provision in the bill except a provision looking to the exclusion of Chinese from our territory. There is no provision regulating the employment of Chinese within our territory, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] has just now so forcibly pointed out. Whatever the motive may be behind the bill, whatever the reason for its enactment may be, the actual subject under consideration is the exclusion of Chinese from American territory.

It is said that the deck of an American ship is American territory. So it is, while that ship is upon the high seas. When it is in the port of a foreign country it is not American territory unless the ship be a public ship of war. Such, if the Chair understands correctly, is the rule of international law.

But the amendment offered by the gentleman from California is not to prohibit Chinese from coming upon the ships sailing under the American flag, but is to prohibit their employment under the American flag, a subject entirely different from that under consideration by the committee. Could it be in order, for instance, upon an immigration bill excluding certain classes of people from coming to these shores, to provide that our ambassadors abroad should not employ persons of that same description? It would hardly be contended that that would be in order.

The attention of the Chair has been called to a ruling made by Mr. Speaker Reed on the 19th of May, 1896, where a bill to amend the immigration laws of the United States was before the House, and it was proposed by that bill to exclude all male persons between 16 and 60 years of age "who can not both read and write the English language or some other language." Mr. CORLISS, of Michigan, offered an amendment excluding aliens living in another country and while so living there entering into the United States to engage in labor within its borders—what the Chair remembers the gentleman from Michigan termed "birds of passage."

A point of order was made against the amendment, and Mr. Speaker Reed sustained the point of order upon the ground that the amendment was not germane, although both the bill and the amendment had in view the protection of American labor. The Chair will say that if this amendment had proposed to prohibit the presence as employees of Chinese persons upon American ships touching American ports, where there would be an opportunity for escape from the ship from time to time, the Chair would have ruled that to be germane to the general purpose of the bill, which is to prohibit the entering of Chinese persons into American territory; but for the reasons that were so well stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW], that this bill is not engaged in the regulating of the employment of labor, but in excluding persons of Chinese blood and descent from our territories, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KAHN. May I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the section be passed in order that I may amend my amendment to meet with the views of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the section be passed. Is there objection?

Mr. HOOKER. In order that he may evade the ruling of the Chair? Mr. Chairman, I object, if that is the purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. KAHN. Then I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

And it shall be unlawful for any vessel holding an American register, touching at an American port, to have or to employ in its crew any Chinese, etc.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order to this amendment, and I submit it in no way changes the character of the prior amendment. The gentleman's amendment endeavors to do what? He says it shall be unlawful for any vessel to employ in its crew any Chinese person. That is as already ruled by the Chair and, as was suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, a regulation of the employment of labor. He has merely added in describing this vessel, a vessel touching at an American port. Of course every vessel holding an American registry touches at an American port, but it does not in any way, as I submit, meet the ruling which has already been made by the Chair.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to modify the amendment so that it shall read "at a voyage terminating at an American port."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And it shall be unlawful for any vessel holding an American register on a voyage terminating at an American port to have or to employ, etc.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I submit it does not change it at all. It still regulates the employment of Chinese.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add a simple suggestion to what has already been said.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from California.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, anticipating, of course, that the Chair is ruling now upon a different proposition, this bill provides in section 1 that from and after its passage the coming, except under the conditions hereinafter specified, of Chinese laborers from any country shall be prohibited. It has been suggested in a remark to the chairman that when a vessel once pushes into port she loses that character which in fiction of law is attributed to her and which brings her exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government by reason of being an American bottom.

When she comes into port she comes within the jurisdiction of the sovereign State. She comes within the jurisdiction of the particular county whose borders describe the waters whereon she sails. Hence, essentially and technically, when she plies from one port to another of the United States, the moment she comes within the waters of a State she is upon American territory. She is within the State, she is within the confines of the United States, and those upon her come within all of the exclusive clauses of this bill.

The only mistake which we have made heretofore in considering this matter is this: Those who have objected to this particular amendment have said it was an attempt on the part of the Government to regulate the conduct of individuals in the employment of individuals. That is too narrow and restricted a construction. It is an attempt rather on the part of the Government of the United States to regulate, as this bill proposes to regulate, those who can come within the confines of the United States and within the confines of the State, and of course within the jurisdiction of the law which we here are proposing to enact.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair has stated, this bill is to prohibit the entrance of Chinese laborers into the United States. Seamen are laborers within the distinctions made in this bill, and the amendment now before the committee proposes to prohibit the coming of such laborers into an American port. It is based upon the theory that great safeguards are needed to carry out the purpose of the law. The bill is full of provisions which are intended to guard against evasions of the law. For instance, upon page 10 of the bill it is provided that even the Chinese who are entitled under this bill to enter our ports can only come in at certain named ports of entry. In other words, the regulation of American ships or foreign ships bearing Chinese to our shores is prescribed by this bill. The Chair thinks, therefore, that, with the modifications which have been made in the amendment, it is clearly in order and overrules the point of order. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, will the Clerk read that part of the amendment which has been modified, which is the question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first paragraph of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And it shall be unlawful for any vessel holding an American register, on a voyage terminating at an American port, to have or to employ in its crew any Chinese person, etc.

Mr. HITT. Go on and read the penalty.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not entitled to admission into the United States or into the portion of the territory of the United States to which such vessel plies, and any violation of this provision shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $2,000.

Mr. HITT. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the essence of the amendment. The gentleman who first offered it said it was for the protection of American labor on ships, or for the protection of American seamen. The Chinese would be employed, if anywhere, upon vessels sailing the Pacific Ocean. We had testimony before our committee, and it is the abundant knowledge of all who are familiar with the subject, that scarce one in twenty of the persons employed upon ships sailing the Pacific Ocean is a native American. There is very little encouragement in any such provision to the noble American boy whom we wish to encourage.

I am a protectionist, but this protection attempted to be enforced upon the high seas, where men must carry on their business in competition with all the world and without any restrictions upon rivals, is protection gone to such an exaggeration and perversion that it almost amounts to insanity. It is not protection to nourish, but to destroy, American shipping. What would be the result? Ships sailing that sea have to run in competition with others of all nations. I am informed there are three steamers upon that ocean now flying the American flag. There are more than fifty steamers in competition with them flying the other different flags of the world and employing any labor they please or can. They depend for existence upon what they receive for freight and passengers—for the work done.

You propose by this amendment to exclude those who are under the American flag from purchasing labor in the market on the same terms as other ships who are their rivals. Remember, they do not now employ American labor. They can not. There are no American sailors now in the world in surplus above the market demand. There is a minority of American-born sailors upon ships that run right out of those very New England towns which were long the nursery of American seamen. If anyone will read the reports of our consuls at the Mediterranean ports it will be plain, from the names of those relieved, that the men employed on American ships east of the United States are not Americans born, except an inconsiderable part; and when you reach the oriental seas, and that torrid zone, an American-born sailor becomes still rarer.

Now, you propose to compel an American merchant whose money is put into a ship and who is trying to press trade forward, for his own profit, of course, to enlarge American commerce—you compel him in employing labor to pass by Chinese, if that is most advantageous, and to hire Malays, Lascars, Portuguese, Japanese, and all that miscellany found in the ports of the Eastern world. You can get Americans for clerks and engineers and foremen on these boats. You can get them for skilled labor. But you do not find an American in the sweat and heat and suffocation of those parts of the ship where Chinamen are employed. Now, the result would be—

Mr. METCALF. Do you not find them on the transports?

Mr. HITT. There are Americans on board, as I have said.

Mr. METCALF. You find them in the engine room and in the stoke room?

Mr. HITT. The engineers have to be Americans.

Mr. METCALF. You find firemen also who are?

Mr. HITT. They were not on those ships I saw there myself. Those that operated in the great heat were not Americans. Owners or agents and representatives of these ships appeared before the committee, and they told us they had a plain path before them. If they were compelled to hire men at $30 a month to take the place of Chinese getting from $7 to $8 a month, they simply would have to change the flag and sail under a foreign flag. Strangely enough this destructive proposition for our shipping is made to a House that is soon to consider the ship-subsidy bill to encourage shipping. First strike a blow to drive them to a foreign flag, and then propose a subsidy.

Why, it is, Mr. Chairman, simply our duty to at least let them alone. If you do not pass the subsidy bill you should spare them this useless restriction. Do not prevent them from doing what they can; and when they must hire foreign labor to compete with foreign ships in the carrying trade between Yokohama and Hongkong and over to Manila, why force them to forego the cheaper labor of the place when this interference is of no benefit to our people?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HITT. Certainly.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if there is any evidence before his committee that the Chinamen now employed upon our vessels escape or give us any trouble, or if it is found that under the regulations and laws that we now have they remain on their vessels when they land until the vessel goes out again?

Mr. HITT. If there was any such danger of escape a provision of this bill would prevent them from coming into our country. All the testimony that we have showed that they were laborious and docile. The only complaints that I have heard was that in times of great and terrible stress that they had not the courage of the Saxon, but they are industrious and obedient.

Mr. ALEXANDER. But my question is: Is there any evidence before your committee that the present law or the present regulations is not entirely satisfactory to all concerned?

Mr. HITT. None at all. We have no evidence of anybody being dissatisfied. Some persons who appeared before the committee advocated this upon the ground that it would be extending protection. This, of course, at first warmed up the heart of a Republican member, who liked to hear of protection to the American boy, who was to be employed on the American ship. But the slightest examination showed that it was not likely to protect American labor, but extinguish American shipping.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly aware that these steamship companies, appealing to the American people, say that if this section is put into this bill, they will go under the British flag. I do not believe there is a word of truth in that, and I will state my reasons. Our ships sailing under the American flag have the benefit of the coastwise trade to Hawaii, Porto Rico, and all our other ports, and it is very profitable—constantly and rapidly growing more so. The American steamship lines are never going to give up that trade by going under the British flag.

One reason that they want Chinese sailors is that when they come to our ports the Chinese sailors are not allowed to land. They are kept on board the ship. None of the Chinese come off and go on a spree. If one of them does get off, the entire police system of the Treasury Department is at the service of the ship to run down their Chinese sailor, collar him, and drag him back on board ship. Now, that is one reason that they give that they will go under the British flag. The other one, that American sailors can not stand the work in the heat and in the hot climate, is proved by all the evidence in this volume of evidence taken before the Senate committee not to be tenable. And I repeat the statement that I made a while ago, that the American sailor is just as much entitled to this protection as the American land laborer.

I want to make another remark, Mr. Chairman, while I am at it. If this legislation is not entirely germane to this bill, there is a bill coming over here before long, if it has not already come, that it will be germane to, and I serve notice now to all concerned that if this section does not go into this bill it will go into the ship-subsidy bill, if that bill comes before this House.

Mr. HITT. That is the proper place.

Mr. CLARK. I know; but "this is the day of salvation, and now is the accepted time." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13031, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10530) to repeal war-revenue taxation, and for other purposes.

REPEAL OF WAR-REVENUE TAXES.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 10530) to repeal war-revenue taxation, and for other purposes, and I ask that the statement be read instead of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, calls up the conference report on the war-revenue tax bill, and asks that the statement be read and that the report be not read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10530) to repeal war-revenue taxation, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments 12 and 19.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, and agree to the same.

SERENO E. PAYNE,

JOHN DALZELL,

Managers on the part of the House.

NELSON W. ALDRICH,

W. B. ALLISON,

G. G. VEST,

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

Statement of the managers on the part of the House of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 10530, "To repeal war-revenue taxation, and for other purposes."

The managers on the part of the House state for the information of the House that the Senate receded from its amendments numbered 12 and 19. No. 12 was the only substantial amendment made by the Senate, which sought to retain the tax on so-called bucket shops. And the House has receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate which changed the phraseology of the bill, but made no material change in its provisions.

The bill, therefore, as presented by the conference, is substantially in form and is in effect the same bill as it passed the House by a unanimous vote.

SERENO E. PAYNE,

JOHN DALZELL,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from New York wish to occupy any time at all?

Mr. PAYNE. No. Does the gentleman from Tennessee want any time?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want a few minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman will be brief, as I promised the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that we would not take up much time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There is no gentleman on this side of the House that has asked for time in the matter, and I do not propose to occupy but a few moments myself.

Mr. PAYNE. How many minutes does the gentleman want?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Not over five minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that, representing the minority of the conferees, I declined to sign the conference report. This is a bill which repeals the last vestige of taxes enacted for the purpose of conducting the Spanish-American war, to raise revenue for that purpose. Some weeks ago the bill was reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, a unanimous report, recommending the passage of the bill and the repeal of all of these taxes. In the views of the minority, duly submitted at that time, we took the position that as a whole we would vote for the bill.

We did not think it wise to repeal all of the war taxes that had been enacted when the Spanish war broke out; we did not think it was just to the people to repeal all of the taxes that were provided in that revenue bill, some of which were not burdensome, and leave other taxes upon the necessities of life. In other words, we thought there should be such a revision of the tax laws as would leave the taxes upon some of the articles that were taxed in the war-revenue act and which were not taxed before its passage, and take the tax off some of the necessities of life upon which they are now left by the Republican tariff. But when the bill was presented as a whole we felt constrained to give it our support; and so, upon a yea-and-nay vote, this bill passed the House unanimously and without debate, as will be remembered.

When the bill went to the Senate the Senate amended it in a number of instances, immaterial the most of them, but they did provide that the taxes which the war-revenue act had placed upon transactions which took place in what is called "bucket shops" should still remain taxed. With that material amendment they passed the bill repealing the taxes. The House refused to agree to the Senate amendment, and conferees were appointed. After a full and free conference the Senate has receded from that amendment. If the conference report is adopted the bill passes, and the tax is taken off of bucket shops, as well as all other war taxes.

For myself, I am still of the opinion that there should be such a revision of the tax laws as would leave some of the taxes imposed by the war-revenue act upon the articles taxed in that act and which should be taken off from articles of prime necessity to the people. But it seems that it is impossible to have such legislation in this Congress. It certainly is impossible to do it by defeating this conference report, and thus defeating this bill. Therefore, while I could not bring myself to sign the conference report, and recommend that this tax be taken off of "bucket shops," yet I can not oppose the adoption of the conference report, because to defeat the conference report would mean to leave the war-revenue taxes existing upon the country.

I do not think the members of our party can vote to leave the war-revenue taxes on any longer, and if we vote down the report it defeats the law. With this explanation and my explanation as to why I refused to sign the conference report, I am content that the report should be adopted and that the bill should be passed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this provision was agreed upon because we did not believe in taxing the small fellows and letting the larger ones go scot-free, and because we were anxious to wipe out the last vestige of the war-revenue taxes. We promised the people that when the necessity had gone by we would repeal these taxes. That time has come, and by sustaining this report we wipe out every vestige of those taxes, and I ask for a vote.

The question was taken; and the conference report was agreed to. On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for further consideration of the Chinese-exclusion bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts in the chair.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose the amendment under consideration was one in relation to the employment of Chinese on ships upon the high seas. The question is so perfectly simple that I will not detain the committee further with remarks upon it. I ask for a vote.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say only a word upon this amendment. There is no man in this House who, from the inception of Chinese-exclusion legislation, has voted for it more uniformly than I have. I am not going into the reasons for such legislation; they are patent to everybody. There is now no division of sentiment on this question. In the beginning there was a very decided division of sentiment.

I doubt, however, Mr. Chairman, the wisdom of this amendment; and very briefly I will state my reasons. Within the borders of the United States we are supreme. The Republican party, since it came into power, has consistently followed along the line of protection of American labor, the development and diversification of American industries, until we are now, as we are proud to say, the first nation on earth, not only in agriculture but in manufactures as well. Within our borders we are supreme; and within our borders it is safe to say labor receives, as compared with the wages paid elsewhere in the world, 1½ as compared with 1.

Now, when we get outside of our own territory, upon the high seas, and engage in commerce with other nations, we are not supreme. We there come into competition with all the balance of the world. If the English ship, or the German ship, or the Japanese ship will take our products and carry them from our ports to the markets of the world for a less sum than we can hire our own ships to do it, the transportation goes in foreign bottoms.

Now, what is the fact? It costs something more to build ships in the United States than it does elsewhere. But from our extraordinary developments in iron and steel that cost has been largely minimized in the United States; and I am under the impression that in shipbuilding for our coastwise trade and for our foreign trade we can, with our invention and industry, make ships very nearly as cheaply as they can be made elsewhere.

But when one of our vessels hoists the American flag and starts upon its journey to Europe or to Asia—when it ships its crew, labor being compensated in the United States, as I have stated, at a higher rate than labor abroad—the wages of American sailors and officers upon our ships, when we can get those sailors, are 50 to 100 per cent higher than the wages paid upon foreign ships for similar services, the result is that our merchant marine in the foreign trade hardly exists.

Now, what is the remedy? Many people believe the remedy is Government aid—subsidy. I have always doubted whether there is any remedy while the present condition remains, because we can not protect our labor upon the high seas in competition with the labor of other countries that is just as effective, but receives only half as much. And I undertake to say that any grant from the Treasury of the United States to aid American ships will not be efficient unless that grant is permanently enough, first, to equal the subsidy that foreign governments pay, and, second, to make up the difference between the wage that the foreign seaman gets from a foreign ship and the wage that the seaman gets upon the American ship.

Now, gentlemen upon the other side of the House are in the main against Government aid to the domestic shipping. Many of us on this side have doubted the wisdom of that policy. The result is, however, that with this condition it is said our merchant marine is swept from the seas. That is very largely true, so far as the merchant marine is concerned.

We have, however, a few ships on the Atlantic coast and in our European trade. But if I recollect aright, in our commerce from here to Europe there are less than 20 per cent of American-born seamen upon our ships. The balance are foreign born; most of them foreign subjects.

On the Pacific coast, as my colleague [Mr. HITT], who is better informed than I am tells me, the percentage of American seamen on American ships is almost nil. Now, what is the proposition? We have a few—some very large—steamers lately built in American shipyards by American labor; others are under contract. They can live with great difficulty now and are knocking at our door for subsidy grants from the Treasury which, if I should enter the domain of prophecy, I should say are not yet in sight. But we can discuss that question when we come to it.

But even crippled and few in number as those American-built ships are, the proposition is to go further and say by this amendment: "The English ship, the German ship that plies between Asiatic ports and the United States, carrying the products of the respective countries back and forth, may employ Chinese seamen, but the American-built ships shall not employ Chinese seamen." The result is that our ships can not compete in the same trade with the foreign-built and foreign-manned ships, and the American ship goes out of business or hoists a foreign flag and then is upon all fours with the foreign ship.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Only one word in conclusion. So that if this amendment be enacted the result in my opinion is that even the few ships we now have in the foreign trade on the Pacific go under foreign flags and no more will be built to go under the American flag.

"Ha! ha!" cries the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], "I am protecting the American sailor." Are you? No; in the first place, because the American sailor is not there to be protected, and second, while you profess to be protecting the American sailor you say to the American mechanic in our own shipyards, "You never shall build another ship to go into the Pacific foreign trade." [Applause.]

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word on this amendment. Its object was expressed in the original bill introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] excluding the employment of all Chinese sailors on our vessels in the Orient. We considered that matter with great care and with great deliberation. We took the testimony of sailors; we took the testimony of the men who built the ships and who run them now. We took all the evidence that was offered on the subject, and the deliberate judgment of the majority of the committee was to strike out that provision of the bill which is now sought to be reintroduced by the gentleman from California.

They have appealed to the American Congress in former years and now to protect California from the introduction of the Chinese cooly, and we have always done so. We did it in the last treaty. We propose to do it now, completely and entirely. The gentlemen from California [Mr. COOMBS and Mr. KAHN] have introduced into the bill amendment after amendment whose function and object was to make it more stringent or, to use their own emphatic word, more drastic, or, I might say, more inhuman.

They introduced these amendments for that purpose, and they have had them adopted one after another, almost sub silentio, and now they propose to reverse the action of your committee, which, by a large majority, introduced this bill, allowing your ships in the Orient to do what other ships do in carrying on the trade between the Orient and the East—to employ Chinese sailors. Why? Not, as my honorable friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] says, to protect American seamen, for there are no American seamen.

Everybody concedes—the gentlemen from California and everywhere else who are familiar with this subject concede—that the Chinese can be employed so much cheaper, that the Germans employ them, that the English, the Japanese, and all the nations of the world employ them; and now you propose to exclude Chinese from American boats, denying to the vessels built by your own capital, constructed by your own mechanics, and put into this great trade, you propose to deny to them the right which the vessels of every other nation have. It is said by my honorable friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that there is no danger that they will adopt the English flag or the German flag or the Italian flag.

But there is, Mr. Chairman, absolutely an unquestioned danger that they will have to go out of the trade, absolutely go out of the trade. Do you want to protect American industry, American seamen, and American labor by driving your own American ships out of the competition? Are the gentlemen from California willing to so far jeopardize American labor and jeopardize American ship-owning interests as to say that in order to exclude the cooly they will deny the right to our vessels to employ the Chinese laborers as all other vessels employ them? This is not right; this is not just. We should allow the vessels engaged in this trade, carrying the American flag and protecting the American deck, to get their sailors as cheap as vessels of other countries, or you will drive them from the enterprise in which they are engaged.

Are you willing to do that? Is that patriotic, is that sensible, is that according to the true idea of protecting the American labor? I am a good deal like my distinguished friend from Illinois. I do not mean the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. HITT], distinguished as he is, but I mean his distinguished colleague from Illinois, who is the chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. CANNON]. I want to say to my honorable friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that I agree with him that you can not protect the American sailor, you can not protect the American labor, by subsidies dragged out of the tax box of the people, the Treasury of the United States, and I am in hopes when that other measure comes up that we shall have the gentleman from Illinois with us in opposition to that nefarious bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, it is now very late, and it is important that this bill should be disposed of before the adjournment. This question has been fully discussed alike in the general debate and under the five-minute rule. I therefore move that debate on this section and amendments be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that debate upon the pending amendment and section be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (called for by Mr. KAHN) there were—ayes 77, noes 72.

Mr. HITT. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were accordingly ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. HITT and Mr. KAHN.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 74.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I give notice that I shall demand the yeas and nays in the House on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be in order. Of course the gentleman has the right.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 42. That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby authorized to make and to enforce any rules and regulations by him deemed needful to an efficient execution of this act.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall make all needful appointments and the Commissioner-General of Immigration shall make all needful designations to secure the execution of this act.

All officers appointed or designated to enforce the provisions of this act are empowered to administer oaths touching the right of any Chinese to enter, pass through, or remain in the United States.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 22, page 26, after the word "regulations," the following: "providing additional requirements concerning the contents of the several characters of certificates mentioned in this act, and shall otherwise make and enforce all rules and regulations."

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the Clerk report that amendment again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported, and the committee will be in order.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. PERKINS. We have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 43. That when the appropriate officer at the port of arrival of any Chinese shall pass upon the application of such person for the right of entry or reentry into or of transit through the United States his decision shall be final: Provided, That said Chinese, and also any officer of the Treasury Department, may appeal from said decision to the Secretary of the Treasury. Such appeal must be filed with the officer making the decision appealed from within five days after the making of such decision.

Where the applicant for entry or transit shall base his claim solely on alleged citizenship of the United States he shall forthwith be taken before a United States judge in the district wherein he shall have applied for entry or transit, or before the United States commissioner designated by a United States attorney, and a hearing shall be had as on a writ of habeas corpus; and pending a final decision on his application he shall be detained in the custody of the United States marshal of said district as in deportation cases.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in section 43, in line 9, page 27, the words "the right of."

Also, in line 25, page 27, after the word "cases," insert the following: "And if the decision be adverse to such claimant, he shall be returned as provided in section 27."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendments proposed by the gentleman from California will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. At this point the Chair desires to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COOMBS] to line 12, page 10, inadvertently contained the word "after" instead of the word "before" in the designation of the place where the amendment was intended to be made. Without objection, the error will be corrected.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 48. That the term "Chinese" as used in this act includes all persons who are Chinese either by birth or descent.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "descent," at the end of line 12, page 29, insert the following words:

"And as well those of mixed blood as those of the full blood, as well males as females; and wherever herein personal pronouns are used the masculine includes the feminine."

Mr. PERKINS. I hope that amendment will not prevail. This section was reported out in the shape which it now is by a committee of which my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] was a member, and he found no fault with it then. The addition of the final words is pure surplusage, and the opinion of the committee was, as my friend from Missouri will remember, that the best wording was the general wording, to exclude all those who are Chinese either by birth or by descent, well-known legal terms; whereas the terms used by the gentleman from Missouri, in my judgment, will lead only to confusion. I trust the Committee of the Whole will be of the same opinion as were the committee that revised this section.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I will confess very frankly that at one time I thought the language used by the majority of the committee was sufficient; but when you take into consideration the fact that if you leave out this phrase about the mixed blood every Chinese who wants to get into the United States will claim that he has another strain of blood in him, and you will never be able to find out the truth. I am in favor of fixing it so there can be no doubt about it, and that is what this amendment will do exactly.

The question being taken on the amendment, the Chairman announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. CLARK) there were—ayes 74, noes 70.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 50. That nothing in the provisions of this act shall be construed so as to prevent the admission of Chinese into the United States for the purpose of participating in any fair or exposition authorized by act of Congress, subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of this session of Congress I introduced a bill for the extension of the Chinese-exclusion laws. I congratulate the committee on the result of its labors in molding from the various bills presented for its consideration the measure now presented for the consideration of the House.

It has ever been the pride of the Republic that the immigrant seeking here a home and an asylum has found our outer gates swinging inward and a hospitable welcome on his arrival. All that we have or should require of him is that he shall be honest, physically capable of caring for himself, morally and mentally healthy, sincerely desirous of becoming, in spirit as well as in fact, one of us; that he should be intelligent enough to understand and appreciate and be heartily in sympathy with our ideas of government and willing to assume the responsibilities of American citizenship.

It is true that many have come to our shores in the past who have not fully measured up to this standard of fitness, but the major portion of the millions of immigrants who have come to us from Europe have measurably fulfilled these requirements and in the course of time have become of our most valuable citizens—honest, industrious, intelligent, Americans in spirit as well as in name, who have assisted nobly in the upbuilding and development of this great nation.

But, Mr. Chairman, there are races the members of which seem to be utterly lacking in those elements which are essential to citizenship in a country like ours, whose traits and characteristics, fixed by long centuries of isolation and nonintercourse with the outer world, have developed a race of men who, whatever their virtues may be, are certainly lacking in many of those which characterize all of the races which have progressed along the lines of civil and religious liberty and free government.

This is peculiarly and especially true of the Chinese, whose continued and more complete exclusion from our shores we expect to provide for by the measure now before the House. The Chinaman in America is forever and always an alien. For the most part he does not attempt to be or to appear to be anything else, and when he does the veneer of Americanism is so thin as to disclose the Tartar at the slightest touch. It is safe to say that no Chinaman ever landed on our shores who fulfilled the conditions I have suggested as requisite in a useful immigrant. None ever landed, in my opinion, nor would there be likely to any land if allowed so to do, with any other purpose than to accumulate a competency with which to return to his native country to pass the evening of his day. Now, this may be praiseworthy in him from a Chinese standpoint, but from an American standpoint it stamps him as a class highly undesirable.

Not only does the Chinaman land on our shores without the slightest thought or expectation of adopting our views or of conforming to our methods, but he comes with habits fixed and inflexible, with racial characteristics and racial vices which render him unfit for American citizenship even if he desired it. His extreme frugality and untiring industry, his self-denial of many of those things which we consider necessities, while in the abstract they might not be considered in the nature of serious faults, render him such a dangerous rival of our citizens in the lines of industry which he undertakes as to disturb our entire industrial system where he is present in any considerable numbers, with an inevitable tendency toward breaking down and lowering American standards of living and our ideals of the duties, responsibilities, and possibilities of life outside, beyond, and above the mere drudgery of existence.

So it seems to me, whatever view you take of the Chinese as an immigrant, his presence must be considered undesirable and a menace to our institutions. He does not wish or desire to come here to become an American, to adopt our ideas, to learn of our institutions, and to assist in upholding and developing them, therefore he should be denied admittance; and if by chance he should so desire he should still be excluded, for his racial instincts, tendencies, and disposition are such that he must of necessity be forever a disturbing element in our social and industrial economy.

I congratulate the committee upon the result of its labors, for I believe they have drafted a bill which will more effectually exclude the Chinese than the present law, and this is a consummation greatly to be desired.

Not only should American labor be protected from a general inroad of these people, but no additions whatever should be allowed to their numbers. No American workingman should be compelled to seek employment in competition with them, for he can not successfully compete with them without adopting their methods of life, and God forbid that any American should be brought to the low standards of living of the Chinese cooly.

I am heartily in favor of those provisions of the bill which provide for the exclusion of Chinese coolies from the Philippines and Hawaii. Hawaii already has a most serious problem in her large Asiatic population, and it should not be added to by a single individual by immigration.

In the Philippines the people of those islands should be left to work out their own salvation under our guidance without the competition of hordes of Chinese. It is true that their presence there in large numbers might assist in the rapid development of some classes of projects, but we might better run the risk of less rapid development than invite the danger of further complication by large Chinese immigration.

I am thankful, Mr. Chairman, that our portals are to be still more safely guarded against the coming of the yellow peril. I have no fear that continued exclusion will affect in any way our trade with China; but if it should, it were infinitely better that we never sold China a dollar's worth of merchandise or produce than that we should degrade our people by compelling them to compete with coolie labor or endanger our institutions by an influx of hordes of the heathen Chinese. [Applause.]

Mr. BOREING. Mr. Chairman, in the very few words that I have to speak on the pending measure I can not say that I either desire or expect to change the views or the vote of any member of the House, because I believe for once we are all practically agreed as to the enactment of a very unusual law. The United States has always been and is to-day the habitation of a free people and the home of reform, whose Government desires to establish trade relations with all countries, and whose missionaries seek to convert the heathen in all lands. We must therefore have the best of reasons for excluding any class of people from the advantages afforded by American institutions.

Hence, Mr. Chairman, it may become necessary for the members of this Congress to give to their constituency and to the country their reasons for passing such a bill as is proposed by either the majority or the minority report of the committee. As for myself, I shall support the majority report with such amendments as the Committee of the Whole House may recommend. In so doing I do not, in my opinion, commit an unfriendly act toward the Government of China, because I draw the line, not upon nationality, but upon character.

I do not believe that this country has ever been as strict in the enactment and enforcement of emigration laws as it ought to have been. If I had my way about it we would require of every foreign-born person who seeks either residence or citizenship among us a certificate of character from the country from which he emigrates, disclosing his antecedents. This would not only tend to protect society, but would tend to prevent the assassination of our Presidents.

In my estimation this legislation is in the defense of our homes and our people. I mean the homes of our farmers, mechanics, and wage earners, as well as the homes of our business and professional people. In the American home, the school, and the church are taught and developed virtue, intelligence, courage, and patriotism. These are the elements that make up American character, all of which are totally wanting in that class of Chinese who are excluded by this bill. This evil is intensified by the fact that this undesirable class of people are brought here under contracts both mercenary and vicious, to compete with our laboring class of people, in whose homes are taught the virtue and courage that make up American manhood and womanhood.

I will never consent, Mr. Chairman, to any legislation in this country that lowers the standard of labor or the laborer. It is the testimony and the experience of the representatives and people of California and other localities that have been made the dumping ground of these harlots and criminals that they as well as the merchant class of Chinamen are not attracted by the forms of our Government, have no sympathy with our institutions, no intelligent appreciation of the American womanhood; that they bring with them to this country a deep-seated moral leprosy (worse than the physical leprosy that they leave behind) which tarnishes American society, undermines American civilization, and is detrimental to the morality and progress of our people. For these and other reasons I favor the proposed legislation and in so doing I am quite sure I reflect the sentiments of my constituents, because we only fix a standard for immigrants that we require of our own people, and cast no reflection upon the better class of the Chinese population and offer no offense to the Chinese Government.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 11353) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 8327) to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories," disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLARK of Montana, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, and Mr. KEARNS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendment, bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 7018. An act for the relief of Robert J. Spottswood and the heirs of William C. McClellan, deceased.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 10117. An act granting a pension to Sarah H. H. Lowe; and

H. R. 184. An act to establish and provide for a clerk for the circuit and district courts of the United States held at Wilmington, N. C.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Treasury," line 23, page 29, add "which shall provide effectually for the deportation of such Chinese as soon as their participation in such fair or exposition is completed."

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take the time of the committee in discussing this amendment. I desire only to say that it is to prevent scandals occurring again as have been found when Chinese came to participate in Chinese villages and were sold after the exhibition had closed. There does not seem to be any objection to the measure, as it will only strengthen the section.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. CLARK. I move to strike out the last word. The situation about this bill is this: The majority reported the bill; the Democratic minority reported a substitute, making the provisions more drastic. Every single solitary amendment that has been offered or adopted here to-day was contained in that Democratic substitute. Having got into the bill by way of amendment what we started to get into it, we shall not press the substitute, because we have already accomplished our object of making the bill stronger and more effective. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, in further support of the gentleman's motion to strike out the last word, and that I may have the last word, I will add to what he says that I had not heard before that there was such a question—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois of course means in opposition?

Mr. HITT. I will change the statement. I will oppose his motion to strike out the last word, my purpose being to secure the last word for myself. [Laughter.]

In the preparation of this bill the patient, long-continued, and sincere labors of all the members of the committee were earnestly given, including those of the gifted and patriotic gentleman from Missouri, not then in the state of mind into which he found himself let down by political needs, nor willing "to party give up what was meant for mankind." We all worked together, and we wrought out a bill with much consultation and conciliatory yielding, without a single dissenting vote, without a single vote against its conclusions.

Afterwards the gentleman who had agreed to this bill, and helped make it, brought into the House and presented here the Senate committee's revision of the Kahn bill, the same original bill on which we had worked, but changed in the committee room of the Senate. We had an impression that the House committee was expected by this House to do some work and report it. We did not suppose a bill was to be reported to this House by the Senate committee. From the first hour we began work on the bill we have considered it with the aid of the members of the House from the Pacific coast, who were invited in, they having no members on our committee.

These gentlemen, and those representing the various interests of labor and industry in all forms, appeared before the committee in the three weeks of hearings given. The result was that we were in a very tolerant frame of mind and endeavored to consult and learn from all who were interested. I heard nothing about Republicans and nothing about Democrats. For myself I must say that I have witnessed the work of your Committee on Foreign Affairs for twenty years, and known it when the country was alternately under the administration of Democrats and Republicans, but this is the first time in considering foreign affairs that I have heard of a Democratic minority of that committee [applause] or have heard it from the committee upon the floor of this House.

Mr. Blount, long our chairman, was a staunch Democrat, a hard pan Democrat, always zealous for his party on party questions, and we honored him for it; but if a stranger had been in these galleries when matters from the Committee on Foreign Affairs were being discussed by Blount in the House, strenuous as he was, no one could have told whether that noble American was a Democrat or a Republican. [Loud applause].

The gentlemen who compose this committee have endeavored in this bill, and will always endeavor, to frame legislation in that same spirit; and I feel sure that hereafter my amiable friend from Missouri will cordially help us.

Mr. MERCER. Does the gentleman know of any objection to this legislation?

Mr. HITT. There is really no objection among the members of the House to this legislation. It has not been possible to find pairs for gentlemen who had to be absent from the expected vote, because all were for the bill.

I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOOPY of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13031 and instructed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments?

A separate vote not being demanded, the amendments were submitted to the House in gross, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the bill had passed.

Mr. KLEBERG. I call for a division.

Mr. HITT. I make the point of order that the call came too late, that the result had been announced. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and move that that motion be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The result was announced, and no gentleman rose in his seat to demand a division.

The motion of Mr. HITT to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was then agreed to.

REPRINT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill (H. R. 12765) relating to reciprocity with Cuba, and also the report and the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill H. R. 12765, together with the report and the views of the minority. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to nonconcur in all the Senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill and ask for a conference thereon by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the table the Indian appropriation bill, nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate, and to ask for a conference thereon. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair announces the following conferees: Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. LITTLE.

CHARTERS OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 176) to provide for the extension of the charters of national banks.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller of the Currency is hereby authorized, in the manner provided by, and under the conditions and limitations of, the act of July 12, 1882, to extend for a further period of twenty years the charter of any national banking association extended under said act which shall desire to continue its existence after the expiration of its charter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill. It is simply for the extension of the bank charters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask unanimous consent that the second be considered as ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman if he was instructed by the committee to make the motion?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; I was.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And the Chair holds that this is in order to-day, I understand?

The SPEAKER. This is an individual suspension. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported 90 ayes and 47 noes; so a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey has twenty minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee twenty minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, only one object is covered by this bill and that is to extend the charters of national banks. There are, according to the report of the Comptroller of the Currency, a list of 280 banks, with an aggregate capital of $66,853,300, whose corporate existence will reach their termination for the second time during the years 1902-1903.

The date of the first expiration is July 14, 1902. It is evident that it is a matter of the highest importance that the charters of these banks be extended, because the rights and privileges that have grown up under these present charters are of great value. Another reason is that if they liquidate great expense will be incurred and great loss must be necessarily borne by the stockholders of these corporations. I do not know that I care to say anything further now upon the bill. I will reserve the balance of my time until the gentlemen on the other side consume theirs.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, the only purpose of this bill is to allow national banks now existing and whose charters will expire during this and the early part of next year to extend their charters. Under the law they might liquidate and reincorporate. In order to prevent the necessity of the liquidation of so many banks, and forcing the collection of the paper and disturbing the business conditions, this bill simply allows them to extend their corporate existence for twenty years instead of liquidating and reincorporating.

I see no difficulty in the matter. I voted for the bill in the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to occupy any time, but I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL].

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I only wish to state that as a Democrat who subscribes to the platform of the Democratic party, which embodies also my individual convictions, I can not follow those members of the minority who have signed this report. I do not believe individually, nor does the party with which I stand, approve of national banks as banks of issue.

If we are to extend with each recurring Congress banks of issue for twenty years to come, I am at loss to understand how the time will ever come when we shall restore to the Government of the United States the power to control the circulation, issue currency, and coin the money of the country, a function that I believe should vest exclusively in the National Government and never be surrendered to private corporations. It is no answer to this objection to say that banks can reorganize and recharter under existing laws. Let the Republican party, which is responsible for national banks of issue, take the responsibility for all legislation looking to their continuance and the enlargement of their privileges. Personally I do not think Democrats should vote for any proposition in line with Republican policies.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Kentucky) there were—ayes 85, noes 40.

Mr. BALL of Texas and Mr. KLEBERG. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PIERCE. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the yeas and nays has not been withdrawn and that is the matter before the House. Twenty-three gentlemen rising, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. PIERCE. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER (after counting). One hundred and sixty-one members present, not a quorum.

Mr. BALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken on a division demanded by Mr. SMITH of Kentucky and Mr. BALL of Texas.

The SPEAKER. On this question the ayes are 53 and the noes 103. There not being a quorum present, the Chair orders the doors closed and the yeas and nays will be called, so that members can vote as their names are called or be marked present. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill. Those in favor will vote "aye" and those opposed will vote "no," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 116, nays 48, answered "present" 18, not voting 174; as follows:

During the roll call the following proceedings took place:

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to ask whether the Chair ordered the call of the roll on the motion to adjourn or upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. Upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What became of the demand of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL] for the yeas and nays on his motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. There was no such demand made.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman from Texas to call the yeas and nays on his motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. He did not. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

The Clerk resumed the call.

Mr. BALL of Texas (interrupting the roll call). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The roll call can not be interrupted; the gentleman is out of order.

Mr. BALL of Texas. On a question of personal privilege am I not in order?

The SPEAKER. Not while the roll is being called. The Clerk will proceed.

The call of the roll was resumed and concluded.

The SPEAKER (at the close of the roll call) directed that his name be called, and voted "aye."

Mr. OLMSTED. I desire to present an excuse for the absence of my colleague, Mr. CONNELL. He has been called home by illness in his family. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have a general pair with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. COWHERD. I desire, therefore, to withdraw my vote, which was cast in the affirmative, and to answer "present."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I have voted "no" on this question, but as I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. HILDEBRANT, I desire to withdraw my vote and be marked "present."

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Rhode Island, Mr. BULL. Having voted "no," I desire now to withdraw my vote and be marked "present."

Mr. METCALF. Mr. Speaker, having voted in the affirmative, I desire now to withdraw my vote, as I have a general pair with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WHEELER. I ask to be recorded "present."

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I have voted "aye;" but as I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. LIVINGSTON, I ask to withdraw my vote and to be recorded "present."

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I have learned that my colleague, Mr. BROWNLOW, with whom I have a general pair, is out of the city. I therefore desire to withdraw my vote and be recorded "present." If my colleague were here, I should vote "no."

The SPEAKER. The last statement of the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. CLARK. I have just ascertained that the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. LANDIS, with whom I am paired, did not vote on this question. I therefore desire to withdraw my vote, which was cast in the negative, and be marked "present."

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. STEELE with Mr. COOPER of Texas.
Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. SNOOK.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presents a remonstrance from business men of San Francisco and the Pacific coast against the passage of the Chinese-exclusion bill in its present form, etc.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks that the telegram may be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be read.

The memorial was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

[Telegram.]

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., April 8, 1902.

Hon. W. P. FRYE,
 President of Senate, Washington, D. C.

The exclusion of legitimate Chinese merchants that will result from the passing of the exclusion act now being debated in the Senate is an act of gross injustice to the mercantile and merchant interests of the Pacific coast, and of San Francisco in particular, and we hereby respectfully protest against such injustice and request that the bill be so amended as to freely and legitimately admit merchant class of Chinese. Any special committee insisting upon the exclusion of Chinese merchants does not voice the sentiment or desires of those interested in the mercantile welfare of San Francisco and in the development of the commerce of this port.

Claus Spreckels, Thomas Brown, J. W. Helman, W. H. Crocker, Chas. Webb Howard, A. H. Payson, P. N. Lienthal, J. A. Donohue, Ant. Borel, H. T. Scott, J. D. Grant, Jno. Parrott, G. W. Kline, Levi Strauss, Chas. Holbrook, Warren D. Clark, Percy T. Morgan, Leon Sloss, C. E. Green, C. Deguigne, John F. Merrill, W. C. Ralston, E. W. Hopkins, John L. Howard, A. F. Morrison, W. B. Bowen, H. C. Breedon, Geo. Abbott, S. C. Buckbee, Geo. A. Newhall, Geo. W. McNear, William Babcock, Bernard Faymouville, Geo. A. Pope, Alfred S. Tubbs, F. W. Zeile.

Mr. QUAY presented a memorial of the United Labor League of Western Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to license electricians and to regulate electrical wiring in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Wholesale Lumber Dealers' Association, of Pittsburg, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the abolition of the foreign landing charge imposed by steamship companies upon lumber and other export products; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented petitions of G. Tucker Post, No. 52, Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, of Lewisburg; of A. G. Reed Post, No. 105, Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, of Butler, and of Cavalry Post, No. 35, Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation providing pensions to certain officers and men in the Army and Navy of the United States when 50 years of age and over, and to increase the pensions of the widows of soldiers to $12 per month; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of sundry citizens of Peoria, of the Cigar Makers' Local Union of Galesburg, of the Plow Workers' Local Union of Springfield, of the Lathers' Local Union of Springfield, and of sundry citizens of Chicago and Galesburg, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the reenactment of the Chinese-exclusion law; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Amalgamated Societies of Engineers Nos. 594 and 595, of Chicago; of Branch No. 2, Amalgamated Society of Engineers, of Chicago; of Painters' Local Union No. 66, of Quincy; of Brushmakers' Local Union No. 6980, of Chicago; of Metropolis Federal Labor Union No. 9280, of Metropolis; of Federal Labor Union No. 8997, American Federation of Labor, of Salem, and of Lodge No. 499, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Chicago, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. PATTERSON. I present a petition signed by 319 American citizens of Honolulu on the subject of Asiatic exclusion. It is short, and I should like to have it read and printed as a document.

There being no objection, the petition was read, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives
 of the United States of America, greeting:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, do hereby represent—
 First. That the present and future prosperity of this nation depends in a great measure on the maintenance of the present high standard of living of its inhabitants.

Second. That this standard can not be maintained if the sphere of the American mechanic is invaded by the hordes of Asia, whose mode of life enables them to live comfortably on a sum which to an American would be a mere pittance.

Third. That at present fully 75 per cent of all the labor of the Hawaiian Islands, both skilled and unskilled, is being performed entirely by Orientals.

Fourth. That practically all the labor, both skilled and unskilled, which has been performed on buildings and grounds in this Territory for the Federal Government has been and is still being performed entirely by Japanese and Chinese, to the entire exclusion of competent American mechanics, who, by reason of these conditions, are at present forced into almost complete idleness.

Fifth. That the population of the Hawaiian Territory is 150,000, of whom the Chinese and Japanese number nearly 87,000, the Americans about 5,000, and the natives 37,000.

Sixth. That by rigidly excluding all Orientals from this Territory and from the United States conditions would soon become such that American citizens would be enabled to earn a living for themselves and families, which they are now practically unable to do on account of the deplorable and entirely un-American conditions now existing here.

Seventh. That, for the reasons above set forth, your petitioners earnestly ask that suitable legislation be framed the results of which would be—

First. The complete exclusion of both Japanese and Chinese or their descendants from American territory.

Second. The requirement that all labor of every description whatsoever which is performed for the Federal Government shall be done by, and only by, citizens of the United States.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks that the petition be printed as a document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it ought to be referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. FORAKER. I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of sundry citizens of Byfield, Mass., praying for the reenactment of the Chinese-exclusion law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Riggers, Tarers, and Scrapers' Local Union No. 9599, of Gloucester; of Textile Workers' Local Union No. 188, of Northampton; of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers' Local Union No. 247, of Salem; of Switchers' Local Union No. 44, of Brockton, and of Painters' Local Union No. 419, of Spencer, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for grading around and about the Federal building at New Brighton, Pa., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT of New York submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $90,000 for constructing, equipping, and outfitting, complete for service, a steam light vessel with a steam fog signal for use on the Cape Lookout Shoals, North Carolina, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUARLES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for the establishment of a light-ship to mark the shoal known as Peshtigo Reef, in Green Bay, Wisconsin, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HALE submitted an amendment relative to sureties on bonds for the performance of contracts for works of river and harbor improvement, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying memorandum from the engineer officers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted the following amendments, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

An amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the expenses of the system of international exchanges between the United States and foreign countries, under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, from $24,000 to $29,800;

An amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for continuing the preservation, exhibition, and increase of the collections in the National Museum from the surveying and exploring expeditions of the Government from $180,000 to $200,000;

An amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for the preparation of preliminary plans for an additional fireproof building to cost not exceeding $2,500,000 for the United States National Museum;

An amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the National Zoological Park at Washington, D. C., from $80,000 to $110,000, and providing that $20,000 of this amount shall be expended in the construction of a boundary fence, including entrance gates;

An amendment proposing to appropriate $20,000 for the construction of an elephant house at the National Zoological Park, Washington, D. C.; and

An amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the construction of an aquarium building at the National Zoological Park, Washington, D. C.

AGREEMENT WITH CREEK INDIANS.

Mr. DUBOIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4923) to ratify and confirm a supplemental agreement with the Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2960, the Chinese-exclusion bill.

Mr. SIMON. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. PENROSE. I will yield to the Senator from Oregon after the bill is taken up.

Mr. HOAR. I hope we may have a little while with the Calendar. We make very good progress with the Calendar in these morning hours, and the Chinese-exclusion bill is sure of its right of way.

Mr. PENROSE. There are several Senators prepared to speak on the bill. It was delayed nearly all day yesterday, and the committee is extremely anxious to proceed with its consideration. After the bill is before the Senate it is my intention to yield to several Senators who I understand have bills which they desire to call up.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the amendment to the rules adopted which was reported from the Committee on Rules. I do not believe there will be any discussion of it. I think it will meet everyone's approval. I should like to have an opportunity to bring it before the Senate, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me to get the bill before the Senate I will then yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2960, the Chinese-exclusion bill.

The motion was agreed to.

PROMOTION OF COMMERCE—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, on the 17th day of March the Senate voted upon the bill known as the ship-subsidy bill, upon a previous agreement that a vote thereon should be taken on that day. At that time I was not in Washington; I was at my home in Oregon. I had intended taking the usual steps and ask that a pair be arranged, as I was not in favor of the passage of that bill. My attitude on the subject, I think, was pretty generally known. I was anticipated, however, in this matter—that is, arranging for a pair, by the receipt of the following telegram, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 11, 1902.

Hon. JOSEPH SIMON, Portland, Oreg.:

How shall we pair you on shipping bill? Vote to be taken Monday.

M. A. HANNA.

H. C. HANSBROUGH.

Mr. SIMON. To this telegram I made the following reply:
The Secretary read as follows:

PORTLAND, OREG., March 12, 1902.

HON. M. A. HANNA and HON. H. C. HANSBROUGH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Do not approve the scheme involved in subsidy bill, and if present when vote taken would be compelled to vote against.

JOSEPH SIMON.

Mr. SIMON. The RECORD does not disclose that any pair was arranged for me. I do not criticise or find fault with either of the Senators for not having arranged a pair. Perhaps I was to some extent at fault in not having specifically requested that a pair be arranged, but I supposed from the fact that the question was asked me, "How shall we pair you?" that it would be done.

All I desire is simply to have the RECORD show that if present I would have voted against the bill; and I shall be quite content when this shall have been accomplished. I do not criticise either of the Senators or any action taken or not taken by either of the Senators mentioned in the telegram.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I desire to make just a remark or two in regard to the statement made by the Senator from Oregon.

When the shipping bill was up for a vote an attempt was made to pair all absent Senators, and, having charge of the pairs on this side of the Chamber, I endeavored to secure a pair for the absent Senator from Oregon. The Senator has not a general pair, and I found it impossible to do so.

I thought this statement ought to be made in connection with what has been said.

Mr. SIMON. The explanation of the Senator from North Dakota is perfectly satisfactory to me. I was not aware of this effort to secure a pair before.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BILOXI, MISS.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the Senator in charge of the Chinese-exclusion bill to give me an opportunity to call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1934) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Biloxi, in the State of Mississippi. It will take about a minute to pass it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. MONEY. In line 12, on page 1, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "one hundred and fifty." This amendment is accepted by the committee. The bill was reported as I originally presented it, but the Secretary of the Treasury writes that $170,000 is necessary for the building. We have deducted $20,000, and the committee accepts the amendment as I have presented it. It was intended, I believe, to so report the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 12, page 1, before the word "thousand," strike out "seventy-five" and insert "one hundred and fifty;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Biloxi and State of Mississippi, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, not to exceed the sum of $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, according to his suggestion, to yield to me that I may ask the Senate to lay aside informally the present order and to take up Senate resolution 179.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which will be read to the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution reported by Mr. HOAR from the Committee on Rules March 27, 1902, as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XIX be amended by inserting at the beginning of clause 2 thereof the following:

"No Senator in debate shall directly or indirectly by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator."

"No Senator in debate shall refer offensively to any State of the Union."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2960) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all possessions and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate in relation to the bill under consideration, and, in doing so, I shall give a brief history of the action of this Government in its treaty relations with China, and also in the enactment of laws by Congress in pursuance of those treaties.

At the conclusion of the war between China and Great Britain, in 1842, Great Britain forced China to give her many important commercial concessions by treaty. The United States being anxious also to obtain closer relations with China, sent a commission to that country, headed by Caleb Cushing, and on July 3, 1844, a treaty was signed between the United States and China, giving to the United States similar concessions to those which she had given England.

This was a general treaty of peace, amity, and commerce. Its purpose, as stated therein, was to declare a firm, lasting, and sincere friendship between the two nations. It gave to the United States the right to frequent five important ports in China, and provided for the protection of American citizens in China; and further provided specific rates of duty at which articles coming from the United States should be admitted into China.

Owing to the treatment of British subjects in China, in 1856 Great Britain and China were again at open warfare, Great Britain being determined to wrest further commercial concessions from China, religious freedom to all foreigners, the suppression of piracy, and many other important concessions. The United States declined to take part in the hostilities against China, but sent an agent to China to look after the interests of this country.

On the 18th of June, 1858, the agent of the United States signed a treaty, on behalf of the United States, which was intended to be a substitute for the treaty of 1844 and reiterated many of the articles of that treaty. This treaty again declared for a firm and universal peace between the two nations and conceded to the United States the right to have a representative in China who should have free access to members of the privy council and the right to visit the capital once a year. It provided for the protection of our citizens residing in China, both in their person, property, and religious faith, and that Chinese converts should be likewise protected; and it gave to the United States the benefit of the most-favored-nation treatment in every respect—commercial, navigation, political, or otherwise.

This treaty is still in force, excepting in so far as it has been modified by subsequent treaties and laws.

On November 8, 1858, two supplemental treaties were signed, one pertaining to claims and the other providing specifically the rates of duty to be imposed on articles imported into China by the United States and containing certain rules pertaining to the importation of articles into China from the United States.

Neither the treaty of 1844 nor the substitute treaty of 1858, with its two supplements, referred to the immigration of Chinese subjects into the United States, although there were quite a number of Chinamen here in 1858, as they commenced to come in considerable numbers shortly after the discovery of gold in California in 1848 and 1849.

But 1868 marked the beginning of a new epoch in our relations with China. In that year a delegation of Chinese officials, headed by Anson Burlingame, a prominent American diplomat, who had resigned his post as minister of the United States to China to accept a mission from China to visit the United States and other countries, came to this country. This delegation was received with great enthusiasm in all parts of the country; and, as I now remember it, they were received on the floor of the House of Representatives here in Washington, of which body I then had the honor of being a member. We were anxious at that time to cultivate a close friendship with China, and we were perfectly willing that the Chinese should immigrate to and settle in the United States.

Shortly after the arrival of the Burlingame commission, on July 4, 1868, a new treaty was signed, in the form of additional articles to the convention of 1858. The Senate ratified the new treaty or additional articles, and after much hesitation and urging on the part of the United States, under the administration of President Grant, China finally signified her adhesion to them and the treaty was proclaimed February 5, 1870.

While in the former convention between the United States and China their provisions had almost entirely related to citizens of the United States in China and their treatment therein, the treaty of 1868 contained a number of important concessions to Chinese subjects residing in the United States.

This treaty gave to China the right to appoint consuls at ports of the United States, and provided for reciprocal religious freedom of Chinese subjects residing in the United States and our citizens residing in China.

Article V and VI, however, are the important articles, and I will quote them:

ARTICLE V. The United States of America and the Emperor of China cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of the free migration and emigration of their citizens and subjects, respectively, from the one country to the other for purposes of curiosity, of trade, or as permanent residents. The high contracting parties therefore join in reprobating any other than an entirely voluntary emigration for these purposes. They consequently agree to pass laws making it a penal offense for a citizen of the United States or Chinese subjects to take Chinese subjects either to the United States or to any other foreign country, or for a Chinese subject or citizen of the United States to take citizens of the United States to China or to any other foreign country without their free and voluntary consent, respectively.

ARTICLE VI. Citizens of the United States visiting or residing in China shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, or exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation. And reciprocally Chinese subjects visiting or residing in the United States shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation. But nothing herein contained shall be held to confer naturalization upon citizens of the United States in China, nor upon the subjects of China in the United States.

There seems to be nothing else reserved in that treaty except that the citizens or the subjects of either country shall not be naturalized in the other.

The treaty further provided that citizens of the United States in China and Chinese subjects residing in the United States should enjoy all the privileges of the public institutions of each country, respectively, and should have the right to establish schools, respectively, in the United States and China.

By this treaty we invited immigration from China and guaranteed those immigrants the same protection as we guaranteed the people of other nations coming to the United States. No distinction was made between Chinese laborers and other classes of Chinese. We invited them to come, and they accepted our invitation and came in large numbers and settled principally on our Pacific coast. That they assisted greatly in the development of the West and in the construction of railroads can not be doubted. While they built railroads and to a limited extent worked in the mines, they were principally engaged in menial work which it was difficult to procure others to perform. In 1860 there were 34,933 Chinese in the United States, and in 1880 there were 105,465.

We soon discovered, however, that we had made a mistake in the free admission of Chinese into the United States. The Chinese are a wonderful people in many respects. They have great powers of endurance, great industry, great patience, and they can work and live on so much less wages than white men that they become formidable competitors in all lines of work. They continued to come into the Pacific States in such large numbers that our people became alarmed, and the people and officials of the Pacific coast appealed to Congress to save them from what was termed "the yellow invasion." In 1879 Congress passed an act "to restrict the immigration of Chinese to the United States." The means adopted to secure this object was the limitation of the number of Chinese passengers which might be brought to this country by any one vessel to 15. The bill was passed by both Houses and was transmitted to the President for approval. President Hayes vetoed it, stating in his veto message that the bill as amended by the Senate included provisions which aim at and require the abrogation of Articles V and VI of the treaty with China of 1868. President Hayes's message concludes by saying:

I am convinced that whatever urgency might in any quarter or by any interests be supposed to require an instant suppression of further immigration from China, no reasons can require the immediate withdrawal of our treaty protection of the Chinese already in this country, and no circumstances can tolerate an exposure of our citizens in China, merchants or missionaries, to the consequences of so sudden an abrogation of their treaty protection. Fortunately, however, the actual recession in the flow of the emigration from China to the Pacific coast, shown by trustworthy statistics, relieves us from any apprehension that the treatment of the subject, in the proper course of diplomatic negotiations, will introduce any new feature of discontent or disturbance among the communities directly affected. Were such delay fraught with more inconveniences than have ever been suggested by the interests most earnest in promoting this legislation, I can not but regard the summary disturbance of our existing treaties with China as greatly more inconvenient to much wider and more permanent interests of the country. I have no occasion to insist upon the more general considerations of interest and duty which sacredly guard the faith of the nation, in whatever form of obligation it may have been given. These sentiments animate the deliberations of Congress and pervade the minds of our whole people. Our history gives little occasion for any reproach in this regard; and in asking the renewed attention of Congress to this bill, I am persuaded that their action will maintain the public duty and public honor.

R. B. HAYES.

Finding, therefore, that no action could be taken prohibiting the immigration of Chinese laborers into the United States unless we violated our treaty of 1868, in the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill of 1880 a provision was inserted appropriating $34,000 for the salary and expenses of commissioners, interpreters, etc., to China in order to obtain modifications of the treaty of 1868, looking to the prohibition of Chinese laborers. William Henry Trescott, of South Carolina; James B. Angell, of Michigan, and John F. Swift, of California, were named as commissioners plenipotentiary; and on November 17, 1880, they signed an immigration treaty with China modifying the treaty of 1868.

It was with great reluctance that China consented to this modification. The commissioners insisted that the unrestricted immigration of Chinese laborers into the United States was causing great embarrassment and dissatisfaction to our Government and among our people. The commissioners first insisted that the United States should be given the right to "limit, suspend, or prohibit" the immigration of Chinese laborers. The Chinese Government declined to so amend the treaty of 1868, but finally it signified its willingness to agree to a clause giving the United States the discretion "to regulate, limit, or suspend" the immigration of Chinese laborers into the United States, but refused to give us the right to absolutely prohibit such immigration. At the same time, as will be found in Foreign Relations of the United States, 1881-82, the commissioners on behalf of the United States made certain representations, which were reduced to writing at the request of China, virtually saying that the discretionary power given to the United States would not be unreasonably or oppressively exercised.

The Chinese commissioners asked the United States commissioners to give them some idea of the laws which would be passed to carry the powers given to the United States on the subject of Chinese immigration into execution. To this the United States commissioners replied that they could hardly say what laws would be passed; but that both nations would act in good faith, and that the United States might never find it necessary to exercise the discretionary powers given to them under the treaty, adding:

If Chinese immigration concentrated in cities where it threatened public order, or if it confined itself to localities where it was an injury to the interests of the American people, the Government of the United States would undoubtedly take steps to prevent such accumulation of Chinese. If, on the contrary, there was no large immigration, or if there were sections of the country where such immigration was clearly beneficial, then the legislation of the United States would be adapted to such circumstances. For example, there might be a demand for Chinese labor in the South and a surplus of such labor in California, and Congress might legislate accordingly. In general, the legislation would be in view of and depend upon the circumstances of the situation at the moment such legislation became necessary.

These explanations were accepted by the Chinese Government, and, as has been stated, the treaty was concluded on November 17, 1880.

That treaty provides, first, that it is the desire of the United States to negotiate a modification of the existing treaties "which shall not be in direct contravention of their spirit." It gives to the United States the right to regulate, limit, or suspend the coming or residence of Chinese laborers into the United States, "but may not absolutely prohibit it." It provides that the limitation or suspension will be reasonable, and that legislation taken in regard to Chinese laborers shall be of such a character only as is necessary to enforce the regulation, limitation, or suspension of immigration. It provides that Chinese subjects proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, and Chinese laborers who were in the United States at the time of the making of the treaty shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will, and shall have the same treatment as citizens and subjects of the most-favored nation.

Those are the important provisions of the treaty of 1880. Less than a year after this treaty was proclaimed Congress passed an act designed to execute the provisions of the treaty. Some of the provisions of this act were in violation of the terms of the treaty, and President Arthur declined to approve it on that account and returned it to the Senate April 4, 1882, with a veto message, in which he said:

A nation is justified in repudiating its treaty obligations only when they are in conflict with great paramount interests. Even then all possible reasonable means for modifying or changing these obligations by mutual agreement should be exhausted before resorting to the supreme right of refusal to comply with them.

The message concludes by saying:

Experience has shown that the trade of the East is the key to national wealth and influence. The opening of China to the commerce of the whole world has benefited no section of it more than the States of our own Pacific slope. The State of California, and its great maritime port especially, have reaped enormous advantages from this source. Blessed with an exceptional climate, enjoying an unrivaled harbor, with the riches of a great agricultural and mining State in its rear, and the wealth of the whole Union pouring into it over its lines of railway, San Francisco has before it an incalculable future if its friendly and amicable relations with Asia remain undisturbed. It needs no argument to show that the policy which we now propose to adopt must have a direct tendency to repel oriental nations and to drive their trade and commerce into more friendly hands. It may be that the great and paramount interest of protecting our labor from Asiatic competition may justify us in a permanent adoption of this policy; but it is wiser in the first place to make a shorter experiment, with a view hereafter of maintaining permanently only such features as time and experience may commend.

Mr. President, I make these quotations simply for the purpose of reiterating the fact that we ought to adhere to our treaty obligations under all ordinary conditions at least. When we can not prevail upon the other nation to make such treaty as we think we ought to have, then it will be time enough to disregard the treaty and abrogate it by act of Congress, but not before.

Congress then passed the act of May 6, 1882, which omitted the objectionable features of the act which was vetoed.

The act of May 6, 1882, provided that the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States should be suspended for ten years; but provided that this section should not apply to Chinese laborers who were in the United States November 17, 1880, and provides for the identification of such laborers by means of certificates. It also provides that no State court or court of the United States shall admit Chinese to citizenship.

The act of 1882 was soon found to be inadequate. It was found, as it is at present, that it is most difficult to obtain truthful testimony from Chinese laborers seeking to enter or claim a residence in the United States because of the utter disregard or perhaps the inability of Chinese witnesses to understand the obligations of an oath. The act of July 5, 1884, was then passed, which was a stronger act than the one passed immediately after the ratification of the treaty. This act declared that the certificate which the laborer must obtain "shall be the only evidence permissible to establish his right of reentry into the United States."

In reference to this act, and also the act of October 1, 1888, Mr. Justice Field, in 130 United States, Chae Chan Ping, stated:

The act was held by this court not to require the certificate from laborers who were in the United States on the 17th of November, 1880, who had departed out of the United States before May 6, 1882, and remained until after July 5, 1884; therefore the same difficulties and embarrassments continued with respect to the truth of their former residence. Parties were able to pass successfully the required examination as to their residence before November 17, 1880, who, it was generally believed, had never visited our shores. To prevent the possibility to exclude Chinese laborers being evaded, the act of October 1, 1888, was passed.

Prior to the passage of the act of October 1, 1888, however, negotiations were undertaken for a new treaty with China, allowing us to place further restrictions on Chinese immigration. A treaty was signed, transmitted to the Senate, and ratified by the Senate, with amendments. China refused to agree to the treaty as amended, and it was never proclaimed. Anticipating, however, that the treaty would go into effect, on September 13, 1888, an act was passed providing, among other things:

That from and after the date of exchange of ratifications of the pending treaty between the United States of America and His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of China, signed on the 12th day of March, 1888, it shall be unlawful for any Chinese person, whether a subject of China or any other power, to enter into the United States, except as hereinafter provided.

The ratification of this treaty never having been exchanged, this portion of the act did not become effective, and it is unnecessary for me to comment upon it.

On October 1, 1888, as I have stated, and before China had declined to accept the treaty as amended, Congress passed an act providing that from and after its passage it shall be unlawful for any Chinese laborer who shall at any time heretofore have been, or who may now or hereafter be, a resident of the United States, and who shall have departed or depart therefrom, and shall have not returned before the passage of this act, to return to or remain in the United States.

Section 2 provided that no certificates of identity provided for in the fourth and fifth sections of the act of 1882 shall hereafter be issued, and that all such certificates heretofore issued shall be void and the Chinese laborer claiming admission by virtue thereof shall not be permitted to enter the United States.

This act was in direct contravention of the stipulations of the treaty of 1868 and the supplemental treaty of 1880, and was so declared in the case of Chae Chan Ping, supra, by the Supreme Court; but the court held that treaties being of no greater obligation than acts of Congress the one last in date would control, and upheld the validity of the act. Of course, that will be so in this case. If this bill should be enacted and should be determined to be in violation of the treaty of 1894, of course the court would have to hold that the law, being last passed, should control.

The act of May 6, 1882, would have expired by its terms in ten years after its passage; but on May 5, 1892, the act now in force was passed and approved. This act provides that all laws in force prohibiting and regulating the coming of Chinese persons into this country are continued in force for ten years from the passage of the act. This act places the burden of proof on the Chinaman when arrested to prove his right to remain in the United States; or it adjudges him guilty until he proves his innocence, which is a reversal of the ordinary rule of procedure. It provides for the removal of Chinese illegally in the United States; and it also provides for the imprisonment of persons adjudged not lawfully to be entitled to remain here at hard labor, not to exceed one year, and thereafter to be removed. In other words, they are to be put in jail, kept there a year, and then sent home. It provides that no bail shall be allowed pending the disposition of the application of a Chinaman for a writ of habeas corpus.

It provides that all Chinese within the United States at the passage of the act must apply to the collector of internal revenue for a certificate of residence, and that all Chinese laborers found in the United States within one year after the passage of the act without such certificate shall be deemed to be unlawfully in the United States.

This act also gives to the Secretary of the Treasury the right to make all necessary rules and regulations for its execution.

I may remark here that under this provision the Secretary of the Treasury has made some very stringent rules, as will be seen from the report of the Commissioner of Immigration.

The act of 1892, requiring Chinese laborers, etc., to register one year after its passage, it was contended worked a great hardship on hundreds of Chinese laborers in the United States. They employed eminent counsel, Messrs. Carter and Choate, of New York, who declared that the act of 1892 was unconstitutional, and thousands of Chinese laborers thereupon refused to register, as was provided in the act. The case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States and the constitutionality of the act of 1892 was sustained by a divided court, Justice Field, Justice Brewer, and Chief Justice Fuller dissenting.

The decision of the court was made ten days after the expiration of the time for registration under the act of 1892; and therefore the amendatory act of November 3, 1893, was passed, by the first section of which the time for registration of Chinese laborers was extended for six months. The purpose of this act of 1893 was only to extend the time, as I have stated, but the House, through the influence of Pacific coast members—perhaps I ought not to say that—took occasion to add a number of additional restrictions on Chinese immigration. Senator Gray and others objected to these additional restrictions and stated that they would have preferred to have simply extended the time for registration, but they voted for the act, because if the act were not passed and the time extended several thousand Chinese persons, who had failed to register under advice of their counsel, would be subject to arrest and imprisonment for failing to register, as required by the act of 1892.

The act of 1893 defines "laborers" and "merchants":

SEC. 2. The word "laborer" or "laborers," whenever used in this act, or in the act which is an amendment, shall be construed to mean both skilled and unskilled manual laborers, including Chinese employed in mining, fishing, huckstering, peddling, laundrymen, or those engaged in taking, drying, or otherwise preserving shell or other fish for home consumption or exportation.

The term "merchant," as employed herein and in the acts of which this is amendatory, shall have the following meaning and none other: A merchant is a person engaged in buying and selling merchandise, at a fixed place of business, which business is conducted in his name, and who during the time he claims to be engaged as a merchant does not engage in the performance of any manual labor, except such as is necessary in the conduct of his business as such merchant.

It further provides that the Chinaman seeking to enter the United States on the ground that he was formerly engaged as a merchant in this country must establish by the testimony of two credible witnesses, other than Chinese, that he conducted such business for at least a year.

In 1894 a new treaty was negotiated between the United States and China. As stated by the Chinese minister, "to relieve the Executive from embarrassment," China consented to enter into the treaty of March 17, 1894, proclaimed December 8, 1894.

The treaty absolutely prohibits the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States, except under conditions therein specified, for a period of ten years. It provides that this restriction shall not apply to the return to the United States of any registered Chinese laborer who has a lawful wife or a parent in the United States, or property therein to the value of $1,000. The act further provides that this restriction shall not apply to the rights at present enjoyed of Chinese subjects being officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for curiosity, etc., but not laborers, of coming into the United States and residing therein; and that Chinese laborers shall continue to enjoy the privilege of transit across the territory of the United States to or from other countries, subject to regulation by the United States. The treaty also guarantees to Chinese, of whatever class, the same protection as is given by the laws of the United States to citizens of the most favored nation, except the right to become naturalized citizens. The convention is to remain in force for ten years, and if six months before the expiration of said ten years neither Government shall have formally given notice of its termination to the other, it shall remain in force for another like period of ten years.

This is our last treaty with China.

By the acts of July 7, 1898, and April 30, 1900, the immigration of Chinese into the Hawaiian Islands is prohibited; and it is also now prohibited, although not by act of Congress, in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. By the act of the Philippine Commission.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; by the act of the Commission, and not by act of Congress. Ex-Secretary Foster has gone over the bill very thoroughly, and has, I think, clearly shown wherein it violates our treaties with China. Whatever may be ex-Secretary Foster's relations with the Chinese Government—I refer to that because I think some Senator stated that he was an employee of the Chinese Government, and therefore what he said ought not to receive so much consideration in this case—I have great faith in his judgment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should think, Mr. President, that what ex-Secretary Foster says ought to be the more considered for the reason stated, if it be true.

Mr. CULLOM. Whatever his relation to the Chinese Government by employment or otherwise, I have great faith in Mr. Foster's judgment, and when he makes a statement I am inclined to think he is right, unless I know to the contrary.

It appears plain to me that the bill under consideration is a violation of our treaty with China. It is not only a violation of the spirit and general effect of that treaty, but in some instances it is a violation of the letter of the treaty.

I shall not attempt to go through this long bill of 53 pages in detail, but will call attention to only a few instances wherein, I contend, it comes in conflict with the treaty of 1894. Nor shall I dwell on the fact that we propose to, and are now, under existing laws, treating the Chinese as we treat the subjects of no other nation in the world, and as no other nation in the world treats the Chinese.

The very first section of the bill is in direct conflict with the treaty of 1894, and when the treaty of 1894 shall expire it will be in direct conflict with the treaties of 1868 and 1880. The first section provides that the coming of Chinese laborers from any foreign country to the United States, etc., shall be absolutely prohibited.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me? I will not interrupt him unless he is perfectly willing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BEVERIDGE in the chair). Will the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Suppose Congress took no action whatever until the treaty of December, 1894, actually expired, would it be a violation on our part of any treaty or of the provision of any treaty, does the Senator think, then to enact a prohibitory law?

Mr. CULLOM. My opinion is—and I confess I assert it with some degree of diffidence—that the treaty having been made simply for a period of years and the treaty of 1880 being indeterminate as to time, the treaty would be in force the moment this one died.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The treaty of 1894 was in modification of the treaty of 1880.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; the two are connected together, and I think the treaty of 1880 would be in force. If it were, and the bill you propose to pass becomes a law, of course it would abrogate that, as well as the treaty of 1894, in whatever respects it might conflict.

The treaty of 1894 provides in Article I thereof that the coming of Chinese laborers shall be prohibited for a period of ten years (with a possible extension of ten years, if the treaty is not terminated on notice). The bill under consideration contains no limit as to time; and of course it is the purpose of that bill to shut them out permanently, regardless of Article I of the treaty of 1894. It does not appear to me to be a sufficient answer to this to say that it is not necessary to fix any limit of time in this bill, because it will only remain in force so long as Congress wills, and may be repealed at any time. We certainly thought, in the passage of the acts of 1882 and 1892, that it was necessary to fix a definite time limit, and we fixed it at ten years. That seems to have been the idea of Congress then, because Congress limited the acts of Congress to the terms of the treaty, showing that they were trying to keep within the purview of the treaty while they were passing laws.

Mr. MITCHELL. There was no question then about the treaty of 1880 being in force?

Mr. CULLOM. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. And of course Congress aimed to keep within the treaty.

Mr. CULLOM. The point I make now is that they are not keeping within either treaty, as a matter of fact.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand.

Mr. CULLOM. To determine whether this bill is a violation of our treaty with China we must determine what is the intention of Congress in passing the bill. Is it our intention to have it remain in force only so long as the treaty of 1894 shall remain effective, or is it our intention to have it remain in force permanently, regardless of our treaty? If we only intend it to remain in force until the expiration of our treaty, we had better amend the bill by inserting such a provision. If it is our intention to have it remain in force permanently, as a reading of the first section of the bill would indicate, then we have violated the plain letter of our treaty of 1894.

Article III of the treaty provides that the provisions of this convention shall not affect the right, at present enjoyed, of Chinese subjects—being officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers—for curiosity or pleasure, but not laborers—coming to the United States and residing therein.

Those terms—namely, officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers—are not defined in the treaty and are intended to be used in their ordinary sense. This bill gives to the words “teachers,” “students,” and “laborers” peculiar and unheard of definitions.

Section 6 of the bill gives a definition to the word “teachers” that was never contemplated by the treaty, so far as I can ascertain. It defines “teachers” to mean only those who for not less than two years next preceding their application for entry into the United States have been continuously engaged in giving instruction in the higher branches of education, and who prove to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer—a very good examination, I should think that would be—that they are qualified to teach such higher branches and have completed arrangements to teach in a recognized institution of learning in the United States, and intend to pursue no other occupation than teaching while in the United States.

Under this definition, the thousands of persons engaged in teaching our graded schools, below the high schools, would not be teachers, and the number of teachers in the United States would be very small indeed. The treaty never contemplated such a definition of the word “teacher.” Under that section it would be necessary to establish boards of competent college professors at every port where Chinese enter the United States in order to pass on their qualifications. How many of our Treasury officials at the different ports of entry are competent to determine whether a Chinese teacher is qualified to give instruction in the higher branches of education? By Article VII of the treaty of 1868 we guaranteed to Chinese residing in the United States the right to establish and maintain schools within the United States. We are now proposing to pass a bill which will make it impossible for teachers, in the ordinary acceptance of that term, to come into the United States at all.

The present Treasury regulations do not authorize any such definition of “teacher,” but merely provide, among other things, that a Chinese person is not entitled to admission as a teacher unless he can show that he has been actually following that avocation in China, or if, upon examination in various branches of education, it is found that he is not qualified to become a teacher, etc. There is nothing there in reference to higher branches of education.

Section 7 gives to the term “student” a definition not at all contemplated or authorized by the treaty. It defines a student to be only one who intends to pursue some of the higher branches of study, or to be fitted for some particular profession or occupation for which adequate facilities for study are not afforded in the country whence he comes, and for whose support while studying sufficient provision has been made, and who intends to depart from the territory of the United States immediately on the completion of his studies.

If such a definition is to be given to the word student, the number of students in the United States is comparatively small. Under this bill students, even after graduating from our highest institutions of learning, if they remained in the United States, would be subject to arrest and deportation. The treaty of 1894 never intended such to be the case.

The bill, as originally presented, made it necessary for a Chinese traveler to have arranged beforehand his itinerary in the United States; but I am glad to see that the committee has seen fit to strike out that provision.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Illinois has criticised the provisions of the bill that define “students.” Would the Senator give the Senate the benefit of his definition of the term and the regulations that should be made for the purpose of carrying out that provision of the treaty. The Senator can well understand that unless some plan is suggested that under any one of these terms, “teachers,” “students,” “merchants,” or otherwise, if they were permitted to remain in this country for an unlimited length of time, it might entirely undo the ends that are and have been sought to be attained through this legislation and through the treaties. For that reason we ought to have the Senator's idea of the limitations, at least, or the regulations by which the ends sought may in a measure be attained.

Mr. CULLOM. I can readily understand that it is somewhat difficult perhaps to make regulations which will not seem to be a little severe, but there seems to be a studied effort on the part of the committee in charge of this bill to make a measure under which no Chinese can come into this country, even teachers, or merchants, or students, or anybody else.

Mr. PATTERSON. The object of the bill—

Mr. CULLOM. What I desire is that the bill shall be so framed that the plain intent of the law shall be allowed to have its sway. For instance, an honest man wants to come to this country to teach. The treaty does not confine him to the higher branches of study. Let us receive him, if we are going to let in any teachers at all, on some fair, reasonable basis of regulations and rules and laws, so that an honest man can get in here if we intend to allow them to come at all. If it is not a pretense that they shall get in, let us arrange it so that he can get in if he is an honest man and really wants to come here to teach.

Mr. PATTERSON. I wish to say to the Senator from Illinois, on the authority of a Treasury official, Mr. Dunn, a very intelligent and a very conscientious man, I believe, from what I saw of him, that the provisions in this bill relating to students are simply the regulations now in force, not the regulations as contained in the pamphlet, but the regulations that are now and have been for some little time in force. They found it necessary to adopt those regulations in order to prevent very material abuses of the authority to come in under the class of teachers. So the Treasury official, as members of the committee will justify me in saying, declared.

Mr. FORAKER. May I ask the Senator from Colorado a question there? I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado by what authority such regulations were made? I mean regulations restricting the natural meaning of the term "teacher" and the term "student." Those are words which have a well-defined meaning, which is given in all dictionaries, and that meaning is well understood by everybody; and certainly that well understood, common understanding as to the meaning of those words has been restricted by these regulations, and I want to know by what authority.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will state to the Senator from Ohio the reasons given by the Treasury officials, those who have had to do with the enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion law ever since any of the provisions have been in force, namely, that in the first place it was not presumable that Chinese were coming here to teach in our common schools, but if they came to teach they would come to teach in some of the colleges or institutions of higher learning in this country; that if it was anything short of that, so far as the term "teacher" is concerned, there would be such an evasion of the law that the law for the exclusion of laborers would be practically valueless.

When it comes to the matter of students, if you simply include under that term any person who wants to receive an education, you can readily understand that they would all want to receive an education, just as they are all willing to be Christians, if they are permitted to come into the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me, suppose a Chinese boy wants to come here to attend the common schools, can he come in under these definitions?

Mr. PATTERSON. No.

Mr. FORAKER. He could come under the treaty, but he could not come under these definitions.

Mr. PATTERSON. He has the facilities for the usual and ordinary education of Chinese in his own land. Presumably there is no—

Mr. SPOONER. Suppose he wants something better than that?

Mr. PATTERSON. Then let him advance until he reaches the point where he desires to be educated in the higher branches of learning.

Mr. CULLOM. Is that the meaning of the treaty, does the Senator insist?

Mr. PATTERSON. That is the meaning of the treaty, and that is the meaning which has been placed upon it by the Treasury officials.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Solicitor of the Treasury has so held.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is the meaning which must be recognized, or else Chinese exclusion is a farce.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to ask the junior Senator from Colorado a question for information. I understood him to say that the definition in this proposed act in regard to "teachers" or "students," and I do not remember which, was copied from a Treasury regulation, not published in the regulations, but which had been made since. Are there any regulations about this matter which have not been furnished to us?

Mr. PATTERSON. The only regulation I have seen is the regulation contained in this yellow-covered book—Laws, Treaties, and Regulations Relating to the Exclusion of Chinese.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But I understood the Senator to say that Mr. Dunn had said there were some subsequent regulations.

Mr. PATTERSON. No. In a conversation with Mr. Livernash last night upon this subject he said that the later regulations are not contained in this pamphlet, and that the provisions of this bill were taken from the regulations as they existed when the bill was prepared.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The reason I ask this; I asked the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury who is in charge of this matter if there were any regulations or decisions subsequent to those he had furnished me. I had heard that there were, and he, by telephone, said there were not.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Livernash has been very active and he is very full of accurate information, as I have found. In the light of what the Senator from Connecticut says, of course I will say nothing further than what I have said until further investigation is made upon the subject.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I believe I was about to touch upon the question of Chinese travelers. A Chinese traveler is compelled to satisfy the Treasury officer that he is in possession of adequate funds for paying the cost of his intended travel. A very wide discretion is given the Treasury officer—one Treasury officer may have an idea of what funds are necessary and another Treasury officer may have a different idea. We will not be bothered with many Chinese travelers in the United States if this bill becomes a law, because the officers will so estimate the sum necessary to go across the country that it will oversize the pile which any of the Chinese will have in their pockets, and they will not get a chance to go across the continent at all. The fault I find with this bill is that it seems to be an effort, without positively saying so, to keep out of this country everybody who wishes to come here from China. I want the Chinese laborers kept out. That is what the treaty requires. But in doing so let us not violate every principle of fairness and right and of the construction of treaties to the extent that we will keep out merchants and students and teachers and everybody else whom we pretend we want to let in.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Could a Chinese physician, under this bill which we are now considering, desiring to come to this country, come in?

Mr. CULLOM. He could not at all. He is called a "laborer."

Mr. CLAY. One other question. If a banker or a manufacturer or a broker in China desired to come to this country, could he do so under this bill?

Mr. CULLOM. He could not. He is a laborer.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. How about a clergyman?

Mr. CLAY. Suppose a clergyman desired to come, could he get in?

Mr. CULLOM. As I understand it, he could not.

Mr. CLAY. As I understand it, there are four classes entitled to come in.

Mr. CULLOM. Officials, teachers, students, and merchants.

Mr. CLAY. And they are surrounded with certain conditions?

Mr. CULLOM. And they are surrounded with such conditions that they can not get in, either.

Mr. FORAKER. Let me ask the Senator a question. I am not familiar with the hearings before the committee. I have read them only in part. Has anybody ever testified, or has it been established in any way, that any injury has come to this country, or any class of people in this country, or any industry in this country from teachers and students and professional Chinamen coming here to reside?

Mr. TELLER. They do not come.

Mr. FORAKER. If they do not come, then, perhaps, we have had no experience on the subject; but the fact that they do not come, it seems to me, should not lead us to adopt a definition that could not have been within the intent of the framers of the treaty and which is not a fair definition of the language we have employed.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMON in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to the Senator from Colorado to answer the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Treasury officials testified that there was not a single one of the excepted classes under which any number of flagrant frauds had not been attempted and under which any number had not been successful.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me? That is not an answer to the question I propounded. I understand that these definitions have been adopted with a view to preventing people from coming in by false representation. I assumed that some teachers and some students had been coming into this country under the treaty. I assumed that during all the years it has been in force students and teachers had come here to a greater or less extent. I only wanted to know whether or not any harm has ever come to anybody of which any testimony has been afforded the committee on account of the coming here of any of these educated classes.

I wish to state frankly that while I believe in prohibiting the coming of Chinese laborers, while I approve that as the established policy and want to see it continued, I do not believe any injury will come to us from the visitation to our country of the educated classes of Chinamen.

Mr. PATTERSON. I recollect this statement by the Treasury official who labored with the committee while the bill was being perfected, that there was not a single case in which a ruling by Treasury officials as applicable to any of these excepted classes had been complained of; that the officials had been liberal in their construction of the rules, and they knew of no case in which injustice had ever been done, so far as concerned complaint from any Chinese governmental officer or from anybody else.

And, further, I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio that there is no effort on the part of the committee nor is it the purpose of this bill to exclude from the United States any bona fide members of the excepted classes. The rules and regulations have been adopted as experience has shown the necessity of adopting them for the purpose of preventing frauds, with attempts at which the Treasury officials are constantly confronted.

Mr. FORAKER. If I do not interrupt the Senator from Illinois unduly—

Mr. CULLOM. Oh, no.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to say just a word in answer to the Senator from Colorado. I understood him to say, or some one to remark—perhaps it was the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]—that no students or teachers have come to this country.

Mr. TELLER. If I may be allowed to say a word, practically very few have come. Large numbers who are not students call themselves students, and large numbers call themselves teachers who are not teachers; but what I mean is, that while occasionally a teacher comes in I have never seen one in forty years' experience.

Mr. FORAKER. It is a great wonder that any teacher at all would come when such definitions have been insisted upon as those given by the regulations of the Treasury Department, for it seems to me if you read those definitions as they have been carried into this bill, they are sufficient to discourage any teacher from coming. We all know that students have come. There is not a prominent educational institution in the country, scarcely, which has not had Chinese students in attendance, and they have made good records.

Mr. TELLER. They have had no trouble to get in.

Mr. FORAKER. The trouble is to get into the country.

Mr. TELLER. No; there is no trouble to get into the country.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, I do not complain at all of restrictive measures that will prohibit laborers from coming, but I do not want laws to be so restrictive that those whom we intend to allow to come in can not get into the country.

Mr. CULLOM. Now, I hope I may be allowed to proceed.

Mr. FORAKER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. CULLOM. Section 3, after giving a general and fair definition of the word "laborer," as meaning both skilled and unskilled manual laborers, Chinese persons employed in mining, fishing, huckstering, etc., goes on to provide that "every Chinese person shall be deemed a laborer, within the meaning of this act," who is not an official, a teacher, a student, a merchant, or a traveler for curiosity or pleasure, as thereafter defined. That answers the question of the Senator from Georgia. This absolutely closes out physicians, Chinese ministers, lawyers (if any there are), bankers, purchasing agents, and many other classes who are certainly not laborers, as we understand that term.

I wish to say here that the Chinese Government has been accustomed to sending purchasing agents over to this country to buy goods. They can not come under this bill; they are ruled out and are called laborers, and the result is that if we have any trade it is a marvel, and if we have any at all after this bill passes I shall be very much surprised.

Our only purpose in these treaties and our acts of Congress was to shut out Chinese laborers within the ordinary meaning of that term who might come in conflict with our own American labor. That is the purpose of the treaty, and, so far as concerns a law which confines itself to that particular class, it is all right to shut them out, and I believe in it.

There certainly can be no objection to Chinese physicians and other professional men, Chinese bankers, and there are many of that class, coming to the United States. In my own State, in the city of Chicago, we have a number of excellent Chinese physicians, some of whom are patronized by many Americans in preference to our own physicians. I am aware that some of our Western Federal courts (also the executive authorities) have been disposed to hold that Chinese laborers included all Chinamen other than those expressly excepted, namely, officials, merchants, teachers, students, and travelers. Some of these decisions are conflicting. For instance, a United States district court in California has held an actor to be a laborer and not entitled to remain in the United States, while a United States district court in Illinois, with a full knowledge of the decision of the court in California, held that an actor was not a laborer within the meaning of our present treaties and laws, and was therefore entitled to remain in the United States.

The Senator from Oregon has discussed very ably this provision defining the word "laborer;" but I can not believe that the treaty of 1894 contemplated that Chinese physicians, bankers, purchasing agents, and others high in business and professional life should be included under the word "laborer," and should not be entitled to admission into the United States.

The sections of this bill pertaining to the excepted classes, especially to students, teachers, and travelers, will tend to prevent any of those classes from coming to the United States; and they are therefore violations of the treaty of 1894 and the treaty of 1880, by which we permitted officials, merchants, teachers, students, and travelers to enter and depart freely from the United States.

Article 2 of the treaty of 1894 provides—

Mr. MITCHELL. Will it disturb the Senator if I interrupt him? He has just passed from the point in his argument where he discussed the meaning of the treaty, as to what class of persons were excluded and what class of persons were permitted to come in, and he referred to some remarks I made the other day. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the final report of our commissioners who made the treaty of 1880, submitted to Secretary Evarts November 6, 1880. If it would not disturb the Senator, I should like to read just a few lines.

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is as follows:

We desired, as you will see by the précis of the negotiation, to define with more precision exactly what all the negotiators on both sides understood by "Chinese laborers." But the Chinese Government was very unwilling to be more precise than the absolute necessity called for, and they claimed that in Article II they did, by exclusion, provide that nobody should be entitled to claim the benefit of the general provisions of the Burlingame treaty but those who went to the United States for purposes of teaching, study, mercantile transactions, travel, or curiosity.

Thus showing that the identical treaty now being construed by the Senator from Illinois was construed by the commissioners who made it, in their final report to the Secretary of State, to mean precisely what I claim it means, and the correspondence, moreover, between the commissioners of the respective nations shows the same thing. I will not interrupt the Senator too long, however, but will refer to that later.

Mr. FORAKER. On what page?

Mr. MITCHELL. On page 462 is the final report, from which I read. I can not at this moment put my hand on the page which contains the correspondence between the commissioners of the respective nations, in which the United States commissioners presented to the commissioners from China their meaning, the meaning, at least, that they desired to have inserted by proper language in that treaty. The Chinese commissioners at first objected, but mildly, and subsequently acquiesced. The result of the construction placed by the commissioners of the respective nations in the correspondence between the two and in the final report of our commissioners to our Secretary of State was to the effect that the treaty meant that only those were entitled to come to this country under the provisions of the treaty who were named as exempted classes.

Mr. CULLOM. I have not read the report of the commissioners who helped to make the treaty, but I read the treaty. I see nothing in the treaty which justifies such a construction. It can not be possible that those commissioners themselves will admit that they intended to exclude bankers, doctors, preachers, and every class of people under the head of laborers. It does not seem to me that it can be so.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state to the Senator that that has been the practice of the Department in the execution of the treaty and in the execution of the law. They do not admit lawyers, doctors, and preachers, and they never have done so, because of the construction for which I contend.

Mr. CULLOM. There is nothing in the treaty that keeps them out, as far as I can read it. Article II—

Mr. PENROSE. I will say—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to get through.

Mr. PENROSE. I merely wanted to ask the Senator whether the treaty did not specifically provide for the classes that were not laborers, the exempted classes?

Mr. CULLOM. The treaty provides that laborers shall not be allowed to come in.

Mr. PENROSE. And it also provides for the classes themselves that may come.

Mr. CULLOM. It provides for teachers, students, and merchants. There is nothing said about the other classes, it is true, but it does seem to me that the ordinary acceptance of the term would not include in the treaty a prohibition of bankers, physicians, and that class of professional men.

Mr. PENROSE. Does not the Senator from Illinois know that the Chinese have no physicians in our sense of the word?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know what the fact is.

Mr. PENROSE. Their medicines are in the most barbarous and in the crudest condition, and it is ridiculous to talk about admitting physicians when there are none in the whole Empire.

Mr. CULLOM. Article 2 of the treaty of 1894, providing for the prohibition of Chinese laborers entering the United States for ten years, does not apply to a registered laborer returning to the United States, providing he has a wife, child, or parent here, or property in the United States of the value of $1,000, or debts of like amount due him and pending settlement. That is the provision of the treaty.

Section 10 of the pending bill practically repeats the above provision of the treaty, but provides that it shall be subject to a number of conditions. For instance, the marriage to the wife must have taken place at least one year prior to the application of the laborer for permission to return, and must be followed by continuous cohabitation; and in reference to debts it provides that the requisite minimum value is over all incumbrances, liens, and offsets; the debtor must be solvent; the debts must not consist of promissory notes, and it must appear, where family, property, or debt qualifications are relied on, that the applicant possesses them at the time of return to the United States as well as at the time of departure.

Article II of the treaty contains no authority for the enactment of these conditions. That article provides specifically just what the procedure shall be, and I do not think we would be warranted under the treaty in extending and making additional conditions from those contained in the treaty. Under this bill it would be rather risky for a Chinese laborer to leave the United States at all, if he ever expected to return, by the guaranty given him in the treaty. He might leave a wife or child on his departure from the United States, and if his wife died in the meantime he would not be permitted to enter (unless he also had a parent or child living or debts to the value of $1,000). It seems that the distinguished committee who considered this bill was determined that no member of the Chinaman's family should die during his absence, that no debt should be paid, but that everything must remain exactly as he left it; otherwise he will not be allowed to return. The treaty does not authorize and never contemplated any such conditions.

Now, Mr. President, I will only refer to one more matter in connection with this bill.

Article II of the treaty of 1880 provides that Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights of citizens of the most favored nation; and Article III of the same treaty provides that all Chinamen, of whatever class, if meeting with ill treatment, that the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise means for their protection and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, and immunities and exceptions as may be enjoyed by citizens of the most favored nation. Article III of the treaty of 1894 reaffirms the right of officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers to come to the United States on a certificate from their Government viséed by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country from whence they depart.

We have certainly by these treaties guaranteed to Chinese officials, merchants, teachers, students, and travelers the treatment of the subjects of the most favored nation, yet section 20 of the bill provides a system of registration and certificates of registration for those excepted classes, and provides that if they fail to obtain such certificates, in any proceeding inquiring into their status they are presumed to be laborers. There are many other stringent provisions in the bill pertaining to these exempt classes not in harmony with our guaranty to them of the treatment of the subjects of the most favored nation.

Now, Mr. President, I have gone over the different treaties with China since 1844 and the various laws passed on the subject of Chinese immigration. Those treaties and laws speak for themselves. They show very clearly what the general trend of public opinion has been in the last thirty years. Until perhaps 1878 we invited Chinese immigration; since then our policy has been to prohibit it. Many of the laws that we have passed are stringent and harsh. In the enactment of the act of 1888 we directly violated our treaty with China; and in the enactment of most of our laws on the subject we do not seem to have shown much regard for the spirit of our treaties, even if we have generally adhered to their letter. But the threatened danger of great numbers of these laborers coming into the United States was, in the opinion of Congress, a sufficient excuse for their enactment.

Personally I am in favor of the absolute exclusion of Chinese laborers, in the ordinary meaning of that word, and the proper enforcement of the laws now on our statute books, and it seems to me that those laws are amply sufficient. I do not think that it would be wise for us to pass the bill under consideration, because I consider many provisions of that bill to be violations of our treaty relations with China. I admit, of course, that we have the right under the Constitution to pass laws in contravention of our treaties, and that those laws may supersede or abrogate an existing treaty—at least so far as our own municipal law is concerned—but such a course should be taken only in the most exceptional cases; and there is nothing in the present situation that makes it either expedient or necessary to pass a law in disregard of our treaty with China.

The question involved in our disposition of this bill is a very serious one. It is easy to adopt extreme views and favor extreme measures in dealing with China, but our great nation can afford to deal with the weak and the strong nations alike and do nothing in either case that is not upon a high plane of honor and dignity.

The statistics show that the Chinese population in this country is not increasing, but, on the contrary, is decreasing under the enforcement of the present law. Figures furnished by the Census Bureau show that in 1880 there were, in round numbers, 105,000 Chinese in the United States, in 1890 there were 109,000, while in 1900 there were 93,283. Gentlemen connected with the Bureau of Immigration have denied these figures and claim that there are 300,000 Chinese in the United States to-day. I assume, however, that the figures furnished by the Census Bureau, whose business it is to gather such statistics, should be taken as correct. But even if there were 300,000, is that a good ground for disregarding our treaty obligations when the treaty will expire in two years from now? It seems to me not.

Our trade and commerce with China are worthy of consideration in dealing with this subject. Under present conditions, if we do not close the doors to the commerce of China ourselves, it is as sure to come to the United States, and much of our trade go to it, as the sun shines upon us. The Hawaiian Territory, over 1,000 miles out from our California shores in the direction of Japan and China in the Pacific Ocean, is a part, in the fullest sense, of the United States. The great archipelago—the Philippine Islands—over which the sovereignty of the United States is proclaimed and very soon, I trust, will be recognized by all the people of those fertile islands, is still beyond and comparatively near to China. So we have opened the way, by establishing our outposts upon the sea, to make it easy for the United States to control the commerce of that country. So, Mr. President, from a purely selfish standpoint, it is our interest to keep faith with China in all that we do.

I am aware, Mr. President, that events have transpired in that ancient and weak Government which startled and almost paralyzed the civilized world during the last two years, and the nations yet look back at the condition which for months prevailed in that feeble Government, with its 400,000,000 subjects, with amazement and horror. But the Chinese Government apparently did the best she could to protect foreigners among them, and has agreed to do all that has been demanded of her by the nations in reparation for the outrages committed by her subjects upon the representatives of foreign governments, their families, and the citizens and subjects of the nations in that country.

Mr. President, I do not mean to be misunderstood in my position. My belief is that we ought not to pass any law in disregard of our treaty obligations; that we can continue the present law until the treaty of 1894 shall expire, if notice shall be given that this Government does not desire it to be continued another ten years; and in the meantime a new treaty may be agreed to which will abrogate any possible treaty stipulations against the absolute exclusion of Chinese laborers and which will permit us to enact such legislation as we may deem necessary for the protection of our country from the influx of these Chinese laborers into the United States.

I desire to say right here that if keeping out the Chinese laborers is not sufficient, let us adhere to our treaty obligations until they expire or until we regularly abrogate them and then pass such a law as the American people deem their interest to demand, and I will vote for it if it keeps every possible Chinaman from coming to our shores.

If China should decline to enter into a new treaty of this character, we might then be justified in going ahead and passing any law on the subject of Chinese immigration that we might choose. I recognize, of course, that in the absence of any treaty on the subject every nation possesses the absolute right to restrict immigration in any manner it may desire.

It is better to pass a law in reference to Chinese immigration before our present laws expire next month. Still, if every law on our statute books prohibiting the immigration of Chinese laborers should expire to-day, the treaty of 1894 would prove a barrier against Chinese laborers coming into the United States. That treaty by its terms prohibits such immigration, and that treaty has all the authority and weight of an act of Congress under our Constitution. It is a part of our supreme municipal law without any additional act of Congress, and it would be the duty of the executive department to see to it, by such measures as they might find it necessary to adopt, that no Chinese laborer should enter the United States except as provided in the treaty.

Mr. PERKINS obtained the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator yield to me for just one moment?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield first to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM].

ELEONORA G. GOLDSBOROUGH.

Mr. BURNHAM. I desire to call up the bill (S. 3421) for the relief of Eleonora G. Goldsborough.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMON in the chair). The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will it not be necessary to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business? Can one bill be taken up in this way when another is under consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly, by unanimous consent, the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. TILLMAN. It involves that, I suppose. I merely wanted to know what would be the parliamentary status.

Mr. MITCHELL. That was the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was practically the request that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "death" to insert "with allowances for two years;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, instructed to pay to Eleonora G. Goldsborough, widow of the late Surg. Charles B. Goldsborough, of the Marine-Hospital Service, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, two years' pay at the rate of the salary he was receiving as surgeon at the time of his death, with allowances for two years.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire, what is the theory upon which this appropriation is supposed to be made?

Mr. BURNHAM. The bill as stated in the report is a peculiar bill. It stands upon an exceptional basis. The surgeon whose family are the claimants here was in the Marine-Hospital Service and was engaged there for some twelve years. He contracted a disease in the performance of an operation in the line of his duty, and died, as it appears by the statement, from the effects of the operation.

In 1898 there was an exact precedent for this bill in the case of Surg. John W. Branham. He contracted a disease, yellow fever, I think, after a service of about five months, which caused his death. Dr. Goldsborough had been in the service some twelve years. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] objected to the bill and desired that this should be presented as an exceptional case and not form a general precedent, and so we have put it in our report in that way. We think it is exceptional, and the bill has the assent of the Senator from Missouri in its present state.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13031) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2960) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all possessions and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent.

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL. By permission of the Senator from California, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to one fact. The Senator has very properly stated the law when he says that a later treaty repeals a former treaty and a later law repeals a former law, or even a former treaty. That we all agree is good law. The Senator has stated that this bill violates, in his judgment, certain provisions of the treaty of 1880. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to a fact which I think is conclusive.

Mr. CULLOM. It violates the treaty of 1894.

Mr. MITCHELL. The treaty of 1880 was abrogated by the treaty of 1894, and the expiration of the treaty of 1894 can not bring back to life the treaty of 1880 or any provision of it. I know there is a rule of law to the effect that the repeal of a repealing act perhaps revives the act repealed, but that is not this case.

Mr. SPOONER. That was the old common law. It is not the rule here.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is not the rule, but even if it were it is not applicable here. This is a case where a solemn treaty has been entered into which absolutely abrogates and repeals a former treaty, and there is a limitation in the later treaty; it expires at the end of a certain time—in ten years. Under no conceivable circumstances can it be successfully contended that at the expiration of the treaty of 1894 life is blown into the treaty of 1880 again.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I have not given this subject any examination, but I find here, and was reading it just before the Senator rose, a contention by ex-Secretary Foster, which is very plausibly maintained, that at the expiration of this treaty, Articles V and VI of the Burlingame treaty—

Mr. CULLOM. The treaty of 1868.

Mr. SPOONER. The treaty of 1868 will again come into operation.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is a different proposition. But while I know ex-Secretary Foster is capable of presenting almost any case very plausibly, at the same time I doubt the validity of the argument.

Mr. SPOONER. I have formed no opinion on the question.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President—

Mr. MITCHELL. But there can be no question, it seems to me—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. My view has been that, as the treaty of 1880 was a permanent treaty, and as the treaty of 1894 was a ten years' treaty, a sort of suspending treaty, when that treaty had terminated by the expiration of the time the treaty of 1880 would remain in force. I believe that will be determined to be the law.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is clearly an abrogation of the treaty of 1880.

Mr. PENROSE. It was not maintained for one moment by Mr. Foster before the Committee on Immigration that the treaty of 1880 could ever be revived. I was somewhat astonished at the claim made by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations that such a theory could be entertained. On page 36 of the testimony before the Committee on Immigration Mr. John W. Foster said:

The treaty of 1894 was substituted for that of 1880, and in its Article VI it is provided that "this convention shall remain in force for a period of ten years," with the usual provision for notice of termination.

Mr. Foster went on to explain with considerable elaboration our treaty relations with China, but at no point did he make the slightest claim that the treaty of 1880 could ever be revived. He did endeavor to set up the claim that Articles V and VI of the treaty of 1868 might be revived upon the expiration or abrogation of the treaty of 1894. The Senator from Illinois is the first in this controversy to claim that there is any life left in the treaty of 1880.

Mr. CULLOM. It is my judgment that when the treaty for ten years shall expire some portion of the treaty of 1880 and possibly of the treaty of 1868 will be in force.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator goes far beyond the most extreme advocates and representatives of the Chinese in this controversy in that contention.

Mr. CULLOM. It is just a question of law with me. I do not care anything about what is claimed by representatives of the Chinese.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I think it is well enough to understand the attitude of Mr. Foster upon these several treaties. I suppose upon questions of treaty law and treaty construction he is as safe an authority as we can turn to, and when he states that upon the expiration of the treaty of 1894 the treaty of 1880 is not revived, but that certain sections or articles of the treaty of 1868 are revived, there is at least some good, solid foundation for the claim. That is the stand taken by Mr. Foster, and upon the theory that he is right (and we may presume that he is right until he is shown to be mistaken) we may very well understand what Articles V and VI of the treaty of 1868 are.

If, as Mr. Foster claims, these articles of the 1868 treaty are to be revived upon the termination of the treaty of 1894, then all the barriers which have been raised against Chinese immigration, which have been raised against Chinese laborers, and the whole horde of Chinese who would seek admission into this country are leveled to the ground.

These are the articles of the treaty which Mr. Foster says will be revived. His claim was that because in 1894 these articles would be revived, we would be guilty of a violation of our solemn treaty with China to continue our exclusive policy in any way; in other words, that since Articles V and VI of the treaty of 1868 are revived, any act of Congress that would exclude laborers, or any other class of Chinese people, that would not leave the entire population of China upon the plane that the population of other countries occupy under the favored-nation clause, would be a violation of our treaty obligations, and for that reason he objected, not to certain clauses and certain provisions in the bill now under discussion, but to the bill in toto, because it would be a violation of treaty obligations. This is what he says:

With this exact parallel before us, I need say no more to convince you that when the treaty with China of 1894 is terminated in 1904, Articles V and VI of the treaty of 1868 will again come into full force. They are as follows:

"ART. V. The United States of America and the Emperor of China cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of the free immigration and emigration of their citizens and subjects, respectively, from the one country to the other, for purposes of curiosity, of trade, or as permanent residents. The high contracting parties, therefore, join in reprobating any other than an entirely voluntary emigration for these purposes. They consequently agree to pass laws making it a penal offense for a citizen of the United States or Chinese subjects to take Chinese subjects either to the United States or to any other foreign country, or for a Chinese subject or citizen of the United States to take citizens of the United States to China or to any other foreign country, without their free and voluntary consent, respectively.

"ART. VI. Citizens of the United States visiting or residing in China shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, or exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation. And, reciprocally, Chinese subjects visiting or residing in the United States shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation. But nothing herein contained shall be held to confer naturalization upon citizens of the United States in China, nor upon the subjects of China in the United States."

Clearly breaking down all walls, opening the United States to as overwhelming an invasion of Chinese population as may see fit to come, with the only privilege denied them—and that privilege is denied also to the inhabitants of the United States residing in China—is the right to become American citizens.

Then Mr. Foster continues:

I think I have made it clear that these articles will, in the absence of any other treaty agreement, come into force in 1904, and I have therefore established my first proposition that any law passed by the present Congress, which continues the exclusion of Chinese laborers beyond 1904 will be not only without international authority but will be in violation of treaty stipulations.

That was the claim of Mr. Foster.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator has examined this question, and he is a member of the committee and an able lawyer. If he will pardon me, I should like to ask him what is his opinion as to the effect of the expiration of the treaty of 1894 as to Articles V and VI of the treaty of 1868?

Mr. PATTERSON. I am frank to say that I have not given it independent investigation. I was not present when ex-Secretary Foster made his statement, but I find it here in the record. I do no more than take his interpretation of the several treaties.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The statement has been made that this treaty will expire in 1904, but I do not think that is quite the case. It is not if we strictly follow its terms. The treaty may be denounced in 1904 by either party; but if it is not so denounced by giving six months' notice prior to the expiration of the first period of ten years, it will continue for another period of ten years; that is, until 1914.

Mr. SPOONER. But if we denounce it do we revive Articles V and VI of the treaty of 1868?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That was not the point of my observation. I rose simply to say—

Mr. SPOONER. I understand, but the Senator is on the committee, and I have not examined the matter at all. I only asked for information.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That is a feature of the subject which I have not examined with care; and I would not undertake to say. It was not at all necessary to determine that matter in the consideration of the bill before the Senate.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] states correctly the provisions of the treaty of 1894; but, as stated by Mr. Foster, I think it may be accepted that, since China is opposed to the exclusion of its subjects by the United States, China will, within the six months fixed by the treaty, denounce the treaty. It is, therefore, of the highest importance that we should have affirmative legislation upon the statute books in anticipation of that event.

There is another reason why this bill as reported by the committee should be enacted into law, and why neither of the other bills reported, which simply propose to continue existing law in effect until 1904, should be permitted to take its place. It is this: Since the treaty of 1894 and the act of 1892 this country has acquired different possessions—Hawaii and the Philippine Islands.

There is a very large Chinese population in the Hawaiian Islands. There are seventy-five or eighty thousand Chinese of the pure blood in the Philippine Islands, and there are in the neighborhood of 750,000 mestizos—that is, Chinese of the half blood. Unless this law is enacted, or a law which covers Hawaii and the Philippine Islands, there will be no law which will interfere with the emigration of Hawaiian Chinese and Filipino Chinese into the United States. I imagine that the doctrine of domestic territory would apply to the population of those islands as well as to the matter of tariff duties, and, until Congress shall act by affirmative legislation, no rule or regulation can be enforceable that prohibits the incoming of Chinese to this country from the Philippine Islands.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does the Senator know of any instance in which a Chinaman has attempted to come from the Philippine Islands into this country?

Mr. PATTERSON. I have not been watching for instances of that kind.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does the Senator suppose that under our present law a Chinaman would be admitted if he did attempt to come?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not see how he could be prohibited under the present law. Under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States I am inclined to think—and I think it is a safe conclusion—that there can be no interdiction of the communication of the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands and of the United States to and from either the one country or the other, and the fact that Chinese may not have come—or they may have come for aught I know—does not in the slightest degree interfere with the imminent danger that will constantly exist if this Congress should adjourn without prohibitive legislation being placed upon the statute books.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. Upon what line of argument did Mr. Foster base his opinion that the particular articles of the treaty referred to would be revived rather than any other articles of any prior treaty?

Mr. PATTERSON. As I said in response to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], I have not given the subject independent investigation.

Mr. BACON. I asked the Senator for information.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Foster based his view upon the ground that the treaty of 1894 suspended the operations of Articles V and VI of the treaty of 1868.

Mr. BACON. But did not abrogate them?

Mr. SPOONER. Did not abrogate them, but suspended them.

Mr. PATTERSON. It simply suspended them. As I have said, I have not given that subject independent investigation, and therefore do not desire to enter upon an independent argument. But, as I have suggested, if the claim that is made by Mr. Foster is true—I have not examined the treaty of 1868, but I suppose his claim must be true—then surely those two articles were simply suspended by the treaty of 1894 and the treaty of 1880, and the revival of those two articles must follow ex necessitate.

I want to call the attention of Senators to the situation in the Philippine Islands. It is of the highest importance that Treasury officials shall be sent to those islands for the purpose of supervising any laws that may exist there with reference to the ingress of Chinese. The only law there now is one that was issued as a general order by one of the commanding generals, and in general terms was declared to be a law by the Philippine Commission.

But I am inclined to think, Mr. President, that there is not likely to be anything like an honest enforcement of that law in the Philippine Islands. Unless representatives and officials from the Treasury Department are sent to those islands, officials who are imbued with a conviction of duty, who believe that it is their duty to enforce the law honestly and impartially as it is found upon the statute book, we may well expect that with anything like peace in those islands there will be a tremendous trend of Chinese toward them. I have not made a calculation, but there must be at least 3,000 miles of seacoast in the Philippine Islands. They are more than a thousand miles from north to south.

Mr. BACON. Much more than that.

Mr. PATTERSON. Whatever they may be, I aim always to be conservative in my estimates, and that is quite enough.

The opportunity for access to the Zulu group, and then the migration from those islands up to those occupying a more northerly situation in the ocean, is without any impediment whatever, except the ordinary impediments of sea and land that interpose.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would remind the Senator from Colorado that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], who, I believe, made a visit to the Philippine Archipelago, in an elaborate, thoroughly prepared, and digested speech, which he made here on the future of that acquisition, declared that the natives were not fit for work or would not work; that they were lazy, and he indicated in express terms that the Chinese were to be the laborers of that country. His contention, if I recall it, was to the effect that in the development of the archipelago—as he pictured in glowing terms the exploitation of which they were capable, the rich mines and forests, and all that kind of thing, lying there waiting the hand of the reaper—the Chinaman was to be the laborer and the American capitalist was to be the person to bring him there. I merely wish to remind the Senator of that phase of this question.

Mr. PATTERSON. Whatever may have been said by the Senator from Indiana upon that subject is probably true.

We know from the testimony which has been given up to this time before the Philippine Committee—and it has been confined to Governor Taft and Army officers—that Filipino labor is not desirable or dependable from an American, Yankee, go-ahead standpoint. We know further that the chamber of commerce of Manila, I think it was, petitioned Congress for the admission of Chinese upon the ground that Chinese labor was necessary. We know that those who make investments over there desire labor that will not fail them on account of the debilitating climate, and for other reasons which have been given with great clearness; and that such labor is necessary to anything like the degree of prosperity which they wish to see in the Philippines.

There is unrelenting hostility between the native Filipino and the Chinese; but upon the part of the Europeans, upon the part of the Chinese mestizos, upon the part of the commercial classes and of those who claim to be there for the purpose of developing the islands there is a concurrence of opinion, as expressed, that the islands can only be properly developed by the use of Chinese labor. Therefore, I think it is safe to say, Mr. President, that the enforcement of any existing law in the Philippines will be lax to commence with. On account of the tremendous line of seacoast, with the utmost vigilance there can not be an effective barring out of the Chinese population. So that the Philippines, unless they are embraced within a Federal exclusion law and unless the coming of Chinese from the Philippine Islands to the mainland is prohibited, will simply be a stepping-stone between China and the United States, by means of which an almost unlimited Chinese population can reach this country.

So, Mr. President, I hope that no Senator who is sincerely in favor of Chinese exclusion, who is impressed with the necessity of protecting the white labor of this country, and especially of the Pacific coast and other sections of the United States which the Chinese may readily reach, from competition with Chinese will commit the grave mistake of resting satisfied with any measure that does not include exclusion from the Philippine Islands and then exclusion from the United States by way of the Philippine Islands. To make that at all effective it is necessary that there shall be a Federal statute, under which Treasury officials will be sent to the Philippine Islands for the purpose of enforcing the law.

I will not occupy any more time now; but, Mr. President, I think that it can be demonstrated, and I believe it will be before this discussion ends, that the provisions of this bill with reference to the excepted classes are in every wise reasonable, in view of the object that is to be attained.

I think we may say that there are a goodly number of Senators who really do not want Chinese exclusion and who are expressing content with certain weakling measures, because such measures are the best that they can hope to obtain through this body; but, Mr. President, the Senators who favor Chinese exclusion, who are impressed with the enormity of the evil, who know the demoralizing influences of a Chinese group in any community, who comprehend what competition between Chinese wages with the wage that should be paid to the white laborer, and the depth of degradation to which a white laborer must descend whenever the price which he receives is to be fixed by the price that is paid to the Chinese, will have no hesitation in supporting this measure as it is reported from the committee.

The complaint is made, Mr. President, that under this bill a Chinese banker can not be admitted, nor a doctor, nor a lawyer, and, I suppose, neither would a Chinese astrologer come in; but it should be borne in mind that China, as one of the high contracting parties, agreed that all Chinese, except those constituting the five favored classes, should be excluded, not in terms, but so clearly and so logically that there is no escape from it.

In the treaty of 1894 the declaration is made—and let me read it, so that we may all have a fair understanding. Article I of the treaty of 1894 is an exceedingly short one, but it is very comprehensive. It says:

ARTICLE I.

The high contracting parties agree that for a period of ten years, beginning with the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, the coming, except under the conditions hereinafter specified, of Chinese laborers to the United States shall be absolutely prohibited.

The conditions that China saw fit to approve are afterwards specified, and let me read to the Senate what classes were made exceptions. I read the second article, and will then come to the one I have in mind now, for the purpose of showing the terms to which China through its plenipotentiary solemnly agreed.

The preceding article—

That is the one that absolutely excludes all Chinese except those that might be in the treaty thereafter specified.

ARTICLE II.

The preceding article shall not apply to the return to the United States of any registered Chinese laborer who has a lawful wife, child, or parent in the United States—

The exclusion does not apply to them; and this bill makes full, ample, and generous provision for the return of Chinese to the United States who, having been here and gone without, desire to return because they have here lawful wives, children, or parents—or property therein of the value of $1,000, or debts of like amount due him and pending settlement.

The readmission of those classes is provided for in the present bill. Those with lawful wives, children, or parents; those who own property in the United States to the extent of $1,000, or to whom is due the sum of $1,000. The second article then goes on:

Nevertheless every such Chinese laborer shall, before leaving the United States, deposit, as a condition of his return, with the collector of customs of the district from which he departs, a full description in writing of his family, or property, or debts, as aforesaid, and shall be furnished by said collector with such certificate of his right to return under this treaty as the laws of the United States may now or hereafter prescribe and not inconsistent with the provisions of this treaty.

All of which is recognized and provided for in the bill now before the Senate. Then Article III provides:

The provisions of this convention shall not affect the right at present enjoyed of Chinese subjects, being officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for curiosity or pleasure, but not laborers, of coming to the United States and residing therein. To entitle such Chinese subjects as are above described to admission into the United States, they may produce a certificate from their Government or the Government where they last resided viséed by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence they depart.

Then, it provides for the transit of Chinese laborers across the United States. If they leave China and happen to be in Canada and desire to go to Mexico, Chinese laborers may traverse the United States for the purpose of going from the one country to the other, or if they desire to go by way of the United States from China to any European country, they have the right of transit, and the right of transit is provided for in this bill.

When a treaty excludes all Chinese except certain excepted classes, and names those that are excepted, then, under every rule of construction, all are excluded except those expressly mentioned; and when it is complained that under this bill a banker or a physician or others can not come in, we have a right to say it is the fault of China, for China consented to a treaty which excludes them.

Now, without occupying more time on that subject and with reference to the regulations found in the bill, they were found necessary by the officers of the United States whose duty it is to enforce this measure. They discovered that there never was a truer statement made about any people than that of Bret Harte referring to the Chinese:

For ways that are dark
And for tricks that are vain
The heathen Chinese is peculiar.

The Chinese have certain peculiarities that make them desirable for certain people. They are obedient. They are servile. They may be used without resentment as slaves and peons have been used. Kicks and cuffs and hard words have no particular terror to them. For some people a class of this character possesses peculiar charms, and the further we get away from the mass of the people the more we see in people of that character to please us.

There is a clamor in various localities and from certain classes for the unrestricted admission of Chinese, because the Chinese possess those traits which make men mean everywhere, but afford peculiar satisfaction to those who delight to dominate over their fellow-man. Since exclusion has been placed upon the statute books China and Chinese and the Six Companies have been found prolific in schemes to evade the law. And why? Because they come here under a peculiar contract system that makes it extremely profitable to those interested in Chinese immigration. And then there are great steamship lines and great railroad lines to and in the United States which see in the breaking down of the barriers incalculable profits in the carrying of Chinese, first across the ocean and then across the land, first in the steamer and then in railway car.

It has been said that capital is without conscience. We know, Mr. President, that when great dividends are in sight for great corporations, railroad, steamship, and other corporations, the moral law and the welfare of the human race get little sympathy from corporations when they can fill their coffers and reap immense gains. So we find in this country the representatives of great steamship lines, the representatives of great railway lines, the representatives of great industrial factories, those who want cheap labor. As the honorable Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] said yesterday, he has received from his State a petition from cotton factories urging him to vote against this measure.

Organizations of this character, wherever they may be found, whether upon the Pacific coast or the interior of the country, or on the Gulf or the Lake shores, are willing to disregard the welfare of the masses of the people—not only their physical, but their moral and their spiritual welfare. They stand ready to override every consideration which should control an American citizen imbued with a proper appreciation of American manhood in order to get the benefit of cheap labor, although in getting it they degrade men of their own race and blood and fill their country with moral lepers, who would contaminate its manhood from ocean to ocean if there were enough of them here.

The honest, genuine, bona fide opposer of Chinese exclusion will find nothing in this bill to offend him. Why this great solicitude for the Chinese? I take it we are doing no injustice to the Chinese when we keep him at home. If you think of his own pleasure and happiness, there is every reason to believe that they will be more enhanced at home among friends, with his own kith and kin and those of his own caste, than here in the United States, in the midst of a hostile population, a population in which he is held as a degraded being and looked upon as an outcast and an interloper. So, if you have in mind the welfare of the Chinaman, there is no reason why you should seek to bring him to the United States.

I am not prepared to say that if we were to open our doors to the Chinese but that we would find a little more favor in the eyes of the Chinese governing masses. Perhaps some people would make more money; perhaps some enterprises might be able to sell more of their products; but is that all there is in life? I take it the Chinese Empire by this time is absolutely reconciled to the policy of exclusion which has been in force in the United States now since 1880, and no law that has for its object the honest enforcement of provisions adopted by a solemn treaty with China is going to offend the Empire more than it has been offended. It is reconciled.

I take it, Mr. President, that the attitude of the United States toward the integrity of the Chinese Empire is of far greater moment to China and to Chinese citizens than is any particular clause or provision that may be placed in our exclusion law, and if the United States continues the policy it has maintained up to this time of standing for the integrity of China, of opposing the schemes of European governments with which they would disrupt the Empire and divide its territory as the garments of the Sainted One of old were divided amongst the crucifiers, there will be no trouble upon the score of trade and commerce between China and the United States.

China, in the language of its treaty, recognizes that there is an ineradicable hostility upon the part of the American population, or at least a very large part of the American population, to the people of its Empire. In solemn treaty it has agreed that such is the case. In solemn treaty it has agreed that they shall be excluded. Therefore there is no danger of offending either the Chinese Government or its commercial classes by adopting a rigid and honest policy of enforcing what has been deliberately agreed upon between it and the United States.

Let the United States continue in the future as it has in the past to act the part of an honest arbiter, recognizing the right of the Chinese Government to exist and the benefits of the integrity of the Chinese Empire; wherever it may, intervening its strong arm to prevent its disruption and the heaping of odium and indignity upon its ruling classes, and I take it that our commerce will not suffer, our trade will not be diminished, but that, on the contrary, they will advance and expand, while those who are seeking to make a prey of the Empire will suffer by the diminution if not the destruction of their commerce.

Mr. President, there is no violation of treaty rights in this bill. I was glad that in another Chamber it was adopted with such unanimity.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, as I have the honor to represent in part a State on the Pacific slope, and live in a great commercial city, the entrepôt for perhaps 75 per cent of the Chinese who have come into the United States, a city which is the headquarters of the Six Consolidated Chinese Companies, which are virtually those that bring the Chinese to this country, which make the laws for them while they are here, which direct the Chinese throughout our State, and one of which companies is usually the contractor for the Chinese employed in irrigation on railroads, in great mining camps, and in the forests, it seems to me that perhaps it is not improper that I should relate to the Senate in a conversational way my own observations and experience during the forty years or more that I have been brought in contact with this undesirable class of immigrants who have come into the country.

Mr. President, I think there can be no doubt that nine out of every ten men and women in the United States believe that there should be placed restrictions more or less rigorous on Chinese immigration to this country. The better the opportunities for learning what the Chinese are and what effect their presence in large numbers would have in this country the greater is the proportion of Americans who believe in restrictive measures and the more rigorous they believe those restrictions should be. Whereas in the far Eastern States, whose people have been able to see little or nothing of Chinese life, customs, and habits, and where is found a morbid sentiment based on the assertion of the Declaration of Independence that "all men are equal," there may be found a considerable number of Americans who are willing to welcome among them such numbers of Chinese as are willing to come—on the other side of the continent, which has borne the brunt of the Chinese invasion, the voice of the people is practically unanimous in favor of exclusion. The State of California at a general election once voted on this question, and the result was 154,638 against immigration and 883 in favor. And even among the strongest pro-Chinese advocates there will ever be found, I think—as there must be among intelligent Americans who give any consideration to the question—an intimation that what they so earnestly demand might under some circumstances be improper to grant. In fact, there is a weakness in their position of which they are so conscious that they can not help revealing it.

SIGNIFICANT ADMISSIONS.

Hon. John W. Foster, who appeared before the Senate Committee on Immigration in opposition to this bill, when pressed for an answer, said that he thought it "a wise thing to have a reasonable exclusion" of Chinese laborers, and Mr. Stephen W. Nickerson, representing the "opinion of a public (pro-Chinese) meeting" in Boston, was, I think, conscious of this weakness when he said that "even while this policy (of impartiality in treatment) does not always seem true in special instances nor in view of some temporary considerations, yet, we believe in the long run it is true." Mr. Nickerson said that while the people of his State have "always been a little theoretical for right" they have "also been practical for trade," yet the Arkwright Club, of Boston, which, representing textile manufacturers of New England, might be expected to be very "practical for trade," in a communication to the committee states that it recognizes the fact that "the laws against the admission into this country of that class of Chinese (laborers) can not be too stringent."

Thus the student of the political bearings of the question, the advocates of the moral obligations of the United States toward Chinese immigrants, and the representatives of those American industries which are most interested in trade with China, give evidence that they realize the fact that unrestricted Chinese immigration would be an evil. And this realization comes to every one, I think, whether, in considering the question, a "little theoretical for right," anxious to extend his trade, or fearful of political complications. The consideration of the problems by those of our Presidents who have had occasion to deal with them, has led to the same conclusions.

OPINIONS OF OUR PRESIDENTS.

President Grant, in a message to Congress, said:

I call the attention of Congress to a generally conceded fact that the great proportion of Chinese immigrants who come to our shores do not come voluntarily to make their homes with us, and their labor productive of general prosperity, but come under contracts with headmen, who own them almost absolutely. In a worse form does this apply to Chinese women. Hardly a perceptible percentage of them perform any honorable labor, but they are brought for shameful purposes, to the disgrace of the communities where settled, and to the great demoralization of the youth of those localities.

President Harrison said in a message to Congress:

While our supreme interests demand the exclusion of a laboring element which experience has shown to be incompatible with our social life, all steps to compass this imperative need should be accompanied with a recognition of the claim of those strangers now lawfully among us to humane and just treatment.

President Cleveland, in messages to Congress, said:

That the exclusion of Chinese labor is demanded in other countries where like conditions prevail is strongly evidenced in the Dominion of Canada, where Chinese immigration is now regulated by laws more exclusive than our own.

Chinese merchants have trading operations of magnitude throughout the world. They do not become citizens or subjects of the country where they may temporarily reside and trade; they continue to be subjects of China.

Much of this violence (against Chinese) can be traced to race prejudice and competition in labor. * * * In opening our vast domain to alien elements the purpose of our lawgivers was to invite assimilation and not to provide an arena for endless antagonism. The paramount duty of maintaining public order and defending the interests of our own people may require the adoption of measures of restriction.

The experiment of blending the social habits and mutual race idiosyncrasies of the Chinese laboring classes with those of the great body of the people of the United States has been proved by the experience of twenty years, and even since the Burlingame treaty of 1868, to be in every sense unwise, impolitic, and injurious to both nations. * * * The admitted and paramount right and duty of every government to exclude from its borders all elements of foreign population which for any reason retard its prosperity or are detrimental to the moral and physical health of its people must be regarded as a recognized canon of international law and intercourse.

PUBLIC OPINION ADVERSE TO CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

It must, I think, be conceded that intelligent public opinion is opposed to Chinese immigration. The reasons are not far to seek. They are fundamental—racial—and are bound to make themselves felt in spite of theories as to moral obligations or the assumed needs of foreign trade. They bring to the front again that pitiless truth of the survival of the fittest. In the question of life or death which is involved the moral theories of the pro-Chinese advocates can scarcely have that weight which would be theirs were the future of our institutions and our race on this continent in no danger. When two races so radically different as Chinese and Americans freely intermingle in large numbers, there must either be assimilation or the subjection of one to the other.

The experience of the United States for fifty years, and of other countries for far longer periods, proves conclusively that the Chinese are not assimilative. Witness the Chinese colonies in San Francisco, Hongkong, Manila, Singapore, Penang, and Malakka. Their racial tendency is more strongly opposed to amalgamation with other races than that of the Hindoo or the Parsee. Far into future history they will be what they now are, in racial tendencies stronger than will or desire, and will remain aloof from all other peoples. If they are not assimilative they can be only a foreign body within our borders, and must, in the nature of things, either suppress or be suppressed. That alternative would surely come with unrestricted influx from China, in isolated communities at first, the struggle extending as the disparity in numbers decreased. Put 500,000 Chinese in and around Boston and there would be no more pro-Chinese mass meetings at which the bill of rights of Massachusetts could be invoked. Rather would their be raised the well-remembered slogan of Denis Kearney; and if the men of Massachusetts were not degenerate from colonial times, Boston Harbor would be filled with other products of the Flowery Kingdom than tea.

A STRUGGLE FOR SURVIVAL.

In the contest for survival between the American and the Chinese the latter has an overpowering advantage. Centuries before there was an Anglo-Saxon the Chinese had gained their present characteristics. Thousands of years of exclusion of all other peoples had made them unassimilative. Their country, walled against the external world, which they regarded with contempt, became crowded to the limit of support, and universal poverty was the result. For thousands of years the people of China have been compelled to live on the scantiest of means, and the result is a race—the fittest only surviving—which is probably capable of sustaining more hardships, of living on cheaper food, of needing less clothing and shelter, of having fewer wants, and the lowest estimate of life, as a whole, of any civilized people. They are, therefore, capable of entering into competition with any race on earth with the chances in favor of their ultimate supremacy. To attempt to meet the Chinese on their own ground would mean decimation at once. No other civilized people could endure were it to adopt the Chinese standard, and that standard they would have to adopt were they to compete at all.

Such are the Chinese whom we seek to exclude from our shores—the Chinese belonging to that vast body of China's inhabitants which are ground between the exactions of the few officials and men of wealth and the limitations in the productiveness of the soil. They form the class from which come to us the Chinese who underbid our own workmen in every calling in which they see fit to engage. They are fitted to successfully enter into competition with labor in all parts of the United States. Here they find conditions which, at their worst, are far better than any they could find in China.

CHINESE AS INDUSTRIAL COMPETITORS.

The late Consul-General Wildman, in a report to the State Department December 27, 1900, says:

As long as labor has almost no value and flesh and blood is the cheapest thing on the market, I can not recommend American manufacturers to waste good printing matter and postage stamps on so impossible a field. * * * The majority of the peasantry live at the rate of from 2 to 5 cents a day.

Two salient characteristics of the Chinese which alone would render them unfitted to become residents of this country are pointed out by United States Consul Henry B. Miller, of Chungkiang. He states that—

The main thought in Chinese economy seems to be to find a place for a man to get wages, however small, regardless of whether he earns them or not. The idea that a man should be employed on the basis of his earning power and capacity is unknown.

Williams R. Wheeler, representing the Pacific Coast Jobbers' Association, in his testimony before the Industrial Commission, May 20, 1901, after stating emphatically that the reenactment of the exclusion law is desirable, said:

They (the Chinese) used to enter all lines of employment when immigration was unrestricted. There was scarcely a vocation that they did not take up. * * * The disfavor with which we regard the Chinese is altogether a commercial one, for the reason that the Chinaman is conservative and continues to wear Chinese clothes and eat Chinese food, all of which enables him to live in Chinese fashion, herded together like so many cattle. This mode of life enables him to undersell and accept lower wages than the American workman. Furthermore, his earnings are sent back religiously to China, taking that much money out of the country, and the merchandise of most of his wants and requirements is brought from China to a large extent. He is not commercially a contributor to the upbuilding of this country.

HOW CHINESE CROWD OUT AMERICAN WORKMEN.

One of the most significant facts in relation to the effect of Chinese competition was placed before the Industrial Commission by Prof. W. A. Wyckoff, assistant professor of political economy in Princeton University. It will be remembered that Professor Wyckoff has made a study of the condition of labor in the United States at first hand, living as a workingman for two years, traveling from the Atlantic to the Pacific and securing work wherever he could at the wages offered. Those who have read his very interesting articles in one of the popular magazines will recollect that until he reached the Pacific coast he had no difficulty in procuring work. In fact, the demand for labor was greater than the supply outside of the large cities. No man willing to work need go without employment. To the Industrial Commission he said that in his tramp from Los Angeles to San Francisco he came in contact with Chinese labor, "which effectually cut off the possibility of my finding employment on the railways. I could not have got work there as I did in Nebraska, for example." There were no mixed gangs at all. The workmen were Chinese, employed on the contract or padrone system.

ACTUAL SLAVERY A FEATURE OF CHINESE CIVILIZATION.

This contract or padrone system is rendered not only possible, but is the rule in the case of Chinese labor in this country, especially among those newly arrived. It can safely be said that not one out of ten coolies entering the United States comes here a free man. They are virtually slaves. As slaves they are shipped to America, and as slaves they labor here for a longer or shorter term. And this slavery is but the extension to this country of the system which is universal in China. There the practice of buying and selling men and women is nearly as common as the buying and selling of cattle among us. There are found slaves—men and women bought for cash—in domestic service, in stores, in manufacturing establishments, and in the fields. It is a system that is recognized by Chinese law, and has been in vogue for thousands of years. It is a feature of the Chinese civilization which is more firmly rooted than the principle of individual liberty is with us. The subject was given special study nearly a quarter of a century ago by Hon. David H. Bailey, United States consul-general at Shanghai, who, in a report to the State Department, described the system under which men and women were bound to service in almost every capacity. Under date of December 2, 1879, he says:

What I have since—

His last letter—

seen and learned only tends to make my convictions stronger that this is real slavery, and that it prevails in every part of the Empire and among Chinese wherever they go. I repeat that Chinese slavery is an outgrowth of the family organization, which, so far as we know, is as old as Chinese society itself. I see no hope for its abolition here but in the remodeling of the whole family organization—a herculean task beyond the vision of the most advanced Chinese statesmen of this generation.

It is significant to note that the colony of Hongkong, where it is now settled by a judicial decision of its supreme court and by admissions in solemn memorial of all the leading native residents that Chinese slavery exists and ever has existed as an essential feature of the Chinese political and social system, is the entrapment for all Chinese emigration to the United States. And perhaps it is worth while to query whether that emigration is not thus shown to have in its every lineament the taint of human slavery.

THE TRAFFIC IN HUMAN BEINGS.

The principal Chinese residents of Hongkong prepared a petition to the Government, in which they protested against the stringent enforcement of the laws against slavery. Among the arguments used were the following:

In consequence of the propinquity of this colony of Hongkong to Canton, the custom of which province is to permit the people of the various places in the province to frequently sell their daughters and barter their sons that they may be preserved from death by starvation, the usage has become engrafted on this colony also. * * * The purchase of boys is because the buyers have no descendants. * * * The purchase of girls is because of the multitudinous duties of a household. * * * Among the Chinese there has hitherto been the custom of drowning their daughters. If a stop is put to the sale of girls the custom spoken of will be yet more observed.

Regarding the custom of buying and selling human beings, Consul-General Bailey states that there are four classes of slaves recognized by law: (1) Slaves of the imperial household; (2) concubines; (3) slaves held for labor; (4) slaves held for the purposes of prostitution. Of the second class, he says that it is a numerous one:

Every man who is able to buy and maintain has one or more concubines. These are invariably the subject of bargain and sale. * * * The buying of young girls of poor people and rearing and educating them to be sold as concubines is an extensive business. * * * A concubine is always a subject for sale or hire. * * * There are no limits to the supply of female children for this purpose.

The third class, general slaves, is also numerous:

Wherever in the Empire there is poverty and wealth these children are bought and sold. * * * Male and female slaves labor in the fields. * * * Others are used in the manufacture of various goods. Large numbers of all ages may be seen in the cities in all trades. Many are expert mechanics. Some bound till certain debts are discharged; others for life.

The penal code of China recognizes specifically these slaves and prescribes the punishment for their offenses. Consul-General Bailey recites these laws, which specifically discriminate between the free and the slave, awarding different punishments for the same offenses according as it is committed by a member of one or the other classes.

THE SYSTEM OF SLAVERY FOLLOWS THE CHINESE TO AMERICA.

And this is the system which is imported into the United States with cool labor and which would supplant free labor in field and workshop were the opportunity given. The Industrial Commission made, through a special agent, a careful study of the results of Chinese immigration in California, the only locality where the number of Chinese is large enough to enable such immigration to give sign of its ultimate effect were it unrestricted. The report says—

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator at this point in his interesting remarks whether that system of slavery continues after they are here?

Mr. PERKINS. It virtually continues.

Mr. HOAR. Whose slaves are they?

Mr. PERKINS. They come here under a contract to one of the Consolidated Six Chinese Companies. The companies advance the money for their passage here and they virtually control them while they are in this country, agreeing to care for them under certain conditions when they are sick, and when they die, after they have paid a certain amount of money into the fund, their bones are sent back to China.

Mr. HOAR. Do their wages go to them or to the companies?

Mr. PERKINS. A certain percentage of their wages goes to the companies. They pay a tribute, and it is estimated that from 25 to 50 per cent of their wages is paid into one of the Six Companies.

Mr. HOAR. Who pays it?

Mr. PERKINS. The person who is earning it.

Mr. HOAR. So it is paid by the Chinaman when he is here and has an employer. Now, what is the security of the owner of the slave for getting that part of his wage?

Mr. PERKINS. The security is, first, a superstition. Another reason is that their families in China are held as hostages for their safe return. Another reason is that of the highbinder. If they do not pay their debts; if they do not contribute the money that they have agreed to contribute under their contract, they are punished in a manner ranging from severe personal chastisement to the taking of their lives in some cases.

WHAT A CHINESE COLONY IS LIKE.

I was about to read from testimony before the Industrial Commission, a Commission with which the Senator is familiar, as he helped to create it. They sent a part of the Commission to San Francisco, who took this testimony:

The Chinese colony in the city of San Francisco is a perfect beehive of busy industry. The problem of cheap living has been solved by this peculiar race. Among the lower and common laboring classes, such as are engaged in agricultural pursuits, the cost of living has been reduced to the minimum and the wages paid are much less than any white laborer can live upon. The Chinese cooly and common laborer seems from instinct to be able to adapt himself to conditions under which no white laborer can live. In many instances, especially in agricultural pursuits, cooly labor has absolutely displaced white labor in the Pacific coast States.

Hundreds of factories and workshops in the city of San Francisco are in full operation, employing thousands of Chinese operatives, who are manufacturing boots and shoes, brooms, men's clothing, shirts, shirt waists, ladies' skirts, and, indeed, garments of all kinds, that find their way not only into Western, but Eastern markets as well, displacing in many instances the products of our Eastern workshops and factories. So that, as stated, this question is not one which interests the Pacific States alone, but which is of vital concern to the laboring interests of the entire nation.

An attempt was made by the special agent of the Commission to secure a census of Chinese manufactures in San Francisco, but it was soon found that complete statistics could not be obtained.

One of the chief characteristics of the Chinese race—

Says the agent—

is secretiveness in all affairs pertaining to their business. All inquiries at their stores, manufactories, and places of business were met with the ever-ready response, "Me no sabee."

SOME OF THE TRADES INVADED BY THE CHINESE.

Yet a vigorous effort was made and some data, though very incomplete, were obtained. In Chinatown alone, which embraces only eight or ten city blocks, there were found by actual count, in such places as access could be secured, 2,579 Chinese engaged in six callings, in which they competed directly with white labor, as follows:

Industry.	Number of workmen.	Average hours per day.	Average daily wages.
Boots and shoes.....	251	11 to 12	$1.00
Shirts.....	135	11 to 12	1.00
Men's clothing.....	335	11 to 12	1.00
Overalls.....	430	11 to 12	1.00
Ladies' underclothing.....	168	11 to 12	1.00
Manufacture of cigars.....	1,200	10 to 14	.....

Yet this is only a very imperfect record of even these industries in Chinatown alone, and does not include the number of workers within the ten blocks in the business of shoemaking, tailoring, jewelry manufacturing, and scores of other callings competing directly with white labor. No effort was made to give data of Chinese industries outside of Chinatown. Regarding cigar making, the report says:

The scale of prices varies, of course, with the different grades of cigars, and averages from 50 per cent to 33 per cent less than the union prices on the different grades of cigars. White labor in the cigar manufacturing industry has been driven from the field, and San Francisco, instead of supporting from 2,000 to 3,000 white cigar makers, as formerly, has to-day less than 200 union cigar makers, who have remained to struggle against this hopeless competition. What has been true of the cigar industry has been and will be true of every industry in which American labor is met with Asiatic competition. It is in every instance a bloodless struggle, in which the white man must surrender and go down in humiliating defeat.

THE KEARNEY RIOTS A WARNING.

Yet, were immigration of these yellow competitors of white labor permitted, the Kearney riots in 1877-78 gave warning that the struggle would not be bloodless.

The figures given above relate to a very small part of the city of San Francisco. They would be surprisingly large were an accurate census of the whole city possible. It would then be seen what inroads have been made in the field of white labor. But an accurate enumeration is impossible for it is prevented by the natural secretiveness of the Chinese, rendered more effective by reason of the knowledge that it is for their interest to prevent the extent of their competition from becoming known. In mining, however, there is less chance for concealment, and it is found that in California alone there are 8,000 Chinese miners to 16,000 whites.

And these Chinese come among us not as free men bringing their families, desirous of taking up their residence here and becoming good Americans, as do our immigrants from Europe, but they come in consequence of a bill of sale of their bodies for a term of years, to work for any wage that can be obtained, to live on the poorest and the least food, in the hope that some day they will be able to purchase their freedom and return to their home in China.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. Can the Senator give me an idea of the proportion of Chinese who are brought before the police courts and other courts for the commission of crime as compared with the number of population in the city of San Francisco?

Mr. PERKINS. I have the data, which I will come to later.

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, excuse me.

Mr. PERKINS. I took it from the State prison statistics, not from those of the halls of justice and the jails. With the Senator's permission, I will wait until I reach that point.

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

CRIMINAL COURTS FILLED WITH CHINESE OFFENDERS.

Mr. PERKINS. I have obtained the percentage of the higher crimes. I may say, however, in passing, that our police courts are filled with Chinese offenders. Perhaps the policemen may be more vigilant in arresting Chinese than others, yet the criminal class of Chinese is very large. I have obtained the data from our prisons. I wrote to the wardens of our different prisons and also to the superintendents of our asylums for the insane and other State institutions. I will give the Senator the percentage later.

Mr. SCOTT. I am much obliged to the Senator. I merely wanted to know what the pro rata was as compared with the entire population.

Mr. PERKINS. It does not interrupt me in the least to have any Senator ask me a question. I have been among the Chinese there. I merchandised for a great many years. I know their virtues if they have any. Their many vicious habits and their many faults are matters of public notoriety.

Mr. President, I wish to say here, and I want to reiterate it again and again, we want in this country men and women who believe in republican institutions, who believe in public schools, and raise their children up to be, if not statesmen, good citizens. Every man is a sovereign in this land, and we want no class of people, I care not from what country they may come, who do not assimilate with our people. We want only those to come here who come because they believe in our institutions and worship at the shrine of freedom. When a foreigner comes with that spirit I am ready to welcome him. The Chinese have no sympathy with and no affection for our people or our institutions. For that reason I am opposed to their coming into this country. They come like locusts to sweep its substance from our land to carry it back to their own native heath.

CHINA HOLDS THE EMIGRANT'S FAMILY AS HOSTAGES.

Not one of them has a desire or intention to remain here. One reason why his great wish is to return will be found in this extract from the report of Consul-General Bailey, above referred to:

When a Chinese subject goes out to any other country, all the other members of his family remaining in China are so many hostages that he will return and that he will maintain his allegiance to his country. The horrible punishment which may lawfully be inflicted on these hostages is sufficient to account for the rarity of instances of naturalization which have occurred in the history of Chinese emigration to the United States.

But Chinese coolies come to us in spite of exclusion acts, sent over from China in answer to the demand of the Chinese in America who have found a rich field for profit in buying and selling human labor. There is one organization of Chinamen in San Francisco known as the "Bahn Gar," which means "a Chinaman or Chinese who are in the business of importing Chinese coolies or slaves." Regarding the labor thus imported the special agent of the Industrial Commission says:

The hundreds of cool laborers whom they succeed in bringing into the country are hired out in "gangs," under the direction of a "boss," who collects their wages, the principal part of which is paid over to some company of the highbinders. The condition of this class of laborers is little better than that of slaves. They have little or no personal freedom; they are compelled to work on year after year and receive but a small portion of the fruits of their toil. If any one of them revolts against his masters or seeks to assert his personal liberty he is promptly assassinated.

Or he is otherwise harshly dealt with. It may be thought by the pro-Chinese advocates that the agent has drawn on his imagination in regard to this punishment, but he is strictly within the truth. Not only is the cool slave assassinated, but the independent and wealthy merchant who may protest against any of the doings of the slave-dealing organizations is exposed to death, and more than one has been killed for purposes of punishment and intimidation of others, as the criminal records of San Francisco abundantly prove.

THE TRADE IN CHINESE WOMEN.

But this slavery of mere laborers is not the worst kind that is imported with the Chinese immigrant. The trade in women for the vilest of purposes is as well established in this country as it is in China, where it is so thoroughly rooted that it may be called one of the national institutions. Consul-General Bailey, in the report above referred to, states that the fourth class of Chinese slaves are prostitutes. This class is very large, and is, he says, to be found in every city and village of China. Every member of the class is a slave—is bought and sold for so much money. In his report he says:

The law, or custom older than any existing law, permits such traffic. * * * In the crowded streets of cities and in the more thinly settled country regions fine-looking female children are kidnaped and carried to distant places, and sold to be raised for these vile purposes.

Women are bought or kidnaped in Chinese towns and villages and sent to San Francisco, there to be sold at prices ranging from $1,500 to $3,000. The rescue homes established by missionary societies are filled with girls who have escaped from the dens to which they were consigned by their purchasers, running the risk of death at the hands of the slave-dealing organizations rather than longer endure the life they were compelled to lead. Not all are fortunate enough to avoid the highbinder pistol or knife, as the many murders of the rescued evidence. From the inmates of these mission homes are obtained details of the sale of girls in China by their parents. Some of these accounts will be found in the report of the Industrial Commission.

THE SYSTEM OF DOMESTIC SLAVERY.

This slave class is to a great extent recruited from the class of domestic slaves which, as before pointed out, is one of the institutions of China. On this point Consul-General Bailey forwarded to the State Department a copy of a declaration by the chief justice of the court at Hongkong, in passing sentence on Chinese guilty of trafficking in children, in which the court says:

It is, I believe, an admitted duty that when the young girl (in domestic service) grows up and becomes marriageable she is married, but then it is the custom that the husband buys her, and her master receives the price always paid for a wife while he has received the girl's services for simple maintenance, so that according to the marriageable excess in the price of the bride over the price he paid for the girl he is a gainer, and the purchase of the child produces a good return. But the picture has another aspect; what—if the master is brutal and the mistress jealous—becomes of the poor girl? Certain recent cases show that she is sold to become a prostitute here or at Singapore or in California, a fate often worse than death to the girl, at a highly remunerative price to the brute, the master.

THE TRUE FAMILY LIFE IMPOSSIBLE.

Nothing is more distinctive of the Chinese than the way in which they treat their women, of which illustration has been given. Actual or virtual slavery is their lot. The wife only has a semblance of freedom, and she is surrounded by actual slaves—girls bought for so much cash—serving as concubines for her husband or as domestics about the house. But these wives, except in a few isolated instances, do not accompany their husbands abroad. They are left at home as hostages, and it is to see them and to conform to the requirements of their religious belief and superstition as to duty to ancestors that the Chinaman makes his periodical visits home. Such women as are generally found in domestic establishments among our Chinese population may safely be classed among those slaves known to the Chinese law as concubines. The true family life of the Chinaman is not found here; but if it were the conditions would not be changed—they would simply be intensified.

THE DANGER FROM LEPROSY.

These are not all of the objections which might be offered to immigration from China. There also comes with it the danger of physical contamination. Dr. Albert S. Ashmead, of New York, late foreign medical director of the Tokyo hospital, Japan, gives some interesting facts regarding leprosy among the Chinese, which have an important bearing upon the question of Chinese exclusion. He quotes Dr. Cantlie as saying:

Leprosy in the East centers in southeastern China. The cool emigrants come chiefly from Kwangtung and Fokien. Three-fourths of cool emigrants are from these provinces, and the spread of leprosy in the Malay Peninsula, in the Dutch, Spanish, and Portuguese East Indies and in Oceania has been in all cases coincident and concurrent with the immigration and residence of coolies from those provinces. In no instance over this vast area has any native acquired leprosy except where Chinese coolies have settled. One leprosy Chinaman inoculated Hawaii. Chinese immigrants brought leprosy to Japan.

According to the Jiji Shimpo (Daily News) of Tokyo, the most influential newspaper in the Empire of Japan, the number of known lepers in that country is 23,647. In the opinion of Dr. Ashmead, the actual number is in excess of 100,000. Not one province of the Empire is free from the disease. Such is the result in Japan of the contagion brought from China, yet, as has been pointed out, nearly all our Chinese immigrants come from two leprosy-infected provinces. To what extent the disease exists in the two provinces from which come the Chinese immigrants to this country is apparent from the following from a letter of Dr. Ashmead:

In the province of Fukien it (leprosy) is a veritable epidemic. Kwantung Province (Canton) is called the cradle of leprosy. In one leper asylum there are 800 lepers, and in the other over 1,000. In a leper village just outside of Canton there are 650 lepers. Several hundred lepers live on the boats near Canton. In Swatow, near the mouth of the Han River, which serves as the place of embarkation for the enormous cool trade to America, leprosy prevails extensively. Here there are villages called leper settlements, but there is no segregation, and the lepers are allowed to move about freely. * * *

In Hongkong, too, leprosy is prevalent. In two and one-half years 125 lepers presented themselves at the Alice Memorial Hospital. In seven years, from 1880 to 1886, there developed on the island of Hongkong, unknown to the British Government even, from 600 to 700 lepers.

That leprosy exists among the Chinese in California is well known, for cases have often been found. But how widely spread it is can not be ascertained, for the Chinaman afflicted conceals his disease from others as long as possible, and when discovered it is concealed from the American officials by the victim's friends. There is thus a constant menace to the health of the community in which is gathered a large number of Chinamen. The sources from which the disease may be imported are many and fertile enough to excite alarm even with the most rigorous of exclusion laws.

THE DANGER FROM CHINESE GUILDS.

Still another danger would be brought among us were the pro-Chinese advocates to have their way. Chinese population which had become entrenched, as it would after a time become, in American productive industry would introduce a trades-union system compared with which the American system is child's play. China is a nation in which the guild principle is a necessary part of the industrial system. It exists among the mercantile class as well as among the members of the handicrafts. John Fowler, United States consul at Ningpo, China, has this to say about working-men's guilds, in a report to the State Department:

They are very similar in functions and institutions to the trade unions of England. * * * In such guilds there is always a sum held in reserve to support members on a strike, for strikes are an institution not wholly belonging to the European or American continents.

In addition to the mercantile and handicraft guilds, there are the guilds which are formed by the people from the same town or province when living in other than the place of their birth. Such guilds follow the Chinaman everywhere, and when a considerable number of Chinese from the same district are gathered together there is founded a guild which binds them in a homogeneous whole for self-protection and aggressive action against those by whom they are surrounded, if such action can in any way promote their own interests. Consul Fowler says that in dealing with such guilds in China "consuls and diplomats have a very grave matter on their hands." So would the United States Government also have a grave matter on its hands were there permitted among us a large Chinese population, which would surely come were the bars of restriction lowered.

WHY THE CHINESE MENACE OUR INSTITUTIONS.

What has been said will give some idea of the character of the immigrants that we desire to exclude from our shores. It is easy to infer, from the facts given, something of the nature of the communities that would be formed were our pro-Chinese friends' desire complied with. The 25,000 Chinese in San Francisco offer an opportunity for learning how well fitted they are to enter upon the course of life that Americans have laid out for themselves. Bringing with them slavery, concubinage, prostitution, the opium vice, the disease of leprosy, the offensive and defensive organization of clans and guilds, the lowest standard of living known, and a detestation of the people among whom they live and with whom they will not even leave their bones when dead, they form a community within a community, and there live the Chinese life.

They have their terrorists' societies, their laws and customs, enforced with the barbarity which characterizes such enforcement in China, and they yield only outward obedience to the law of the land. They make use of our courts, by means of false witnesses, to reach with punishment some offender against themselves, and by the same means prevent justice from being done in cases in which they are a party. They are rigidly organized to evade all laws bearing hard upon them, and the organization is so perfect that evasion is not difficult. They herd together by thousands in small space, caring nothing for shelter beyond the four walls and roof, and creating a district of dirt and filth where once were cleanliness and beauty. Within the dark and smoky rookeries where they dwell they open dens for the demoralization of the white youths who surround them. They neither build nor repair, beautify nor cleanse, and their quarter reverts to the conditions found in the densely crowded cities of China. In such a sink, is it to be wondered at that nothing American can find a place; that no idea born of our civilization can find a lodgment; that the most prominent result is crime? Although the Chinese are only 3 per cent of the population of the State, they furnish 4 per cent of the criminals under sentence in the prisons of the State.

CRIME AMONG THE CHINESE.

These figures were furnished me by the wardens of our respective prisons, taken from the records of the prisons, and they can not truthfully be gainsaid. Although the Chinese form only 4 per cent of the inmates of the prisons, those charged with murder form 15 per cent of those under sentence on this charge. Whereas in the prisons there are 781 white prisoners under sentence for crimes, less than burglary, there are only 3 Chinese; all the rest, 84 in number, being under sentence for crimes ranging from murder to attempted burglary. The Chinese criminal, therefore, is seen to be one who commits the greatest of the crimes punishable by law, murder standing at the head of the list, which shows what little regard they have for human life. Attacks on life number 46 out of a total of 87 convictions. Fifty-three per cent of the Chinese in our State prisons are convicted either of murder or of attempts to kill. Robbery and burglary furnish the remainder of the crimes for which Chinese are convicted. From this showing it is easy to judge of the state of society in a Chinese community in this country. Life is held cheap, and is taken without compunction and for the slightest cause. It is as valueless among the Chinese in America as it is in China.

CHINESE SHOULD BE EXCLUDED FROM THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the honorable Senator a question? The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAPP in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from California whether he is willing to impose the evils which he has so graphically described on the Philippine Islands?

Mr. PERKINS. Most certainly not; and for that reason I shall be glad to join with my honorable and learned friend the distinguished statesman from Massachusetts in urging the Philippine Commission to pass the most stringent laws keeping out this class of Chinese highbinders from the Philippine Islands.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, this bill absolutely excludes the coming of Chinese from the Philippine Islands.

Mr. HOAR. I was asking the Senator from California what he advised.

Mr. PERKINS. I am full of good advice, Mr. President, and certainly we need no such characters as the highbinders. I have not much respect for the Malays as a class—I have been shipmate with them in my younger days—but still I think they are an improvement on the Chinese.

INSANITY AMONG CHINESE CAUSED BY OPIUM.

The report of the general superintendent of State hospitals in California shows that there are nearly 200 insane Chinamen in the State institutions, and here is to be found one of the results of the Chinaman's predominant vice—opium smoking. I am told the Chinese acquired that habit from the British or Anglo-Saxons, who taught them how to smoke and use opium. As the Good Book tells us that the iniquity of the fathers shall be visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation, I do not know but the British are receiving some punishment for it now in South Africa.

The superintendent says that the use of opium cuts a considerable figure in these cases. The proportion of Chinese insane is 43 per 10,000 Chinese inhabitants, while white insane patients are at the rate of only 37 per 10,000 of white population. That is a large percentage for the whites; but it will not appear so large when you bear in mind the cosmopolitan character of the people in the city of San Francisco, where 70 different dialects are spoken, and that every country and nation in the world is represented in California—many who have been disappointed elsewhere coming there in pursuit of wealth, and becoming broken down in health have become insane—with that large percentage of insane white people, yet the Chinese outnumber them by some 10 or 15 per cent. The increased proportion of insane among Chinese is due to the use of opium. The Chinese criminals and insane Chinese are supported by the taxpayers of California, as in not a single instance has it been possible to collect from their relatives or friends anything for their maintenance in the State institutions.

OUR CIVILIZATION AT STAKE.

Such is the character of the communities that are formed in this country by immigrants from China. They are subversive of every idea on which our own civilization is based, and are a menace of which notice must be taken in time and effectual safeguards erected and constantly maintained.

The little Republic of Nicaragua was wise in time, for it early saw the danger impending and took measures to avert it. In October, 1897, the Nicaraguan Government issued a decree which absolutely prohibits Chinese going into Nicaragua. The reasons for this action are set forth by United States Consul Thomas O'Hara, who wrote to the State Department in 1899 on this subject. There were no Chinese on that coast previous to 1886, but those who arrived in the next ten years made it clearly apparent that they would, if their numbers increased, be a serious injury to the country.

It is true—

that the working of the mines by the Chinese does not add materially to the wealth and prosperity of the country. They construct neither buildings, highways, nor railways. They are satisfied with bare roofs. They are willing to work years for a few pounds of gold, and they have no use for modern machinery or improvements. Their wants are simple and do not increase when their earnings increase. They patronize Chinese stores exclusively, and the gold found by Chinese miners, whether exchanged for supplies or retained by themselves, eventually goes to China.

HOW OUR CANADIAN NEIGHBORS DEAL WITH CHINESE.

Canada and British Columbia, our neighbors bordering on the north, several years ago enacted much more stringent laws relating to the immigration of Chinese than our present restriction law. No vessel is permitted to bring into that country more than 1 Chinese for every 100 tons register of the vessel; and, in addition, the vessel must pay the Government $100 head tax for every Chinese that is permitted to land. It is now proposed to raise this tax to $500, as appears from the following telegram from Ottawa:

Mongols menace industrial peace, say the immigration commissioners—Canadian officials report in favor of Chinese exclusion by raising the per capita tax to $500.—Ottawa, Ontario, February 27.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It has not been done, so far as the Senator knows, has it?

Mr. PERKINS. Well, I will give you the benefit of what a statesman says ought to be done. If for any reason one of the houses of the Canadian parliament has not passed such an act, then they have an opportunity of redeeming themselves. The telegram continues:

The Chinese report presented to parliament to-day covers over 800 pages of typewriting. The conclusion which the commissioners arrive at is that Chinese retard white immigrants, who would make good citizens and settlers. It is said that the presence of Chinese is dangerous to the industrial peace of the community where they reside. They carry away to their own country all their earnings, and spend little or nothing in Canada. In the opinion of the commissioners it is impossible for the province of British Columbia to take its place and part in the Dominion unless its population is free from any taint of servile labor and is imbued with a sense of duties and responsibilities appertaining to citizenship.

I know that is the sentiment of my friend from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I simply asked the Senator a question for the purpose of information. I wanted to know whether or not such an act as that had been passed by the Dominion parliament. I am very anxious to know.

Mr. PERKINS. I am unable to answer that question. I understood the Senator to say that such an act had not been passed. I beg the Senator's pardon.

The telegram further says:

The commissioners approve of the views of the legislature of British Columbia as to the grave injury that would follow an influx of Chinese laborers.

Then follows the findings of the commission. Messrs. Clute and Foley favored an immediate raising of the per capita tax to $500, and Mr. Munn thought a trial for two years at $300 at first would be best, then raising it to $500.

I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that I know the present law providing for a head tax of $100 on every Chinaman brought into Canada is in force. Whether or not this measure is in force or not, I am unable to say.

NO BENEFIT TO THE COUNTRY FROM CHINESE CAPITAL.

That none of the earnings of the Chinese in this country are invested here is well known. All the savings of these shrewd money-makers go eventually to China. No benefit accrues to our own country from the capital amassed by our Chinese residents. That the business to which they give rise is great is made manifest by the records of the port of San Francisco alone. In a communication to the Industrial Commission's special agent, the late Hon. John P. Jackson, collector of customs of San Francisco, stated that of $603,644 collected in customs duties at that port in October, 1899, Chinese paid $175,836, considerably more than one-fourth of the whole. In November, out of $508,560 collected, Chinese paid $156,787.

These two months—

He said—

are not at all peculiar, but are noted as the latest evidences of the business. I have before me a long list of Chinese merchants who pay annually customs duties running from $10,000 to $200,000 each, four of them paying over $100,000 annually, and two firms contributing yearly between $150,000 and $300,000 to the Government coffers.

Mr. QUARLES. Where was that?

Mr. PERKINS. It was in San Francisco, and relates to the duties which are paid by Chinese in that city. Yet you will seek in vain in San Francisco for material evidences in the shape of buildings or improvements of any kind which would be conspicuous were such a large import business carried on by men of our own civilization. San Francisco, the State of California, and no State in the Union gain anything from this very large Chinese trade. Its profits and the other great profits that it represents find their way to China, and by so much is our city the loser.

CHINESE MERCHANTS AND THE EXCLUSION LAW.

This brings prominently forward the bearing of the proposed law on the class of Chinese merchants. Objection is made that the definition of merchant, set forth in the bill, is too stringent. But upon consideration I do not think it will be found to be so. It is perfectly clear that the great business transacted by the Chinese firms in San Francisco precludes the possibility of a considerable portion of the Chinese population being engaged in trade. In other words, a very small proportion of our Chinese can be merchants, for their business necessitates customers, who must be earners of wages, and as they do business with Chinese exclusively these wage-earners must be Chinese. It is therefore evident that the bulk of our Chinese population—probably 90 per cent—are wage-earners engaged in industrial pursuits.

When, therefore, we find more than 10 or 15 per cent of those applying for admission to the United States claiming that they are merchants we may know that something is radically wrong. And that something is radically wrong is evidenced by the returns of the Chinese bureau at San Francisco giving the number of Chinese applying for admission to the United States. These returns show that from July 1, 1897, to July 1, 1898, of 3,806 applying for admission, 1,193 claimed to be merchants or other exemptions, or nearly one-third of the whole number, which includes children and women. This will be found to be about the proportion from year to year. Now, it will be recognized as true that it does not require 1,200 merchants to supply 2,600 laborers. The proportion of 26 merchants to 3,800 laborers would be nearer the true proportion, and the inference is clear that, with very few exceptions, the Chinese applying for admission are not and will not become merchants, but will join that great army of wage-earners on whom the merchants live. The merchants themselves are interested in keeping the ranks of this army full, and there is ground for belief that they assist coolies in entering the United States as business men for the sake of maintaining the demand for the wares in which they deal.

HOW THE EXCLUSION LAW IS EVADED.

On this point Mr. J. D. Putnam, Chinese inspector at Los Angeles, in a communication to the Industrial Commission, says:

They usually come as one of two classes. Of the first class, I believe the greater number claim to be native-born Americans. Second, those presenting themselves with merchants' papers (which papers they seem to have no difficulty in procuring white men to certify to as Chinese well known to them as merchants). There is not one white man in ten who has made the exclusion act a special study or who knows what constitutes a Chinese merchant. When they wish to procure a signer, merchants will introduce to such person a Chinese whom they state is a partner and a member of their company and who they claim is the party for whom such signer is to certify. After the signer of a certificate sees his name upon said certificate, upon its being returned for investigation, the result universally is that he is ready to make a statement to the inspector to the effect that the photograph represents some party well known to him. Should he state the contrary a Chinese lawyer will prepare an affidavit and present it to him, which he usually signs. Then the attorney presents the sworn evidence as rebuttal to the inspector's report. The inspector not being authorized to administer an oath (which I believe is an error), he is without power.

There is not one out of ten Chinese styling themselves as merchants, and so registered, who are genuine merchants except in name, as many a store or firm claims to have from $10,000 to $15,000 capital, and as having a list filed in the custom-house of from 5 to 15 partners, whose stock could be removed at one time in a single express wagon, and usually one or two men found about the store, the balance cooking or gardening or running gambling rooms until just before they wish to visit China, and still they have no trouble in procuring signers to their papers as being bona fide merchants. An example should be made of signers of such certificates by bringing them before the grand jury.

DEFINITION OF MERCHANT CAN NOT BE TOO STRICT.

I think it plain, therefore, that the law should leave no possible loophole through which coolies can enter the United States as merchants. The definition of a merchant can not be too strict or too rigorously applied. Doubtless many will remember the scandal that was occasioned in San Francisco several years ago through the laxity in this respect. It was noticed that there was a very large immigration of Chinese, and investigation showed that they were landed as merchants. As time passed, it was also noticed that the number of merchants coming by each steamer constantly increased. It began to look as though there would soon be as large an immigration of Chinamen as before the passage of the exclusion law. An investigation was made. The landing papers were found to be apparently correct. They were made out according to requirements and vouched for the mercantile character of the bearers. But a visit to the dock where the next steamer from China came in gave evidence of widespread fraud. The so-called merchants were seen, even by the least experienced, to be only coolies. They came herded between decks like cattle, bearing with them their baggage in the well-known basket, with bamboo pole, used by street peddlers and carriers. They came dirty and ill clothed, with faces of the type seen only among the coolies, and were of that class of intelligence found only among them. Yet they were landed as merchants, students, or travelers, and no genuine Chinese merchant protested.

An investigation followed, and corruption of the worst kind was unearthed. By collusion between officials in California and agents in China the needed certificates were procured and issued by thousands to cool laborers, who found easy access to the United States. Money for bribes and to carry out the plans of the conspiracy was found in abundance, and a rich harvest was reaped for a very long time. But the exposure came and the guilty ones were punished, and since then there has not been put in operation such a bold and barefaced attempt to evade the law. But that it is evaded in a similar way, but without collusion on the part of Government officials, is as certain now as it was then, and it is this evasion that the definition of "merchant" in the present bill is designed to prevent.

THE TRUE MERCHANT NOT INCONVENIENCED.

No one is more willing than I to discriminate between the true Chinese scholar and merchant and the cool laborer. Between them is a vast gulf, broad and deep, which the cooly can never pass. But the educated and cultivated Chinamen in America are few in number. When he appears at the gang plank of a China steamer he can be readily recognized. He is a man keen and intelligent, with more or less knowledge of affairs, and, when he can escape somewhat from his habitual distrust of Americans, pleasant to meet. The definition of "merchant" in this bill can not affect him. He can easily fulfill all the requirements of the law. So, too, can the student or traveler. It is not against these classes that the definitions complained of are aimed, but against the cooly who masquerades under those designations and fraudulently enters this country to take his place among the Asiatic competitors of the American workman.

The field for competition which the Chinese find in this country is vast—so vast and so profitable that without restrictions it would be filled to overflowing with Asiatic labor. The profits are so large as not only to tempt voluntary emigration, but has given rise to an immense business in importing cooly or slave labor, through which individuals and organizations make fortunes easily and quickly. The Chinese in America possess numerous well-organized associations, some of the mercantile and some of the criminal classes, which are interested in the importation of cooly labor, and it is the plans laid and executed by them that make the enforcement of an exclusion law a matter of the greatest difficulty. The interests of the organizations, of the merchants, and of all the influential classes lie in the entrance of large numbers of the servile class, for they bargain for their employment, collect the wages, pay the laborer what they choose, and keep the balance for profit.

EVEN THE BONES OF DEAD CHINAMEN SENT HOME.

The organizations, like the well-known Six Chinese Companies, have general oversight of the coolies, much after the manner of the owner of slaves, being interested in their health and physical well-being that their utility as wage-earners may not be lessened. And when the cooly dies in this country they see to it, as a part of the agreement entered into, that his bones are sent back to China to be placed beside those of his ancestors. Scarcely a steamer leaves a Pacific port for China that does not have on board hundreds of boxes containing the carefully-cleaned bones of deceased Chinamen. Through the laws and regulations of the Six Chinese Companies, and the terrorism of the highbinder societies, the Chinese in America are under a strict government, but one based on Asiatic and not American ideas. And the coolies, subject to a slavery which is real and not imaginary, are brought over here to compete with American labor, bringing with them standards of life and morals which can only tend to drag the American workman from the high level he has attained.

CONTRAST BETWEEN TWO CIVILIZATIONS.

Personal freedom, the home, education, Christian ideals, respect for law and order are found on one side, and on the other the traffic in human flesh, domestic life which renders a home impossible, a desire for only that knowledge which may be at once coined into dollars, a contempt for our religion as new, novel, and without substantial basis, and no idea of the meaning of law other than a regulation to be evaded by cunning or by bribery. The attack of the cooly laborer is not alone on wages, but on the very foundation of the American workman's prosperity and well-being. The contest is between two social systems utterly opposed to each other. Customs and ideas that are the growth of three or four thousand years, which have made the Chinese a people of the strongest vitality, of fewest wants, and least aspiration for improvement, will inevitably conquer, as they have always conquered, in a strife with a civilization of a high plane. A scale of wages like that given by Consul-General Jernigan at Shanghai—blacksmith, 13 cents a day; brass worker, 16 cents; barber, 3 cents; bootmaker, 10 cents; bricklayer, 10 cents; cabinetmaker, 11 cents; tailor, 10 cents; cotton-mill machinist, 11 to 23 cents, and cotton-factory hands, 18 cents—shows the margin which the cooly laborer has in a competition with American labor.

CHINA COULD OVERWHELM US.

With such a margin and such a heredity as he has, there can be no doubt as to his ability to overwhelm the laborer of any nation having modern civilization. Unrestricted immigration would open this country to 400,000,000 or 450,000,000 people of the character described. With more extended knowledge of the opportunities offered here, is it to be imagined that thousands would not come to our shores where single individuals now come? Is there a belief that we could prevent them from attaining the commanding position occupied by them in the Philippines, in Singapore, and wherever they exist in large numbers? The Chinaman fully realizes all of his advantages, including that of numbers. A Chinese student during the Boxer troubles, in reply to my assertion that if the members of the legations were murdered we should punish China severely, said:

You can do nothing. Suppose you kill 50,000,000 Chinamen: we will have left more than five times the whole population of the United States.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. PERKINS. It is no interruption at all.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Something has been said as to the inability to secure American seamen for the trans-Pacific service. I should like to have the Senator, if he can, give us some information upon that subject.

CHINESE IN THE MERCANTILE MARINE.

Mr. PERKINS. The best answer I think I can make to the question is that there are a number of steamship companies running vessels out of San Francisco employing a large number of sailors, firemen, and coal passers which do not employ Chinese. I have myself for thirty years been connected with a steamship company employing from 1,500 to 3,000 men most of the time, and we never have employed, to my knowledge, a Chinaman during that period.

As to vessels running into the Tropics, all of the United States transports now engaged in the service, plying between San Francisco and the Orient, the Philippine Islands and Japan, have white coal passers, white stokers, and white firemen. Their whole crews are Caucasian.

The ships plying to Central America from San Francisco and to the coast of Central America and Mexico, and German ships running down the coast of Central America to South America, all employ white firemen and white coal passers and white deckhands (sailors). The ships of the Oceanic Steamship Company, one of which runs every two weeks to New Zealand and Australia, run to Honolulu, across the equator, and go down through the Tropics. They all employ white men. The steamers running from San Francisco to Samoa, to the Fiji Islands, also employ all white men. It is the same way with vessels of our Navy.

WHY THERE SHOULD BE NO CHINESE ON OUR MERCHANT VESSELS.

In this connection I will state that when there was under consideration the bill to promote American shipping interests I voted for the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] prohibiting the employment of Chinese upon those ships. I did it for the reason that I supported the bill, believing it would build up and resuscitate and again give to us the carrying of our own trade under the Stars and Stripes as we formerly had it. I believe the correct way to do that is to encourage and make honorable and elevate the dignity of the life of a sailor, and it requires some courage to be a good sailor man. It requires a good deal of courage to be a fireman or a coal passer, to go down into the hold of one of these ships and there toil for four, six, or eight hours during the twenty-four, or longer.

I have always had quite as much admiration for the stoker who went down into the hold of the Merrimac and went into that famous blockade at Santiago as I did for the man who stood upon the bridge, and it was on my motion that Congress kindly recognized their bravery by giving each one of them a medal.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to interrogate the Senator from California.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator from California whether it is true or not that there is a sufficient supply of white sailors upon the Pacific slope and whether white sailors can stand the Chinese climate in pursuit of their occupation?

Mr. PERKINS. The same question has been asked by the senior Senator from Indiana, and I have been answering it in part.

PLENTY OF WHITE MEN TO MAN OUR SHIPS.

Mr. PENROSE. I beg pardon. I was not in the Chamber at the time.

Mr. PERKINS. I have been credibly informed by the Firemen's Union of San Francisco that there are plenty of men to fill those positions. The question is one of wages. I believe it is worth something to be an American citizen. It is worth a great deal. It is worth a great deal to have the right to fly the Stars and Stripes at the peak, and our ships plying out of San Francisco or New York to any foreign port have certain rights and privileges which foreign ships do not have. An American ship sailing from San Francisco may carry freight and passengers to Honolulu, to the Philippine Islands, and then continue on her voyage to Japan and China.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator says it is worth something to be an American citizen. Will the Senator kindly inform the Senator what proportion of the sailors whom he says are of Caucasian blood on the ships that sail from San Francisco are American citizens?

Mr. PERKINS. In the coasting trade it amounts to about 60 per cent.

Mr. GALLINGER. How about the foreign trade?

Mr. PERKINS. In the foreign trade it is less than 50 per cent—some forty-odd per cent.

Mr. GALLINGER. So that half of these men are not American citizens?

CHARACTER OF CAUCASIAN SAILORS.

Mr. PERKINS. They are all capable of becoming American citizens. Many of them come here who are not citizens. They have their families in San Francisco or at Oakland, across the bay. They have their little cottages, many of them building them perhaps on the installment plan, and when they come back after a voyage to Australia or to the Orient they are greeted by their children and their wives. There they see the schoolhouse that they pay their taxes to build, and there they see the little church where their wives and children worship. Those people become good American citizens in time. If they are not American citizens their children surely are, and they have the pride and honor that attach to it.

I took a deep interest when I first came to Congress in ascertaining the percentage of foreigners in our Navy. I found there was some 65 per cent of foreigners in the Navy. I had several interviews with the Secretary of the Navy and the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, and with their assistance we have established several naval training stations. We now have a number of vessels shipping landsmen, who go off on training voyages. The result is that we have reduced the percentage of foreigners in the Navy from 65 to 41 or 42 per cent. We have been making splendid progress in the last five or ten years, and I hope and expect to live to see the American flag flying on ships as I once saw it, when a sailor boy sailing out of your own native State, Mr. President [Mr. FRYE in the chair], which we all honor and love. Then the boy in the forecabin looked forward to the time when he would walk the deck and command the ship, and was just as sure of reaching it as daylight follows darkness, if competent.

THE AMERICAN SAILOR SHOULD BE ENCOURAGED.

So I believe in building up the American merchant marine. I believe the best way is to encourage the American sailor. I would make his an honorable vocation, as it is, and when it is only a question of dollars and cents, I would give the preference all the time to the American citizen, or the one who is capable of becoming an American citizen, sooner than I would to a Chinaman, who would work for a pittance and take that pittance to China. When we employ Americans their wages are left here in our own home, and what is better than all, then you have a man who is protected as an American citizen, and who has a pride in American citizenship, and if he is not an American citizen his children will be citizens after him.

I believe I shall vote for this clause in the pending bill. While there are not the same reasons for it perhaps that existed as to the ship-subsidy bill, yet I would rather err on the side of right than to go off on the side of wrong. Therefore I shall vote that Chinese shall not be employed. Of course if ship owners prefer Lascars and Javanese and Malays and Japs or people from the South Sea Islands and other islands instead of American citizens or those capable of becoming American citizens, they can hire them probably much cheaper.

NONE LIKE THE AMERICAN SAILOR.

Mr. PATTERSON. I may suggest in this connection that in a communication from the War Department it is declared that the Filipinos constitute the best sailors of all the Asiatic people.

Mr. PERKINS. I have been shipmates with them. I would rather have one Yankee than seventeen Malays.

Mr. SPOONER. They may have improved.

Mr. PERKINS. Probably, since they have come in under our protection. There is a chance for them to do it. The Japs make pretty good sailors.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just on this point, if the Senator will permit me, if he will examine the testimony of Governor Taft he will observe that Governor Taft says the Chinese as laborers are very much superior to the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands. I know nothing about their qualities as seamen.

Mr. PERKINS. I think there is no doubt about that. All that the Chinese laborers are good for is to work, and they do work and work faithfully. I believe in dignifying and elevating labor in this country. My friend from New Hampshire, as well as I, never had a house to live in, because our ancestors did not leave it to us, until we worked to earn it. I believe in giving everyone in this country an opportunity to work. I believe in dignifying and elevating labor, whether it be by muscle or brain. I want everyone to have that opportunity. I am intensely American, like my friend the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course no utterance of mine would suggest that I am not equally a friend of the laboring man—

Mr. PERKINS. I know.

Mr. GALLINGER. Although we may differ as to the provisions and details of this bill, as I think we do.

Mr. PERKINS. My friend and I are in perfect accord. We belong to that party which struck down slavery, for one reason because it was lowering and pulling down labor. We believed we should honor and dignify and elevate labor in this country.

A few minutes more, and I will not trespass further. I should like to dwell upon the religious phase of this question for a few moments.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator reaches that point, I should like to propound one inquiry.

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly. If I can not answer it I will do as the judges do sometimes—I will take it under advisement.

MR. GALLINGER ASKS A QUESTION.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right. It will be a wise answer when the Senator gets around to it, if he does that, because he is a wise man.

I have listened with great interest to the Senator's speech. He is a faithful representative of his own people and an able representative of his State. He believes every word he says, and yet some of us in the far East, concerning whom it has been suggested in this debate that we are governed by impulse, benevolence, and that sort of thing, are considerably puzzled to know why this intense desire to make the laws relating to Chinese exclusion so much more stringent than they are now, when the Twelfth Census shows that in the Senator's own State the Chinese inhabitants have decreased about 40 per cent in the last ten years. It does not seem to us, looking at it over the distance that we have to look to discover the Pacific slope, as though there is any real imperative necessity for further exclusive laws when the Chinese population is decreasing in the country at a rapid rate and when it decreased in the Senator's own State 40 per cent during the last ten years. Perhaps the Senator can give me some light on that point.

Mr. PERKINS. I think perhaps I may answer it offhand by stating that many of the Chinese who land in San Francisco, as I stated in my preliminary remarks, find their way to Massachusetts and to some of the other New England States, and I notice that the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is now more earnest and more zealous in his advocacy of this bill than those of us from the Pacific coast. A few years since he said, "It will not do. It is contrary to the spirit of our institutions." And so I think perhaps they are feeling the baleful influence under which we have been suffering for so many years.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator does not answer my question at all. If the Chinese have drifted from California to Massachusetts, and if possibly a few of them have managed to creep into New Hampshire, the further fact still remains that the Chinese population in the country, the entire country, including Massachusetts and New Hampshire and California, has decreased—I think somewhere in the vicinity of 28 or 30 per cent in the last decade—according to the census reports.

Mr. PERKINS. They have left leprosy with us, and we are trying to eradicate the evil of that.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, when the leprosy question comes up for discussion I shall want to say a few words about it. We have recently had an investigation regarding leprosy in this country which throws a flood of light on that proposition, and I think will not bear out all of the Senator's statements which have been made to-day concerning that matter.

Mr. PERKINS. I referred to the conversation with the Chinese student, who, when it was suggested that we would certainly punish our friends in China if they did harm to our legation, shrugged his shoulders and said, "Ugh! You can do nothing. Suppose you kill 50,000,000 Chinamen. We yet have left five times more than the population of the United States." They have 400,000,000 or 450,000,000 people. They are somewhere, and many of them, we think, have been smuggled into the United States and, like cases of leprosy, have been concealed.

HOPELESSNESS OF IMBUING CHINESE WITH CHRISTIAN CIVILIZATION.

The "Boxer" uprising is an evidence of the hopelessness of the effort to Christianize the Chinese. That recent event was undoubtedly, as has been claimed, due in a great measure to the efforts of missionaries to imbue the Chinese with Christian ideas. The ultimate result was murder, violence, and a blow to Christian teaching in China which it will take long to recover from. But what has such teaching accomplished? Christianity has not been taught in China for the comparatively few years of which we have a record. Yet (and I think this item will surprise my honorable friend the historian from Massachusetts, because I have never heard him speak of it, and I have heard him make many scholarly dissertations) Christianity is known to have been introduced in China as far back as A. D. 781.

Mr. HOAR. Do I understand that the Senator from California disapproves of the attempt to Christianize the Chinese?

Mr. PERKINS. It has not been a success.

Mr. HOAR. That is unquestionable. Does the Senator disapprove of the attempt to introduce Christianity into China or not?

Mr. PERKINS. No, Mr. President; I would carry it to them.

Mr. HOAR. Then I do not think the Senator would want to pursue that line much further.

Mr. PERKINS. But if the Senator will permit me, I am going to give you the authority of a Presbyterian.

Christianity is known to have been introduced as far back as A. D. 781, the date of a monument in Northwestern China commemorating the event. It was taught one thousand three hundred years ago, and there is reason to believe very extensively, yet not a vestige of those teachings remains. It was taught by Roman Catholics in the seventeenth century and since that day, but with what results? Rev. Joseph Edkins, a missionary, and thoroughly familiar with China and the Chinese, published in 1859 a book on the "Religious Condition of the Chinese." My reading is not very extensive, but I incidentally came across this book. He says:

The Protestant converts are still not many more than 1,000. They are the remaining fruits of sixteen years' labor by about 100 missionaries at the five treaty ports.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. Looking at the population statistics as to the Protestant Christians in China, I find that the number is something over 100,000.

Mr. PERKINS. There must have been many of them Boxers.

Mr. QUAY. No; they were fighting the Boxers.

Mr. HOAR. I understand from the Senator that the whole attempt to introduce Christianity into China from the eighth century has been a miserable failure, and the effect of the recent attempt has been the Boxer rising. Then what reason has the Senator for saying that he still approves of the attempt to introduce Christianity into China?

Mr. PERKINS. Because all the teachings of Christianity are right; and if Christians would live up to their teachings, if they would only practice what they preach—

Mr. HOAR. My friend says, as I understand him, that it has been an utter failure and has produced the Boxer insurrection. The reason why the Senator approves the attempt to Christianize them is, I understand, because we do not live up to our teachings.

Mr. PERKINS. The Chinese fail to live up to our teachings, and yet they do claim to live up to some of the teachings of Confucius. Confucius was in a measure a second Moses.

Mr. HOAR. I did not ask my friend about the teachings of Confucius.

THE FRUITS OF SIXTEEN YEARS' LABOR.

Mr. PERKINS. Dr. Joseph Edkins was a missionary and thoroughly familiar with China and the Chinese. I am giving you the historical view. I am not the historian, but it is Dr. Edkins, the author of the "Religious Conditions of the Chinese," published in 1859, who says:

The Protestant converts are still not many more than 1,000. They are the remaining fruits of sixteen years' labor by about a hundred missionaries at the five treaty ports.

Dr. Edkins believed in missions and had hope of the future, yet that was his estimate of the results of sixteen years' work. These figures would undoubtedly be cut down 99 per cent if he could have read the hearts of his so-called converts. He acknowledges that the Chinese came to the schools for the purpose of picking up scientific and other knowledge that they could make use of, but evidently had faith that they also imbibed Christianity. And this in face of the fact, as he records, that Christianity compels them to give up the strongest of all their strong religious customs—the worship of ancestors. It is safe to say that the idea on which this worship is based is as ineradicable as are the physical characteristics of the race. In the face of that, to suppose that Chinese will accept Christianity and give up the most vital of their ethical ideas is to suppose the impossible.

The Chinese have been in this country for half a century, surrounded on all sides by Christian influences, attending Sabbath schools in shoals, and most earnestly attentive to the teachings of the good-looking young ladies having charge of the classes; but the most ardent pro-Chinese American can not say that Christianity has made much progress.

PROFESSING CHRISTIANITY FOR BUSINESS REASONS.

Rev. Dr. Condit, who represents the Presbyterian missions, states that, out of the total Chinese population of the United States, estimated by those having to do with Chinese at 300,000, there are only 1,600 Christian Chinese of all denominations, and only 4,000 Christianized from the beginning of their immigration, which would represent that number of conversions among two or three millions of individuals. Remembering that of the number given above a very considerable proportion make pretense of being Christians for purely business reasons and that the sincerity of the rest may be questioned on the safe assumption that the Chinaman's hereditary religious convictions can not be discarded with the ease which sanguine Christians seem to think possible, it may be well to quote the remark of Dr. Edkins, who wrote:

It must be long before Christianity can become well understood by them. Missionary efforts must be greatly increased and the agency of the press must be well worked before they will be freed from many wild misconceptions. * * * But we shall have to continue our efforts for many years yet without seeing our religion victorious unless God should interfere in unexpected providential occurrences to answer the prayer of His servants.

This is the language of an eminent divine, who consecrated his life in trying to elevate those people.

Such is the Chinaman whom unrestricted immigration would place side by side with the American laborer in nearly every branch of industry. His cheap labor might at first benefit individual employers or corporations, but to make it a part of our industrial system would be detrimental to the public interests, subversive of our civilization, and stop absolutely the wheels of progress. It is therefore our duty—I look upon it almost as a religious duty—to so legislate that the greatest good to the greatest number will result, and that the institutions of our country, of which we are so boastful and on which our safety is based, may be preserved unchanged for those who come after us.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 13031) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PENROSE. To the Committee on Immigration. The pending bill came from that committee, and I suppose the same reference should be made of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania move the same reference? The Chair is of the opinion that both bills should have gone to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. FORAKER and Mr. HOAR. What is the motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House Chinese-exclusion bill has been laid before the Senate and the motion is that it be referred to the Committee on Immigration. The Chair referred it to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PENROSE. It would be a very extraordinary proceeding, after the Committee on Immigration had the bill as it was introduced in the Senate and spent months taking testimony aggregating several hundred pages, then to have the House bill referred to another committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is for the Senate to decide. Mr. GALLINGER. It would give the subject a much wider scope of inquiry.

Mr. TELLER. The bill clearly should go to the Committee on Immigration; not to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Immigration.

The motion was agreed to.

COMPILATION ON CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. FORAKER. I have here a compilation entitled "The Laws, Treaty, and Regulations relating to the Exclusion of Chinese." I understand that the print of it is exhausted, and I move that it be printed as a document, so that we may have it to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the hour is somewhat late. There are a few pension bills on the Calendar. It would take about fifteen minutes to clear the Calendar, and at least ten Senators have been to me in the last few days asking that I request unanimous consent to have those bills considered. I now make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension cases. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The first pension bill on the Calendar will be proceeded with.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 8, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read, corrected, and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HOWELL, indefinitely, on account of illness.

TEMPORARY ELECTRIC PERMITS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I have sent to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution which the Clerk will report.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 173) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to issue certain temporary permits was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to permit electric-light wires to be laid in existing conduits and house connections between such conduits and Convention Hall, to be made for the purpose of supplying additional light for the Masonic Fair and Exposition of 1902: Provided, That all such wires shall be removed on or before May 10, 1902.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF GAME IN ALASKA.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11535) for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the wanton destruction of wild game animals or wild birds, the destruction of nests and eggs of such birds, or the killing of any wild bird other than a game bird, or wild game animal, for the purposes of shipment from the district of Alaska, is hereby prohibited. The term "game animals" shall include deer, moose, caribou, sheep, mountain goats, bears, sea lions, and walrus. The term "game birds" shall include water fowl, commonly known as ducks, geese, brant, and swans; shore birds, commonly known as plover, snipe, and curlew, and the several species of grouse and ptarmigan. Nothing in this act shall effect any law now in force in the Territory relating to the fur seal, sea otter, or any fur-bearing animal other than bears and sea lions, or prevent the killing of any game animal or bird for food or clothing by native Indians or Eskimo; but the game animals or birds so killed shall not be shipped or sold.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person in Alaska to kill any wild game animals or wild birds except during the seasons hereinafter provided: Large brown bears, from April 15 to June 30, both inclusive; moose, caribou, walrus, and sea lions, from September 1 to October 31, both inclusive; deer, sheep, and mountain goats, from September 1 to December 15, both inclusive; grouse, ptarmigan, shore birds, and water fowl, from September 1 to December 15, both inclusive: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized whenever he shall deem it necessary for the preservation of game animals or birds to make and publish rules and regulations which shall modify the close seasons hereinbefore established, or place further restrictions and limitations on the killing of such animals or birds in any given locality, or to prohibit killing entirely for a period not exceeding five years in such locality.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person at any time to kill any females or yearlings of moose, caribou, deer, or sheep, or for any one person to kill in any one year more than the number specified of each of the following game animals: Two moose, walrus, or sea lions; four caribou, sheep, goats, or large brown bears; eight deer; or to kill or have in possession in any one day more than 10 grouse or ptarmigan, or 25 shore birds or waterfowl.

That it shall be unlawful for any person at any time to hunt with hounds, to use a shotgun larger than No. 10 gauge, or any gun other than that which can be fired from the shoulder, or to use steam launches or any boats other than those propelled by oars or paddles in the pursuit of game animals or birds. And the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make and publish such further restrictions as he may deem necessary to prevent undue destruction of wild game animals or wild birds.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons at any time to sell or offer for sale any hides, skins, or heads of any game animals in the Territory of Alaska, or to sell, or offer for sale therein, any game animals or birds, or parts thereof, during the time when the killing of said animals or birds is prohibited: Provided, That it shall be lawful for dealers having in possession any game animals or birds legally killed during the open season to dispose of the same within fifteen days after the close of said season.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation or their officers or agents to deliver to any common carrier, or for the owner, agent, or master of any vessel, or for any other person to receive for shipment out of the said district, any hides or carcasses of caribou, deer, or parts thereof, or any wild birds or parts thereof: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the collection of specimens for scientific purposes, the capture or shipment of live animals and birds for exhibition or propagation, or the export from the said district of specimens and trophies, under such restrictions and limitations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe and publish.

SEC. 6. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act or any of the regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall forfeit to the United States all game or birds in his possession, and all guns, traps, nets, or boats used in killing or capturing said game or birds, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $200 or imprisonment not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That upon conviction for the second or any subsequent offense there may be imposed in addition a fine of $50 for any violation of sections 1 and 3, and a fine of $100 for a violation of section 2. It is hereby made the duty of all marshals and deputy marshals, collectors or deputy collectors of customs appointed for the Territory of Alaska, and all officers of revenue cutters to assist in the enforcement of this act. Any marshal or deputy marshal may arrest without warrant any person found violating any of the provisions of this act or any of the regulations herein provided, and may seize any game, birds, or hides, and any traps, nets, guns, boats, or other paraphernalia used in the capture of such game or birds and found in the possession of said person, and any collector or deputy collector of customs, or any person authorized in writing by a marshal, shall have the power above provided to arrest persons found violating this act or said regulations and seize said property without warrant, to keep and deliver the same to a marshal or a deputy marshal. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon request of the Secretary of Agriculture, to aid in carrying out the provisions of this act.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on the Territories, were read:

First. Amend the title of the bill by striking out the words "the district of," so that the title of the bill will read as follows: "A bill for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes."

Second. In line 14, page 1, strike out the words "the Territory" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Alaska."

Third. On page 2, line 3, after the word "Eskimo," insert the words "or by miners, explorers, or travelers on a journey when in need of food."

Fourth. On page 2, in line 18, after the word "established," insert the words "or provide different close seasons for different parts of Alaska."

Fifth. On page 3, in line 16, after the word "animals," insert the words "or game birds," and in said line 16 strike out the words "the Territory of," so that the same will read "of any game animals or game birds in Alaska;" also, on page 3, line 17, insert the word "game" before the word "birds;" also, on page 3, in line 20, insert the word "game" before the word "birds."

Sixth. On page 4, in line 1, after the word "shipment," insert the words "or have in possession with intent to ship;" also, on page 4, in lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "the said district" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Alaska;" also, on page 4, in line 2, after the word "deer," insert the words "moose, mountain sheep, or mountain goat," so that that portion of said section will read as follows: "For any other person to receive for shipment, or have in possession with intent to ship out of Alaska, any hides or carcasses of caribou, deer, moose, mountain sheep, or mountain goat;" also, on page 4, line 7, strike out the words "the said district" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Alaska."

Seventh. On page 4, in line 16, after the word "punished," insert the words "for each offense;" also, on page 4, in lines 24 and 25, strike out the words "the Territory of."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MADDOX. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear the gentleman's explanation of the bill. I tried to hear it read, but although I did my best I could not hear it, and I have no idea that anybody else heard it. I want to know what is in the bill. If it is all right I shall have no objection to it.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House I think there will be no opposition to this bill. It is a bill that has attracted considerable attention, owing to the peculiar situation in Alaska. When we enacted the code of Alaska in the last session, either by accident or oversight the laws then in existence there, which were the laws of Oregon, extended there by act of Congress, were all repealed, including the game laws. The game laws of Oregon were up to that time the game laws of Alaska.

The Alaska code contained nothing on the subject, and the result was that last season, after the repeal of the Oregon code, the slaughter of the game, the subsistence of the Indians in Alaska, went on in an unparalleled manner. It has been reported to me that one Englishman upon an island along the coast killed 150 walrus in one day, leaving them to rot, not even carrying off the tusks, killing them simply for the delight of slaughter. It appears that at some points in Alaska 6,000 and 8,000 and even 10,000 deer skins have been shipped from a single port. The Indians have been induced by the offer of 30 or 40 cents a skin to kill the deer merely for the hides, thus destroying their own future subsistence. This situation calls upon Congress for early relief. Legislation earlier in the session would not have been availing, because if the law were enacted it could not, on account of the ice, get to Alaska until about the latter part of May or probably the early part of June, in the Nome region, the uppermost part of Alaska; but it is important that this bill should go through in time to be the law of the land during the coming season.

The bill has been drawn with considerable care. It was gone over by the Territorial Committee and parties interested in the subject from the Department of Agriculture, and it is the unanimous report of the committee with the amendments which have been read to the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. May I interrupt the gentleman? The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. LACEY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Indiana. Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] that I concur in the statements made by the gentleman from Iowa. The Committee on the Territories gave the most careful attention to this bill. We found no objection to it. On the contrary, we found a very great necessity for the enactment of this legislation, which was concurred in unanimously by the members of the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. LACEY. It is a question of the starvation of the Indians, Mr. Speaker, unless some relief is granted there, and the dark chapter of the destruction of our large and small game in other parts of the United States is now being repeated in Alaska. This step, if taken now, will be timely, and it ought to be taken at an early date.

Mr. KLEBERG rose.

Mr. LACEY. I yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. KLEBERG. I just wish to say that this bill has the full support of the entire committee, Democrats and Republicans. There is no division upon it. I think it is a necessary measure to protect the game of Alaska, and I indorse everything my friend from Iowa has said about it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDOX. Just one word—

Mr. LACEY. I would like to yield to the gentleman from Washington a moment before I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, the bill at present before this House for consideration is a bill to provide a game law for Alaska. This bill was introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], whose name is associated with other legislation on the subject of game which has heretofore passed the American Congress. The name of that gentleman at the masthead of this bill is one of the very best indorsements it could possibly have.

I regard this pending bill as one of the very best bills that have come before this House for its consideration since I have been a member of this body. Within the very short time allotted to us for the presentation of this matter to the House to-day it will be impossible for me to discuss this bill and its provisions at length. I will say to you, however, that this bill has been as carefully prepared as any bill that ever came forth from any committee of this House. The bill when introduced was referred to the Committee on Territories. The bill in its present form has the unanimous indorsement of every member of that committee. The committee having this bill in charge called before them gentlemen who had been in Alaska and who were reasonably familiar with the conditions prevailing there with especial reference to wild game.

Thus we have had before us testimony showing the actual conditions existing in that region, and this bill has not been framed to cover any theoretical condition, but to meet the actual situation that exists in Alaska to-day.

In the first place, as was stated by the gentleman from Iowa, before the Alaska Code (which we enacted two years ago) went into force in Alaska—before that time, the general laws of the State of Oregon were in force in Alaska. That portion of the laws of Oregon relating to game was therefore in force in Alaska.

When we came to prepare the code for Alaska it was stated that the conditions in Alaska were so vastly different from those in Oregon that a game law for Alaska based on the Oregon law would not come anywhere near fitting the situation in Alaska. The committee in charge of the revision therefore omitted these laws altogether, and no provisions for the protection or preservation of game were inserted in the Alaska Code. So that the situation, in a nutshell, is briefly this: Alaska lost the old game law which she formerly had and got nothing in its place.

I state here and now—and I wish to give all the emphasis to it that this occasion will permit—that Alaska constitutes the only strip of land on this continent over which the American flag floats that does not have any law for the protection of game birds and game animals. It is the only bit of territory between the Rio Grande and the North Pole that has been so neglected by the law-making power that they have not even a game law.

This fact in itself shows the necessity for some kind of legislation on this subject.

As is well known to all of you, I live in the State of Washington, the State of this Union that is closest to Alaska, and when I say the State that is closest to Alaska I mean it not only in a geographical sense, but commercially and industrially and financially, and in every other sense there exists a bond of sympathy between Alaska and the State of Washington. They have no representative on this floor, and they expect the representatives of the State of Washington to speak for them and to demand protection for their interests. This I am both proud and happy to do.

Two years and a half ago I took a trip from the State of Washington throughout southeastern Alaska. I found out something of the game conditions there then. At every place our boat stopped—at Wrangell, at Juneau, at Skagway—some one would call my attention to the wanton slaughter of the wild game that was going on in that region. Among other game in that region the deer are found in abundance. The Indians can get 50 or 60 cents for a deer skin, and with the characteristic improvidence of his race he will kill a large number of deer whenever the opportunity occurs, take the skins and sell them, and leave the carcasses rotting on the ground. He is thereby destroying the food supply that in a few years he will need.

Now, this bill, among other provisions, absolutely prohibits the sale or offering for sale at any time the skins of game animals, and also makes it unlawful to ship hides out of Alaska. You will observe that when we take away from the white trader the right to traffic in these skins the Indian will lose his market for them. When the Indian loses his incentive to kill the deer he will cease the slaughter. This is only one of the many points of this game bill. I have not time to discuss them all. I shall put into the RECORD as a part of my remarks the report on this bill, which I assisted in preparing.

I trust we have no opposition to the passage of this much-needed and worthy measure.

The report above referred to is as follows:

[House Report No. 951, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

GAME LAW IN ALASKA.

The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11535) for the protection of game in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes, having had said bill under consideration, report the same with the following amendments:

First. Amend the title of the bill by striking out the words "the district of," so that the title of the bill will read as follows: "A bill for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes."

Second. In line 14, page 1, strike out the words "the Territory" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Alaska."

Third. On page 2, line 3, after the word "Eskimo," insert the words "or by miners, explorers, or travelers on a journey when in need of food."

Fourth. On page 2, in line 18, after the word "established," insert the words "or provide different close seasons for different parts of Alaska."

Fifth. On page 3, in line 16, after the word "animals," insert the words "or game birds," and in said line 16 strike out the words "the Territory of," so that the same will read "of any game animals or game birds in Alaska;" also, on page 3, line 17, insert the word "game" before the word "birds;" also, on page 3, in line 20, insert the word "game" before the word "birds."

Sixth. On page 4, in line 1, after the word "shipment," insert the words "or have in possession with intent to ship;" also, on page 4, in lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "the said district" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Alaska;" also, on page 4, in line 2, after the word "deer," insert the words "moose, mountain sheep, or mountain goat," so that that portion of said section will read as follows: "For any other person to receive for shipment, or have in possession with intent to ship out of Alaska, any hides or carcasses of caribou, deer, moose, mountain sheep, or mountain goat;" also, on page 4, line 7, strike out the words "the said district" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Alaska."

Seventh. On page 4, in line 16, after the word "punished," insert the words "for each offense;" also, on page 4, in lines 24 and 25, strike out the words "the Territory of."

And as above amended the committee recommend that the bill do pass. Some of the salient features of this bill are as follows:

Prohibits wanton destruction of game animals, game birds, nests, and eggs. Prohibits killing of any game animal or game bird except in specified seasons.

Prohibits the killing of certain of the female game species at any time.

Prohibits the sale or offering for sale at any time of the skins and heads of game animals or birds.

Prohibits the sale of game animals or birds at any time save during the season when it is lawful to kill the same.

Prohibits the shipment out of Alaska of skins or carcasses of game animals or birds.

Provides that miners, campers, or travelers on a journey, in need of food, may at any time kill such game birds or animals as are necessary for food.

Provides that the Indians and Eskimo may at all times kill game animals or birds for their food or clothing.

Provides for punishment for the violation of its provisions by fine or imprisonment or both.

This bill has for its object the protection and preservation of the game birds and animals of Alaska. When the code for Alaska was enacted two years ago it embraced much of the preexisting laws, and also included many new features. Congress had formerly made the laws of the State of Oregon applicable to Alaska. The game laws of Oregon were therefore in force, and though not entirely adapted to the situation in Alaska, were found very useful. The committee in charge of the revision found the subject of game protection quite complicated owing to the great variety of conditions to be met, and therefore omitted these laws altogether, and left Alaska wholly without any statutory protection for the game within her borders.

As Alaska is the greatest wild game region now remaining in America, the misfortune of such a condition strongly appeals to Congress for a prompt remedy.

It is hardly possible that the bill should be perfect in all respects or meet all the requirements in Alaska. It must be remembered that to draw a game bill for so large a country is a vastly different and far more difficult matter than to draw such a bill for any single State or Territory of the Union. In any one of the States of the Union (even the largest of them) the scope of territory embraced is comparatively small, and the game conditions in all parts of the State are substantially similar. The drawing of a game bill for Alaska is equivalent to attempting in a single law to cover the New England, Atlantic, and Middle States, or like trying to make a single game bill broad enough in its provisions to cover all the country west of the Mississippi River to the summit of the Rocky Mountains.

Alaska comprises a vast stretch of territory, and in the different parts thereof are widely different seasons and varying conditions. It is manifestly very difficult, therefore, in the provisions of one bill to meet all these difficulties satisfactorily. We have attempted to meet them by vesting a large amount of power and discretion in the Secretary of Agriculture. The latter part of section 2 of the bill provides:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, whenever he shall deem it necessary for the preservation of game animals or birds, to make and publish rules and regulations which shall modify the close season for different parts of Alaska, or place further restrictions and limitations on the killing of such animals or birds in any given locality, or to prohibit killing entirely for a period not exceeding five years in such locality."

In any new mining country travelers and miners will kill game in season and out of it for the supply of their immediate wants; and they should be so authorized by law, so as not to be forced to violate the law. The amendment suggested by the committee to meet this necessity is substantially the same as that in force in the Northwest Territory of the Dominion of Canada, and which your committee are informed has operated successfully therein.

In this enlightened day, with the experience of the recent past before us, it needs no argument to show that the wanton and indiscriminate slaughter of game birds and fish should be curbed by law. The desolate woods and barren streams in other parts of the United States serve as a solemn warning as to the fate of these creatures in Alaska unless immediately protected by law.

It was indeed unfortunate that at this critical time, when Alaska is becoming settled, that a period of nearly two years should occur in which there should be no law whatever upon this subject, and the necessity of speedy relief is obvious.

The reports from that country are uniform that Congressional action should not be delayed.

The prohibition of game shipments from Alaska and the suppression of commerce in hides will do more to stop the indiscriminate destruction of animal life than any other enactment that can be devised.

Indians will wholly destroy their food supply for the trifling compensation that they receive for the skins of the victims. The slaughter of deer and other animals for the purpose of shipping the hides should be wholly suppressed.

Judge Melville C. Brown, judge of the United States district court of Alaska for the Juneau Division, writes the following letter on this subject:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,

FIRST DIVISION, DISTRICT OF ALASKA,

Juneau, Alaska, January 26, 1902.

MY DEAR BRECKONS: The slaughter of game in this country is becoming monstrous. It is said that no less than 15,000 deer hides were shipped out of southeast Alaska during last season. It is altogether probable that the slaughter of deer will be as great this winter. The result is self-evident; that within two or three years the game supply will be wholly exhausted and the natives left without food supply, and in order to live at all they will have to be subsisted by the Government.

The natives slaughter this game, not for food purposes, but to secure the price they obtain for the hides, which is a very trifling sum—some 40 cents on the average. Of course they use such portions of the animal for food as their immediate necessities demand, but it is safe to say that nine-tenths of the deer slaughtered are left upon the ground to rot. I am not personally cognizant of all these matters, but the whole question was before the grand jury a year ago this winter, and after diligent inquiry the grand jury reported upon the matter.

Some law should be passed by Congress at this session that will put an end to this indiscriminate slaughter of game. A game law not as stringent in terms as ours in Wyoming in many respects will answer every purpose here. And the one thing that will stop the indiscriminate slaughter is the prevention of the hides being shipped from the country or sold, and making it an offense against the law, with a severe penalty, for any vessel or other medium of transportation to receive such hides for shipment or to have them in their possession for such purpose, and punishing any transportation or shipment of hides either from the mainland or any of the islands of Alaska. This will tend to save the game, and eventually to save the Indians from starvation. Of course this law should apply to moose, elk, mountain goat, mountain sheep, etc., as well as to deer.

The mountains in this country rise out of the sea, as it were, from the islands as well as on the shore of the mainland, and run up to great heights. When the snow falls in winter the deer are driven down to the shores of the sea for subsistence, and the Indians are said to gather in a bunch of deer as high as 500 in number, and these are driven into the deep snow in some canyon and then the Indians kill them with clubs and wipe out the bunch of deer gathered in that way. It is easy to understand how rapidly they may be extinguished entirely by such methods.

Very sincerely, yours,

M. C. BROWN,
Judge United States District Court,
First Division, District of Alaska.

J. A. BRECKONS, Esq.,
Washington, D. C.

The grand jury of the United States district court of Alaska, assembled at Juneau, in resolutions adopted by them January 3, 1901, ask for the enactment of a game law for Alaska, and in their resolutions use the following language:

"Whereas it is within the knowledge of the grand jury duly impaneled for the December, 1900, term of the United States district court of Alaska, in and for division No. 1 thereof, and assembled from all parts of said division and being thoroughly conversant with existing conditions, that there has been and is a wanton and willful destruction of game in this district; that it is an acknowledged fact that thousands of deer are killed annually for their hide, which sells for the paltry sum of 40 cents, while their carcasses are left to decompose or be devoured by wild beasts. Congress has sadly neglected to make any provision for the protection of our game, the natural meat supply of the natives and of the miners and prospectors who are hundreds of miles from the markets of the district, prospecting and developing our great mineral resources: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That Congress be, and it is hereby, petitioned to insert in the Alaska criminal code the following game law:

"That any person or persons, corporation or corporations, offering for sale in, or any person or persons, corporation or corporations, or common carrier receiving for exportation from the district of Alaska the flesh of the deer, moose, caribou, elk, mountain sheep or goat, goose, brant, duck, grouse or ptarmigan, or the hides or horns of the deer, moose, caribou, elk, mountain sheep or goat, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment in the county jail not more than one year, or both.

"Each and every deputy United States marshal within said district shall be ex officio game warden for their respective districts, and shall receive as compensation for said service one-half of all fines collected by due process of law under this act."

"Unanimously adopted by the grand jury January 3, 1901.

The following letter from A. S. Dautrick, of Juneau, Alaska, is self-explanatory, not only of the situation, but also as to the feeling of the people of Alaska regarding this much-desired legislation:

JUNEAU, ALASKA, February 18, 1902.

MY DEAR CUSHMAN: You will remember that at various times we have talked about some sort of a game law for Alaska, and the last time you told me that you would look into the matter. I imagine, however, that a multitude of other things have prevented you. The slaughter of deer in the district is so outrageous that unless some law is passed the last territory for the sportsman will be played out. I think that you will agree with me that it should have some protection in the way of a game law. Please let me know whether you care to prepare such a bill or if you would prefer to have some one up here to do it and forward to you to have it introduced.

Yours, truly,

A. S. DAUTRICK.

HON. FRANCIS W. CUSHMAN, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The following documents from the Department of the Interior, the Attorney-General of the United States, and letter from Mr. Dall De Weese will also throw a great deal of light upon the situation in Alaska:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, February 1, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter from Mr. Dall De Weese, of Canon City, Colo., received by reference from the President, calling attention to the necessity for legislation looking to the protection of large game in Alaska, together with copy of a letter from the honorable the Attorney-General, to whose attention the matter was directed and at whose instance this communication is written.

Copies of Mr. De Weese's letter were transmitted to the Senate and House Committees on Territories, respectively, on the 15th ultimo.

In this connection attention is directed to the recommendation contained in the Report of the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899, a copy of which is herewith transmitted, submitting an amendment to the act of March 3, 1899, "To define and punish crimes in the district of Alaska," looking to the protection of deer in that Territory.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

HON. JOHN F. LACEY,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of January 16, 1902, inclosing a copy of a letter from Dall De Weese, of Canon City, Colo., to the President, dated December 1, 1901, and a copy of the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1899, all of which has reference to the protection of game in the Territory of Alaska.

I note with approval the suggestion in your report above referred to of an amendment of the criminal code of Alaska with a view to game preservation there, as also the suggestion of Mr. De Weese in the same direction. But I am not sufficiently familiar with the situation in Alaska to be able to express an opinion whether these are just those best suited to the conditions of that Territory, nor as to how far the natives there, who are to some extent dependent upon game for subsistence, should be included in the prohibition, nor whether other kinds of game than those mentioned in either suggestion should not be included.

At the request of Hon. JOHN F. LACEY, chairman of the House Committee on Public Lands, I recently gave him a statement of my views as to the power of Congress in this matter. And while that referred chiefly to the question of such power as to the public lands within the limits of a State, yet it also referred to the same question in the Territories. Perhaps it would be well to refer the communication of Mr. De Weese with this and a reference to the suggestions in your report to him, as I think he is much interested in the subject. And I suppose that many useful suggestions would be obtained from Governor Brady, of that Territory, not only as to how far the natives should be included in the prohibition, but also as to the kinds of game that should be protected, in what seasons of the year the prohibition should be operative, either as to all or some kinds of game, and whether it should not be operative the year round as to some kinds.

Respectfully,

P. C. KNOX, Attorney-General.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

PROTECT ALASKA GAME.

CANON CITY, COLO., December 1, 1901.

The PRESIDENT:

This is a subject that appeals to every "true-blue sportsman," every lover of animal life, and all those who see beauty in nature, embracing forests, plains, and mountains throughout our entire country, and while the woods, plains, and mountains are naturally beautiful, we all agree that they are much more grand and lifelike when the wild animals and birds are present. There are now several organizations doing work toward the preservation of wild animal and bird life. There is much yet for us to do. Resolve is to act; let us be up and at it.

For twenty years of my life I have taken my fall outing, embracing the greater part of North America. I have made trips in recent years to various parts of our mountains, where I hunted eighteen to twenty years ago, and it is appalling to note how rapidly the wild animals are disappearing. While I am but 49 years of age, I have seen in this short period the extermination of our buffalo. At the time of my first trip West there were millions. The antelope at that time were thousands—they are now reduced to dozens, here and there. There were also elk yet upon the plains—now there are none. There were bison in our mountains within 25 miles of the place in which I am writing.

I doubt if there are 20 wild bison now in the United States. I have seen thousands of deer in Montana, Idaho, Utah, Mexico, and Colorado, where these numbers are now, comparatively, reduced to one, three, five, and twenties. The "big horn" mountain sheep (Ovis montana) that were then hundreds are now reduced with comparative ratio to the rest.

When I was hunting in New Brunswick in 1896, I was told by good authority that these conditions were not quite so bad there and that the enforcement of their laws was the safeguard there as well as in Maine.

During my four seasons' hunting in Alaska, my observations from past experience foreshadowed that without stringent laws and their rigid enforcement the big game of Alaska is doomed to as rapid an extermination as it was upon the plains and mountains of Colorado. I will narrate one instance: When in the Kenai Mountains, Alaska, on the 23d day of August, 1897 (from my diary), Mr. Berg and myself, while sitting together on the mountain side, with the aid of a field glass, counted 500 wild white sheep (Ovis dalli), all within a radius of 6 to 8 miles, 10 here, 6 there, then 20 and 30 in another locality.

Can a true hunter or a lover of nature imagine a more beautiful sight? Look! Here and there were grand old towering mountains, all snow-capped, some furrowed with gaping canyons, some separated with a mighty glacier, others with a gradual slope carpeted with nutritious grass, upon which these beautiful denizens of the snowy mountains of the north loitered about in groups, either feeding or resting.

I was in these same mountains again in 1898, my wife accompanying me there in 1899. I wanted her to see what had at that time never before been a woman's pleasure. I was in these same mountains again this season (1901), and there is no question about the Ovis dalli decreasing in numbers; it is perceptible.

If mineral should be discovered in these mountains, and with no laws to protect this animal, they would be exterminated in a very short time. In 1899 when passing through a section where a so-called "sportsman" had been hunting, four carcasses were lying on one small hill, nothing having been touched, the heads of horns being too small and the work of skinning and preserving too great to suit his—I was going to say his "sport"-ship, but will make it his "devil"-ship.

In 1899 myself, wife, and party killed four sheep, two of which were killed by my wife. We could have killed a hundred. This season (1901) we killed but one, as we needed it for meat; also one bull caribou.

The natives are very destructive to sheep. I have seen them in parties of their own shoot sheep, and if it ran off wounded or fell over a low cliff they never went after it; "too much work; shoot more." When in my party I never allow a native to carry a gun. The conditions I have mentioned regarding sheep extermination the same will apply to moose and caribou.

Now, then, dear reader, if all I have said about this transformation of game from plenty to almost extermination is so perceptible in one man's short life, we all can see its finish in the course of a very few years, unless we act quick while there is yet time.

Alaska is a new country, and a good portion of it is uninhabitable for man, and in this respect it is thus more suitable for game; and there is less excuse for its being slaughtered on account of the country not being desirable for the use of "home seekers." I am sorry to say it, although it is true, that, where the climatic conditions are favorable for the advancement of civilization and the "tiller" of the soil, just so sure is the doom of game in that land—remote and inaccessible localities and game preserves that extend to the winter feeding grounds excepted.

It is not necessary that big game be slaughtered to furnish the "meat stuff" in Alaska, for where man can go a pack train can go also; then it is made possible for the wagons, then railroads. Neither is it necessary that game be slaughtered for the native food supply, yet let them kill what they will actually use; and if our Government would thoroughly instruct the missionaries and priests of Alaska to intercede with the natives on behalf of the game, much good could be done. Teach them the wrong in killing the female and the young of any and all animals. I have talked this with natives in my camp and noticed that it was hard for them to conceive it, yet by constant teaching it will have its effect. I believe that some such game laws as I hereafter mention would be effective in Alaska if enforced.

My twenty-seven years of experience in hunting has convinced me that the "market-meat hunter" is the most destructive to the big game. Where mining localities are remote from railroads or steamship transportation, "meat stuff" is correspondingly expensive; hence if game about the "meat hunter" finds a profitable business and he is always on hand.

Make the law and enforce it whereby it is a penal offense coupled with a fine of $100 for each offense where a party or parties offer for sale or barter the flesh of any game animal or bird at any spot or place in Alaskan territory, the same law to apply to any and every company and individual attempting to ship or transport game flesh of any kind out of the Territory.

Make a nonresident license law, requiring every sportsman going to hunt and hunting in Alaska to pay $99 for that privilege, and that this sum allows him to take out of the Territory only one specimen of each species killed by him. The same law to provide a license fee of $100, which would give the sportsman or hunter taking out that license the right to kill and transport two specimens of each species of animal killed by him, and that he is not allowed to take out more than this quota. The money thus paid to the district commissioners, who might be the nearest postmaster where the hunting is done, and this money to be used, first, for the prosecution of a person or persons violating this law, and any surplus that might accumulate in one year over $300, that surplus to go to the native school fund of that district.

Make a law that gives an open season only on game from August 15 to November 1, with a fine of $100 for its violation. This law should apply to natives also as well as nonresidents except where the animal is shot absolutely for immediate food necessity.

Make a law that prohibits sportsmen or other persons from employing natives or other men for killing big game animals or birds, for in doing so most of the meat is wasted and the heads shipped and sold.

Make a law prohibiting the killing of the big brown bear (Ursus middendorffi) on Kadiak Island for a period of five years. This would in no way be an injustice to the natives, as this island now contains so few of these animals that hunting them is no longer profitable, and neither do the natives depend on this for support.

Negotiations should be commenced with Great Britain to implore them to pass some such laws that would coincide with ours that would govern that part of the Yukon or British territory (Columbia) that joins Alaska.

I know full well what objections will be made to such laws by "fur traders," hide and head hunters, but it is right that the grand old bull moose and bull caribou or the great old ram, "Ovis dalli," be shot down by the native, paid for so doing by the so-called sportsmen, and only the head taken from the carcass and that shipped out and sold? Isay, is it right that this should be permitted for the gain of a few individuals at the expense of the lives of all the big game of that country, as well as the lovers of nature and the true-blue sportsmen not yet born, all to whom we are responsible?

Let us all act now and use our influence to have some measures appertaining hereto properly brought before the coming session of Congress with the earnest appeal for their enactment.

I have talked several times with Hon. J. G. Brady, governor of Alaska, regarding this subject, and he urged me to formulate some practical measure and he would give it his support.

Yours, fraternally,

DALL DE WEESE,
Canon City, Colo.

The following extract is taken from the last annual report of Governor John Brady, of Alaska, to the honorable Secretary of the Interior.

No language could state more clearly or forcibly than the report of the governor, not only that a game law is needed for Alaska, but that said game law should contain the provisions which are contained in this bill.

[Report of Governor Brady, of Alaska, on game.]

GAME LAW.

Congress should enact a game law for this district. The large game, like the moose, caribou, and common deer, need protection. The wanton slaughter of deer has been carried on to a great extent in southeast Alaska by the natives. In the winter and spring, when the snow is heavy upon the mountains and even to the beach, these animals seek the shores of the island. They become weak, and when run into a snowdrift can be killed with a club.

A single native has been known to bring in as many as 150 skins of animals which he has killed in this fashion. He makes no attempt to use the meat. All he wants is the skin to sell at the store. This does not bring him very much, for it is a winter skin, and therefore not desirable by the dealer. This all can be corrected by prohibiting the exportation of deer hides from Alaska. The native will have no incentive to kill deer simply for their hides. The hides of those which he kills for himself or to sell he can make use of for his own moccasins and other articles of clothing which he uses.

Mr. LACEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to protect and to some extent preserve the game birds and wild animals in the district of Alaska. It is a most commendable measure, and should pass without opposition. I am enthusiastically in favor of the passage of this bill, and request the indulgence of this House for a few moments to plead its urgent necessity. I have carefully examined the provisions of this proposed game law, and in my opinion they meet the immediate requirements of the case and will prevent the ruthless extermination of wild animals in Alaska. It is high time we acted in this matter. The cruel and unnecessary slaughter of wild game animals in Alaska at the present time, and for the past few years, has been as wanton as it has been enormous; and if the wholesale slaughter is not stopped by a drastic game law the birds and wild animals will soon be exterminated. Nearly all of them are killed for their skins. I hold in my hand and will read a letter just received, dated March 14, 1903, from a gentleman I know well—a shipping agent at Wrangell, Alaska. This letter is as follows:

McKINNON WARE AND FORWARDING COMPANY,
Wrangell, Alaska, March 14, 1903.

DEAR SIR: As it has been some time since I last wrote you, I will now pen you a few lines pertaining to this part of the country.

Our weather has been very mild this winter and snow very scarce, as it has snowed only three times from November 23, 1901, to the last of the present month, and the snow then being about 2 inches deep. At the present time we have the largest fall of snow of the season, it being 5 inches deep, but it has started to rain and I suppose within the next forty-eight hours it will be a thing of the past.

Now, this last fall of snow on the ground at present brings up the usual slaughter of our deer, and knowing you to be a true sportsman (from hunting with you in the past three seasons) I know you will certainly help to give us Alaskan people a game law that will protect the deer of our district.

You know from being on the ground that there are thousands of deer slaughtered in this district simply for their hides. I myself have shipped about 4,000 deer skins within the last six months, and I honestly think that at least 3,500 of the deer killed were simply killed for the hides, the carcasses being left on the ground to rot or eaten by wolves.

The amount of deer I refer to is simply a few that come to Wrangell for shipment, all killed within a radius of 50 miles of our town. Just think how many there must be slaughtered in the thousands of square miles of our northern country of Alaska.

Now, if you can help get us a game law, you will have the eternal friendship of all good law-abiding citizens of this far-away Alaska.

If you can drop me a line and suggest any way in which I can promote this game law, I wish you would kindly do so, as I would willingly give up any reasonable amount of time and money to get the law that we need so badly in order to protect the deer of our country.

Hoping to hear from you in regard to the law to protect the deer,

I remain, sincerely, yours,

J. F. COLLINS.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Speaker, that letter is true. It speaks for itself, and the story it tells justifies the immediate passage of this bill. I have spent some time in Alaska, and I know whereof I speak when I say that much additional testimony of a like character could be adduced if necessary. In fact, the citizens generally in Alaska are anxious that the wild game there should be protected by a stringent law immediately enacted by Congress. Judge M. C. Brown, of the United States district court for Alaska, tersely sums up the situation at the present time in a recent letter to a friend, from which I now quote. The learned judge says:

Some law should be passed by Congress at this session that will put an end to this indiscriminate slaughter of game. And the one thing that will stop the indiscriminate slaughter is the prevention of the hides being shipped from the country or sold, and making it an offense against the law, with a severe penalty, for any vessel or other medium of transportation to receive such hides for shipment or to have them in their possession for such purpose, and punishing any transportation or shipment of hides either from the mainland or any of the islands of Alaska. This will tend to save the game, and eventually to save the Indians from starvation. Of course this law should apply to moose, elk, mountain goat, mountain sheep, etc., as well as to deer.

The mountains in this country rise out of the sea, as it were, from the islands as well as on the shore of the mainland, and run up to great heights. When the snow falls in winter the deer are driven down to the shores of the sea for subsistence, and the Indians are said to gather in a bunch of deer as high as 500 in number, and these are driven into the deep snow in some canyon and then the Indians kill them with clubs and wipe out the bunch of deer gathered in that way. It is easy to understand how rapidly they may be extinguished entirely by such methods.

When the code for Alaska was enacted two years ago, it embraced much of the preexisting laws, and also included many new features. Congress had formerly made the laws of the State of Oregon applicable to Alaska. The game laws of Oregon were therefore in force, and though not entirely adapted to the situation in Alaska were found very useful. The committee in charge of the revision found the subject of game protection quite complicated, owing to the great variety of conditions to be met, and therefore omitted these laws altogether and left Alaska wholly without any statutory protection. As Alaska is the greatest wild-game region now remaining in America the misfortune of such a condition strongly appeals to Congress for prompt action.

The indiscriminate slaughter of wild game birds and animals in Alaska is monstrous and most deplorable. The wanton slaughter of this game by the natives—not for food purposes, but for the small sum they can get for the skins—is a crying shame. Last summer I was told in Alaska that nine-tenths of the large game, like moose, elk, caribou, sheep, goats, and deer, when slaughtered by the vandal natives, are stripped of their skins and the carcasses left on the ground to rot. It is said, and I have no reason to doubt it, that more than 20,000 of these skins were shipped from southeastern Alaska last year. What a cruel shame it all is. If Congress does not stop it now, these animals in Alaska will soon be as scarce as the buffalo. Year in and year out this frightful slaughter goes on, but I believe it has been carried on to a greater extent in southeastern Alaska by the natives than in any other part of the district. In the winter and spring, when the snow is heavy on the mountains and even to the beach, these animals seek the shores of the islands. They become weak, and when run into a snowdrift can be killed with a club. A single native has been known to bring in as many as 150 skins of animals which he has killed in this fashion. He makes no attempt to use the meat. All he wants is the skin to sell at the store. This does not bring him very much, for it is a winter skin and therefore not very desirable by the dealer. This all can be corrected by prohibiting the exportation of deer hides from Alaska. The native will have no incentive then to kill deer simply for their hides. The hides of those which he kills for himself he can make use of for his own moccasins and other articles of clothing.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the following, which I deem very important. The grand jury of the United States district court of Alaska, assembled at Juneau January 3, 1901, ask for the enactment of a game law for Alaska, and in their resolutions use the following language:

Whereas it is within the knowledge of the grand jury impaneled for the December, 1900, term of the United States district court of Alaska, in and for division No. 1 thereof, and assembled from all parts of said division and being thoroughly conversant with existing conditions, that there has been and is a wanton and willful destruction of game in this district; that it is an acknowledged fact that thousands of deer are killed annually for their hide, which sells for the paltry sum of 40 cents, while their carcasses are left to decompose or be devoured by wild beasts. Congress has sadly neglected to make any provision for the protection of our game, the natural meat supply of the natives and of the miners and prospectors who are hundreds of miles from the markets of the district, prospecting and developing our great mineral resources. Therefore be it

Resolved, That Congress be, and it is hereby, petitioned to insert in the Alaska criminal code the following game law:

"That any person or persons, corporation or corporations, offering for sale in, or any person or persons, corporation or corporations, or common carrier receiving for exportation from the district of Alaska the flesh of the deer, moose, caribou, elk, mountain sheep or goat, goose, brant, duck, grouse or ptarmigan, or the hides or horns of the deer, moose, caribou, elk, mountain sheep or goat, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment in the county jail not more than one year, or both.

"Each and every deputy United States marshal within said district shall be ex officio game warden for their respective districts, and shall receive as compensation for said service one-half of all fines collected by due process of law under this act."

Unanimously adopted by the grand jury January 3, 1901.

W. M. M. EBNER, Foreman.
C. D. GARFIELD, Secretary.

Mr. Ebner, the foreman of that grand jury, is a distinguished citizen of Juneau, whom I have had the pleasure of meeting and talking with regarding this subject.

This bill amply protects the Indian natives and allows them at all times to kill wild birds and animals for food and clothing. It also provides that miners, campers, and travelers on a journey in need of food may at any time kill such game birds and animals as may be necessary for food. No true sportsman can take exception to the provisions of this bill, and every lover of wild animals will, I feel confident, commend its enactment into law. The highest consideration for the natives, whose chief food supply will be exhausted when the game is exterminated, and the imperative duty of each member of this House charged with the responsibility of protecting our wild animals and game birds demand, in my judgment, the immediate and unanimous passage of this wise, farseeing, and commendable measure. [Applause.]

Mr. LACEY. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MADDOX. I just want to say, Mr. Speaker, that when this bill was being read I discovered that it was a very long bill, and tried my best to hear what was in it, but could not. I noticed that it provided for fines and forfeitures and one thing and another, and so far as I was concerned I was satisfied after the gentleman from Iowa had made his statement, and I have no objection.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in connection with the bill that the committee to which it was referred has carefully investigated the matter. I simply ask the privilege of inserting in my remarks the report of the judge of the district where the game is—

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent has not yet been given. After that matter is settled, the Chair will recognize the gentleman. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Now the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. LACEY. I ask to be recognized, and I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa yields to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. LLOYD. I simply want to ask unanimous consent that I may insert as a part of my remarks the statement of the judge of the judicial district in Alaska, and also the report of the grand jury of that district, which took this matter into consideration and reported the fact that there were vast hordes of animals there that were being destroyed, and that it was necessary that Congress take immediate action in order to protect the game of that district.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to include in his remarks the matters just referred to by him. Without objection, this privilege will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. LLOYD. The statement of the judge was as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
FIRST DIVISION, DISTRICT OF ALASKA,
Juneau, Alaska, January 26, 1902.

MY DEAR BRECKONS: The slaughter of game in this country is becoming monstrous. It is said that no less than 15,000 deer hides were shipped out of southeast Alaska during last season. It is altogether probable that the slaughter of deer will be as great this winter. The result is self-evident—that within two or three years the game supply will be wholly exhausted and the natives left without food supply, and in order to live at all they will have to be subsisted by the Government.

The natives slaughter this game, not for food purposes, but to secure the price they obtain for the hides, which is a very trifling sum—some 40 cents on the average. Of course they use such portions of the animal for food as their immediate necessities demand, but it is safe to say that nine-tenths of the deer slaughtered are left upon the ground to rot. I am not personally cognizant of all these matters, but the whole question was before the grand jury a year ago this winter, and after diligent inquiry the grand jury reported upon the matter.

Some law should be passed by Congress at this session that will put an end to this indiscriminate slaughter of game. A game law not as stringent in terms as ours in Wyoming in many respects will answer every purpose here. And the one thing that will stop the indiscriminate slaughter is the prevention of the hides being shipped from the country or sold, and making it an offense against the law, with a severe penalty, for any vessel or other medium of transportation to receive such hides for shipment or to have them in their possession for such purpose, and punishing any transportation or shipment of hides either from the mainland or any of the islands of Alaska. First Division, District of Alaska.

J. A. BRECKONS, Esq., Washington, D. C.

The grand jury report referred to is as follows:

The grand jury of the United States district court of Alaska, assembled at Juneau, in resolutions adopted by them January 3, 1901, ask for the enactment of a game law for Alaska, and in their resolutions use the following language:

"Whereas it is within the knowledge of the grand jury duly impaneled for the December, 1900, term of the United States district court of Alaska, in and for division No. 1 thereof, and assembled from all parts of said division and being thoroughly conversant with existing conditions, that there has been and is a wanton and willful destruction of game in this district; that it is an acknowledged fact that thousands of deer are killed annually for their hide, which sells for the paltry sum of 40 cents, while their carcasses are left to decompose or be devoured by wild beasts. Congress had sadly neglected to make any provision for the protection of our game, the natural meat supply of the natives and of the miners and prospectors who are hundreds of miles from the markets of the district, prospecting and developing our great mineral resources: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That Congress be, and it is hereby, petitioned to insert in the Alaska criminal code the following game law:

"That any person or persons, corporation or corporations, offering for sale in, or any person or persons, corporation or corporations, or common carrier, receiving for exportation from, the district of Alaska the flesh of the deer, moose, caribou, elk, mountain sheep or goat, goose, brant, duck, grouse or ptarmigan, or the hides or horns of the deer, moose, caribou, elk, mountain sheep or goat, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment in the county jail not more than one year, or both.

"Each and every deputy United States marshal within said district shall be ex officio game warden for their respective districts, and shall receive as compensation for said service one-half of all fines collected by due process of law under this act."

"Unanimously adopted by the grand jury January 3, 1901.

"WM. M. EBNER, Foreman.
"C. D. GARFIELD, Secretary."

Mr. LACEY. I ask to insert with my remarks the report of the committee. The report is exhausted, and this will be better than to have a reprint.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the report of the committee upon the bill now before the House. Without objection, this authority will be given.

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11535) for the protection of game in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes, having had said bill under consideration, report the same with the following amendments:

First. Amend the title of the bill by striking out the words "the district of," so that the title of the bill will read as follows: "A bill for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes."

Second. In line 14, page 1, strike out the words "the Territory" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Alaska."

Third. On page 2, line 3, after the word "Eskimo," insert the words "or by miners, explorers, or travelers on a journey when in need of food."

Fourth. On page 2, in line 18, after the word "established," insert the words "or provide different close seasons for different parts of Alaska."

Fifth. On page 3, in line 16, after the word "animals," insert the words "or game birds," and in said line 16 strike out the words "the Territory of," so that the same will read "of any game animals or game birds in Alaska;" also, on page 3, line 17, insert the word "game" before the word "birds;" also, on page 3, in line 20, insert the word "game" before the word "birds."

Sixth. On page 4, in line 1, after the word "shipment," insert the words "or have in possession with intent to ship;" also, on page 4, in lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "the said district" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Alaska;" also, on page 4, in line 2, after the word "deer," insert the words "moose, mountain sheep, or mountain goat," so that that portion of said section will read as follows: "For any other person to receive for shipment, or have in possession with intent to ship out of Alaska, any hides or carcasses of caribou, deer, moose, mountain sheep, or mountain goat;" also, on page 4, line 7, strike out the words "the said district" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Alaska."

Seventh. On page 4, in line 16, after the word "punished," insert the words "for each offense;" also, on page 4, in lines 24 and 25, strike out the words "the Territory of."

And as above amended the committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Some of the salient features of this bill are as follows:

Prohibits wanton destruction of game animals, game birds, nests, and eggs.

Prohibits killing of any game animal or game bird except in specified seasons.

Prohibits the killing of certain of the female game species at any time.

Prohibits the sale or offering for sale at any time of the skins and heads of game animals or birds.

Prohibits the sale of game animals or birds at any time save during the season when it is lawful to kill the same.

Prohibits the shipment out of Alaska of skins or carcasses of game animals or birds.

Provides that miners, campers, or travelers on a journey, in need of food, may at any time kill such game birds or animals as are necessary for food.

Provides that the Indians and Eskimo may at all time kill game animals or birds for their food or clothing.

Provides for punishment for the violation of its provisions by fine or imprisonment, or both.

This bill has for its object the protection and preservation of the game birds and animals of Alaska. When the code for Alaska was enacted two years ago it embraced much of the preexisting laws, and also included many new features. Congress had formerly made the laws of the State of Oregon applicable to Alaska. The game laws of Oregon were therefore in force, and though not entirely adapted to the situation in Alaska, were found very useful. The committee in charge of the revision found the subject of game protection quite complicated owing to the great variety of conditions to be met, and therefore omitted these laws altogether, and left Alaska wholly without any statutory protection for the game within her borders.

As Alaska is the greatest wild-game region now remaining in America, the misfortune of such a condition strongly appeals to Congress for a prompt remedy.

It is hardly possible that the bill should be perfect in all respects or meet all the requirements in Alaska. It must be remembered that to draw a game bill for so large a country is a vastly different and far more difficult matter than to draw such a bill for any single State or Territory of the Union. In any one of the States of the Union (even the largest of them) the scope of territory embraced is comparatively small, and the game conditions in all parts of the State are substantially similar. The drawing of a game bill for Alaska is equivalent to attempting in a single law to cover the New England, Atlantic, and Middle States, or like trying to make a single game bill broad enough in its provisions to cover all the country west of the Mississippi River to the summit of the Rocky Mountains.

Alaska comprises a vast stretch of territory, and in the different parts thereof are widely different seasons and varying conditions. It is manifestly very difficult, therefore, in the provisions of one bill to meet all these difficulties satisfactorily. We have attempted to meet them by vesting a large amount of power and discretion in the Secretary of Agriculture. The latter part of section 2 of the bill provides:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, whenever he shall deem it necessary for the preservation of game animals or birds, to make and publish rules and regulations which shall modify the close season for different parts of Alaska, or place further restrictions and limitations on the killing of such animals or birds in any given locality, or to prohibit killing entirely for a period not exceeding five years in such locality."

In any new mining country travelers and miners will kill game in season and out of it for the supply of their immediate wants; and they should be so authorized by law, so as not to be forced to violate the law. The amendment suggested by the committee to meet this necessity is substantially the same as that in force in the Northwest Territory of the Dominion of Canada, and which your committee are informed has operated successfully therein.

In this enlightened day, with the experience of the recent past before us, it needs no argument to show that the wanton and indiscriminate slaughter of game birds and fish should be curbed by law. The desolate woods and barren streams in other parts of the United States serve as a solemn warning as to the fate of these creatures in Alaska unless immediately protected by law.

It was indeed unfortunate that at this critical time, when Alaska is becoming settled, that a period of nearly two years should occur in which there should be no law whatever upon this subject, and the necessity of speedy relief is obvious.

The reports from that country are uniform that Congressional action should not be delayed.

The prohibition of game shipments from Alaska and the suppression of commerce in hides will do more to stop the indiscriminate destruction of animal life than any other enactment that can be devised.

Indians will wholly destroy their food supply for the trifling compensation that they receive for the skins of their victims. The slaughter of deer and other animals for the purpose of shipping the hides should be wholly suppressed.

Judge Melville C. Brown, judge of the United States district court of Alaska for the Juneau division, writes the following letter on this subject:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
FIRST DIVISION, DISTRICT OF ALASKA,
Juneau, Alaska, January 26, 1902.

MY DEAR BRECKONS: The slaughter of game in this country is becoming monstrous. It is said that no less than 15,000 deer hides were shipped out of southeast Alaska during last season. It is altogether probable that the slaughter of deer will be as great this winter. The result is self-evident; that within two or three years the game supply will be wholly exhausted and the natives left without food supply, and in order to live at all they will have to be subsisted by the Government.

The natives slaughter this game, not for food purposes, but to secure the price they obtain for the hides, which is a very trifling sum—some 40 cents on the average. Of course they use such portions of the animal for food as their immediate necessities demand, but it is safe to say that nine-tenths of the deer slaughtered are left upon the ground to rot. I am not personally cognizant of all these matters, but the whole question was before the grand jury a year ago this winter, and after diligent inquiry the grand jury reported upon the matter.

Some law should be passed by Congress at this session that will put an end to this indiscriminate slaughter of game. A game law, not as stringent in terms as ours in Wyoming in many respects, will answer every purpose here. And the one thing that will stop the indiscriminate slaughter is the prevention of the hides being shipped from the country or sold, and making it an offense against the law, with a severe penalty, for any vessel or other medium of transportation to receive such hides for shipment or to have them in their possession for such purpose, and punishing any transportation or shipment of hides, either from the mainland or any of the islands of Alaska. This will tend to save the game, and eventually to save the Indians from starvation. Of course this law should apply to moose, elk, mountain goat, mountain sheep, etc., as well as to deer.

The mountains in this country rise out of the sea, as it were, from the islands as well as on the shore of the mainland, and run up to great heights. When the snow falls in winter the deer are driven down to the shores of the sea for subsistence, and the Indians are said to gather in a bunch of deer as high as 500 in number, and these are driven into the deep snow in some canyon and then the Indians kill them with clubs and wipe out the bunch of deer gathered in that way. It is easy to understand how rapidly they may be extinguished entirely by such methods.

Very sincerely, yours,

M. C. BROWN,
Judge, United States District Court,
First Division, District of Alaska.

The following letter from A. S. Dautrick, of Juneau, Alaska, is self-explanatory, not only of the situation, but also as to the feeling of the people of Alaska regarding this much-desired legislation:

JUNEAU, ALASKA, February 18, 1902.

MY DEAR CUSHMAN: You will remember that at various times we have talked about some sort of a game law for Alaska, and the last time you told me that you would look into the matter. I imagine, however, that a multitude of other things have prevented you. The slaughter of deer in the district is so outrageous that unless some law is passed the last territory for the sportsman will be played out. I think that you will agree with me that it should have some protection in the way of a game law. Please let me know whether you care to prepare such a bill or if you would prefer to have some one up here do it and forward to you to have it introduced.

Yours, truly,

A. S. DAUTRICK.

HON. FRANCIS W. CUSHMAN, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The following documents from the Department of the Interior, the Attorney-General of the United States, and letter from Mr. Dall De Weese will also throw a great deal of light upon the situation in Alaska:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 1, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter from Mr. Dall De Weese, of Canon City, Colo., received by reference from the President, calling attention to the necessity for legislation looking to the protection of large game in Alaska, together with copy of a letter from the honorable the Attorney-General, to whose attention the matter was directed and at whose instance this communication is written.

Copies of Mr. De Weese's letter were transmitted to the Senate and House Committees on Territories, respectively, on the 15th ultimo.

In this connection attention is directed to the recommendation contained in the Report of the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899, a copy of which is herewith transmitted, submitting an amendment to the act of March 3, 1899, "To define and punish crimes in the District of Alaska," looking to the protection of deer in that Territory.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

HON. JOHN F. LACEY,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of January 16, 1902, inclosing a copy of a letter from Dall De Weese, of Canon City, Colo., to the President, dated December 1, 1901, and a copy of the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1899, all of which has reference to the protection of game in the Territory of Alaska.

I note with approval the suggestion in your report above referred to of an amendment of the criminal code of Alaska with a view to game preservation there, as also the suggestion of Mr. De Weese in the same direction. But I am not sufficiently familiar with the situation in Alaska to be able to express an opinion whether these are just those best suited to the conditions of that Territory, nor as to how far the natives there, who are to some extent dependent upon game for subsistence, should be included in the prohibition, nor whether other kinds of game than those mentioned in either suggestion should not be included.

At the request of Hon. J. F. LACEY, chairman of the House Committee on Public Lands, I recently gave him a statement of my views as to the power of Congress in this matter. And while that referred chiefly to the question of such power as to the public lands within the limits of a State, yet it also referred to the same question in the Territories. Perhaps it would be well to refer the communication of Mr. De Weese with this and a reference to the suggestions in your report to him, as I think he is much interested in the subject. And I suppose that many useful suggestions would be obtained from Governor Brady, of that Territory, not only as to how far the natives should be included in the prohibition, but also as to the kinds of game that should be protected, in what seasons of the year the prohibition should be operative, either as to all or some kinds of game, and whether it should not be operative the year round as to some kinds.

Respectfully,

P. C. KNOX,
Attorney-General.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

PROTECT ALASKA GAME.

CANON CITY, COLO., December 1, 1901.

THE PRESIDENT:

This is a subject that appeals to every "true-blue sportsman," every lover of animal life, and all those who see beauty in nature, embracing forests, plains, and mountains throughout our entire country, and while the woods, plains, and mountains are naturally beautiful, we all agree that they are much more grand and lifelike when the wild animals and birds are present. There are now several organizations doing work toward the preservation of wild animal and bird life. There is much yet for us to do—resolve is to act; let us be up and at it.

For twenty years of my life I have taken my fall outing, embracing the greater part of North America. I have made trips in recent years to various parts of our mountains, where I hunted eighteen to twenty years ago, and it is appalling to note how rapidly the wild animals are disappearing. While I am but 43 years of age, I have seen in this short period the extermination of our buffalo; at the time of my first trip west there were millions. The antelope at that time were thousands—they are now reduced to dozens, here and there. There were also elk yet upon the plains—now there are none. There were bison in our mountains within 25 miles of the place in which I am writing. I doubt if there are 20 wild bison now in the United States. I have seen thousands of deer in Montana, Idaho, Utah, Mexico, and Colorado, where these numbers are now, comparatively, reduced to one, three, five, and twenties. The "big horn" mountain sheep (Ovis montana) that were 200,000 are now reduced with comparative ratio to the rest.

When I was hunting in New Brunswick in 1896 I was told by good authority that these conditions were not quite so bad there, and that the enforcement of their laws was the safeguard there as well as in Maine.

During my four seasons' hunting in Alaska, my observations from past experience foreshadow that without stringent laws and their rigid enforcement the big game of Alaska is doomed to as rapid an extermination as it was upon the plains and mountains of Colorado. I will narrate one instance: When in the Kenai Mountains, Alaska, on the 23d day of August, 1897 (from my diary), Mr. Berg and myself, while sitting together on the mountain side, with the aid of a field glass, counted 500 wild white sheep (Ovis dalli), all within a radius of 6 to 8 miles, 10 here, 6 there, then 20 and 30 in another locality. Can a true hunter or a lover of nature imagine a more beautiful sight? Look! here and there were grand old towering mountains, all snow capped, some furrowed with gaping canyons, some separated by a mighty glacier, others with a gradual slope, carpeted with nutritious grass, upon which these beautiful denizens of the snowy mountains of the north loitered about in groups, either feeding or resting.

I was in these same mountains again in 1898, my wife accompanying me there in 1899. I wanted her to see what had at that time never before been a woman's pleasure. I was in these same mountains again this season (1901), and there is no question about the Ovis dalli decreasing in numbers; it is perceptible. If mineral should be discovered in these mountains, and with no laws to protect this animal, they would be exterminated in a very short time. In 1899 when passing through a section where a "so-called sportsman" had been hunting, four carcasses were lying on one small hill, nothing having been touched, the heads of horns being too small and the work of skinning and preserving too great to suit his—I was going to say his "sport"-ship, but will make it his "devil"-ship.

In 1899 myself, wife, and party killed four sheep, two of which were killed by my wife. We could have killed a hundred. This season (1901) we killed but one, as we needed it for meat, also one bull caribou.

The natives are very destructive to sheep. I have seen them in parties of their own shoot sheep, and if it ran off wounded or fell over a low cliff they never went after it; "too much work; shoot more." When in my party I never allow a native to carry a gun. The conditions I have mentioned regarding sheep extermination the same will apply to moose and caribou.

Now, then, dear reader, if all I have said about this transformation of game from plenty to almost extermination is so perceptible in one man's short life, we all can see its finish in the course of a very few years unless we act quick while there is yet time.

Alaska is a new country and a good portion of it is uninhabitable for man, and in this respect it is thus more suitable for game; and there is less excuse for its being slaughtered on account of the country not being desirable for the use of "home seekers." I am sorry to say it, although it is true, that where the climatic conditions are favorable for the advancement of civilization and the "tiller" of the soil, just so sure is the doom of game in that land, remote and inaccessible localities and game preserves that extend to the winter feeding grounds excepted.

It is not necessary that big game be slaughtered to furnish the "meat stuff" in Alaska, for where man can go a pack train can go also; then it is made possible for the wagons, then railroads. Neither is it necessary that game be slaughtered for the native food supply, yet let them kill what they will actually use; and if our Government would thoroughly instruct the missionaries and priests of Alaska to intercede with the natives on behalf of the game, much good could be done. Teach them the wrong in killing the female and the young of any and all animals. I have talked this with natives in my camp and noticed that it was hard for them to conceive it, yet by constant teaching it will have its effect. I believe that some such game laws as I hereafter mention would be effective in Alaska if enforced.

My twenty-seven years of experience in hunting has convinced me that the "market meat hunter" is the most destructive to the big game. Where mining localities are remote from railroads or steamship transportation, "meat stuff" is correspondingly expensive; hence if game abound the "meat hunter" finds a profitable business and he is always on hand.

Make the law and enforce it whereby it is a penal offense coupled with a fine of $100 for each offense where a party or parties offer for sale or barter the flesh of any game animal or bird at any spot or place in Alaskan territory, the same law to apply to any and every company or individual attempting to ship or transport game flesh of any kind out of the Territory.

Make a nonresident license law requiring every sportsman going to hunt and hunting in Alaska to pay $50 for that privilege, and that this sum allows him to take out of the Territory only one specimen of each species killed by him. The same law to provide a license fee of $100, which would give the sportsman or hunter taking out that license the right to kill and transport two specimens of each species of animal killed by him, and that he is not allowed to take out more than this quota. The money thus paid to the district commissioners, who might be the nearest postmaster where the hunting is done, and this money to be used, first, for the prosecution of a person or persons violating this law, and any surplus that might accumulate in one year over $30, that surplus to go to the native school fund of that district.

Make a law that gives an open season only on game from August 15 to November 1, with a fine of $100 for its violation. This law should apply to natives also, as well as nonresidents, except where the animal is shot absolutely for immediate food necessity.

Make a law that prohibits sportsmen or other persons from employing natives or other men for killing big game animals or birds, for in doing so most of the meat is wasted and the heads shipped and sold.

Make a law prohibiting the killing of the big brown bear (Ursus middendorffi) on Kadiak Island for a period of five years. This would in no way be an injustice to the natives, as this island now contains so few of these animals that hunting them is no longer profitable, and neither do the natives depend on this for support.

Negotiations should be commenced with Great Britain to implore them to pass some such laws that would coincide with ours that would govern that part of the Yukon or British territory (Columbia) that joins Alaska.

I know full well what objections will be made to such laws by "fur traders," hide and head hunters, but it is right that the grand old bull moose and bull caribou or the great old ram "Ovis Dalli" be shot down by the native, paid for so doing by the "so-called sportsmen," and only the head taken from the carcass and that shipped out and sold? I say, is it right that this should be permitted for the gain of a few individuals at the expense of the lives of all the big game of that country, as well as the lovers of nature and the "true-blue sportsmen" not yet born, to all whom we are responsible?

Let us all act now and use our influence to have some measures appertaining hereto properly brought before the coming session of Congress with the earnest appeal for their enactment.

I have talked several times with Hon. J. G. Brady, governor of Alaska, regarding this subject, and he urged me to formulate some practical measure and he would give it his support.

Yours, fraternally,

DALL DE WEESE,
Canon City, Colo.

The following extract is taken from the last annual report of Governor John Brady, of Alaska, to the honorable Secretary of the Interior.

No language could state more clearly or forcibly than the report of the governor, not only that a game law is needed for Alaska, but that said game law should contain the provisions which are contained in this bill.

[Report of Governor Brady, of Alaska, on game.]

GAME LAW.

Congress should enact a game law for this district. The large game, like the moose, caribou, and common deer, need protection. The wanton slaughter of deer has been carried on to a great extent in southeast Alaska by the natives. In the winter and spring, when the snow is heavy upon the mountains and even to the beach, these animals seek the shores of the island. They become weak, and when run into a snowdrift can be killed with a club. A single native has been known to bring in as many as 150 skins of animals which he has killed in this fashion. He makes no attempt to use the meat. All he wants is the skin to sell at the store. This does not bring him very much, for it is a winter skin and therefore not very desirable by the dealer. This all can be corrected by prohibiting the exportation of deer hides from Alaska. The native will have no incentive to kill deer simply for their hides. The hides of those which he kills for himself or to sell he can make use of for his own moccasins and other articles of clothing which he uses.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments recommended by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The amendment to the title recommended by the committee was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—JAMES A. WALKER AGAINST WILLIAM F. RHEA, OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. WEEKS, from Committee on Elections No. 3, made a privileged report of the contested-election case of James A. Walker against William F. Rhea, of Virginia; which was ordered printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CUBAN RECIPROCITY.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Ways and Means had printed 500 copies of the hearing upon reciprocity. These volumes have all been exhausted, and there is a great demand for additional copies. I therefore ask that 1,000 copies be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, asks unanimous consent that 1,000 copies of the hearings on the Cuban bill be printed for the use of the House. Does the gentleman from New York indicate to what room it shall go—to the document room or the folding room?

Mr. PAYNE. To the document room.

The SPEAKER. The copies to go to the document room. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12765) to provide for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Under what rule of the House does the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee call up this bill and move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration?

Mr. PAYNE. It is a bill affecting the revenue.

Mr. TAWNEY. The title of the bill is "to provide for reciprocal trade relations." I simply want to know whether it is considered as a revenue bill—that is, whether it was called up on that ground or some other ground?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, called it up as a privileged report.

Mr. TAWNEY. On what grounds?

The SPEAKER. The bill has not been read to the House and the Chair can not state its provisions. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee called it up as a privileged report.

Mr. PAYNE. The ground is that it is a bill affecting the revenue.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to Rule XI, clause 59, which provides that the Committee on Ways and Means may report at any time on bills raising revenue; and it has been repeatedly held that that included bills affecting the revenue. So that under the decisions under that rule, the Chair is clearly of the opinion that the gentleman has a right to call up the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I only wanted to know under what particular rule or under what provision it is called up, and whether or not it is because it is a revenue bill?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that bill does not come under the provisions of the rule referred to by the Chair, and in making that statement I desire to know where, and at what time, and by whom this question is to be determined. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that—

The SPEAKER. What is the understanding of the Chair? Will the gentleman restate his point of order?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. The point of order is that the purpose of the bill is not to raise revenue or reduce revenue.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's point is that it is not a privileged report?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. It is not a privileged question and therefore must be brought in by rule or in some other way got into the House, and not in the manner in which the gentleman is attempting to do it. The bill proposes to provide reciprocal trade relations with Cuba. The main purpose of the bill seems to be, from discussions that have been had heretofore, that the bill can not be amended in any way, shape, or form, and under that ruling, it seems to me, the question of reciprocity would be considered the main question; that it is not a bill to raise revenue, which the rule specifically refers to in matters of that kind.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already decided this question on the point raised by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I did not understand that the gentleman from Minnesota made the point of order.

The SPEAKER. He made a parliamentary inquiry, and upon that the question was decided. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Louisiana to a line of decisions where it has been held again and again that matters affecting the revenue are privileged under Rule XI.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question. When this bill was under consideration in the Ways and Means Committee, amendments to the general revenue were offered and declared by the chairman not to be germane to the bill. Now, I ask if this bill is privileged—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the House has nothing to do with what occurred in committee. What is the question the gentleman wishes to ask?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Chair whether it will be in order to offer an amendment to this bill affecting the revenue?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not decide questions until they come before the Chair, and this is a matter that will come before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. One more inquiry, Mr. Speaker, in regard to the time of debate and consideration of this question. I would be glad if the Chair would inform me whether this is the time to consider that matter—whether it should be done in the House.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done now by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. It can be done in Committee of the Whole, can it not?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. And at what time can it be done?

The SPEAKER. It can be done in the House upon motion, and in Committee of the Whole by consent.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Then, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move—

The SPEAKER. It can not be done by motion until after general debate.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Then, if this is the time to consider the question, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill continue until Wednesday next, to-morrow week; that at that time the House continue its discussion under the five-minute rule until its consideration is finished, and then that the time be fixed for a vote upon the question.

Mr. PAYNE. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The question is on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I asked for unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has demanded the regular order, which cuts off the power of the Chair to submit the request for unanimous consent.

The question was put on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The yeas appear to have it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 107, yeas 102.

Mr. FORDNEY. I call for tellers.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise. [A pause.] Evidently a sufficient number; and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 177, nays 80, answered "present" 16, not voting 82; as follows:

So the motion of Mr. PAYNE to go into Committee of the Whole was adopted.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, when the name of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BRISTOW] was called, I, in the confusion, mistook it for my own name and answered "aye." Subsequently, when my own name was called, having discovered my mistake, I voted. I wish now to have the error corrected by which Mr. BRISTOW is recorded as voting. I understand he is not present.

The SPEAKER. Upon the statement of fact just made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL], it seems clear that the vote of Mr. BRISTOW, as recorded, should be stricken out, as he seems not to have been present, but by mistake his name was answered to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL]. In the absence of objection, the vote standing in the name of Mr. BRISTOW will be stricken out.

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as I find I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], I desire to withdraw my vote, which was cast in the negative, and be recorded "present."

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, at the time I voted I understood that my colleague [Mr. MORRELL], with whom I have been paired, was not here; therefore I answered "present." I understand now that my colleague voted; therefore I desire to have my vote recorded in the affirmative.

The name of Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania was called, and he voted "aye."

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

For the session:

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. BENTON.

Mr. BROMWELL with Mr. CASSINGHAM.

Mr. BOREING with Mr. TRIMBLE.

Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. HALL.

Mr. DEEMER with Mr. MUTCHLER.

Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. TATE.

Until further notice:

Mr. MAHON with Mr. RANDELL of Louisiana.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. COOPER of Texas.

Mr. HULL with Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN.

Mr. BARNEY with Mr. MCRAE.

Mr. SHOWALTER with Mr. SLAYDEN.

Mr. EDDY with Mr. SHEPPARD.

Mr. RUMPLE with Mr. THOMPSON of Alabama.

Mr. SKILES with Mr. TALBERT.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS with Mr. GORDON.

Mr. OVERSTREET with Mr. COWHERD.

Mr. CAPRON with Mr. JETT.

Mr. SHELDEN with Mr. SPIGHT.

Mr. SCHIRM with Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN.

Mr. SHATTUC with Mr. RUCKER.

Until the 18th:

Mr. LOVERING with Mr. LEWIS of Georgia.

Until otherwise agreed:

Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. SNOOK.

Until Wednesday:

Mr. JOY with Mr. CUMMINGS.

For the day:

Mr. BRISTOW with Mr. McDERMOTT.

Mr. WARNOCK with Mr. LAMB.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio with Mr. CREAMER.

Mr. NEVIN with Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.

Mr. McLACHLAN with Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina.

Mr. HOLLIDAY with Mr. SHACKLEFORD.

Mr. HOWELL with Mr. SCARBOROUGH.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT with Mr. McANDREWS.

Mr. HASKINS with Mr. FOSTER of Illinois.

Mr. FOWLER with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

Mr. FOERDERER with Mr. GRAFFSON of Nebraska.

Mr. DAHLE with Mr. DE GRAFFENREID.

Mr. DICK with Mr. BELMONT.

Mr. WARNER with Mr. MAHONEY.

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. HENRY of Texas.

Mr. BEIDLER with Mr. MAYNARD.

Mr. BLAKENEY with Mr. NEVILLE.

Mr. CASSEL with Mr. BELLAMY.

For this vote:

Mr. SOUTHARD with Mr. DOUGHERTY.

Mr. BLACKBURN with Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. LANHAM.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey with Mr. FLOOD.

Mr. JACKSON of Maryland with Mr. JACKSON of Kansas.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12755) to provide for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba, with Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield for one moment?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I would like to ask the gentleman if there has been any agreement or determination as to the time or order of debate?

Mr. PAYNE. None whatever.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. May I ask the gentleman if we could not now agree and come to some conclusion as to the length of time and the manner of the control of the time in the committee?

Mr. PAYNE. I will state that I endeavored to do so yesterday and was unable to do so. I think after we proceed to debate for a while we may make some arrangement, but we can not do it now.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do I understand that the time is to be divided as usual and to be in the control of the Chair, in the absence of an agreement?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Alternating one with the other?

Mr. PAYNE. The Chair will control that.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I understand that, but is it not unusual to proceed with a matter of this importance without some sort of determination as to the disposition of the time?

Mr. PAYNE. I will again say to the gentleman that I spent some time yesterday trying to make an arrangement. I was unable to make an arrangement with the various elements opposed to the bill, and I do not think it can be done at this moment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time be controlled by the gentleman from New York—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield for that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the time be controlled by the gentleman from New York in favor of this bill and against the bill by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. PIERCE and others objected.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The committee will please be in order, and the gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, our relations with the island of Cuba are peculiar. As we all know, they grow out of the Spanish war, a war for which I for one was by no means responsible, and which I opposed to the last moment, and only yielded to what seemed to be the almost unanimous sentiment of the House; but that war is over, and it has left us with these peculiar conditions. We undertook when we engaged in that war, and we have professed on every occasion since, that our main object was to give a stable, independent, and free government to Cuba. During the years that elapsed since Spain evacuated Cuba and surrendered the possession and sovereignty of those islands it has been the endeavor of the Administration, as it has been the constant endeavor of the Congress of the United States, to arrange a free and independent government for Cuba. To that end has been every line of legislation that we have passed upon the subject; to that end were the Platt amendments, which were passed, and which have been incorporated as a part of the constitution of Cuba.

Cuba has had an election; Cuba is about to have her officers inaugurated, and on the 20th of next month the United States is to retire from Cuba with the army that has occupied it, surrendering the civil and military government that we have had there into the hands of the officers chosen by the full and free vote of the people of the island of Cuba. We have spent millions of money and sacrificed thousands of lives to bring about this condition of affairs. We have done as much for Cuba as any nation ever did for those of alien blood. Still, in sight of the world, we are pledged to see to it that Cuba starts out with the best of auspices under the government which she has formed.

I do not say, Mr. Chairman, that we have not up to this present moment done our full duty and more to Cuba. I do not present here any sentimental claims on the part of Cuba for the action of the Congress of the United States. We are in the position of a guardian who has settled with his ward, paid over every dollar of the principal and the interest, and yet every guardian, be he a right-minded man, is interested when that ward goes out into the world to use every endeavor that he consistently can to make the career of that ward successful. And in this experiment, in establishing a new government for Cuba, it is the duty of the United States to do what we can to make the experiment successful.

When the war was over, after years of civil strife, the planters in Cuba had become involved in debt. When Spain left the island they saw their plantations devastated. Fire and sword had swept over the island. Many of the sugarhouses had been destroyed, many plantations had grown wild with weeds, and the production of sugar had dwindled down to some 200,000 tons per annum. The people went to work and tried to recuperate and to restore the old order of things so far as their commercial and industrial prosperity was concerned. They had to borrow money to build new sugarhouses; they had to borrow money to plant new sugar cane; they had to borrow money to care for those crops and bring them on to maturity.

They went to work with a will, and they need not be ashamed of the record they have made in the last three years—300,000 tons of sugar the first year after the war, about 600,000 tons the second year, and nearly 900,000 tons this year, the product of their work, their endeavors, and their struggles. They have done well in doing this, and yet they have not been able to lift the load of indebtedness that they had to incur to bring about this result.

And now, just as we are about to launch them forth in self-government, just as they are about to try this experiment, a new calamity comes to Cuba. It is one that is common to the people of the world. We consume in round numbers 10,000,000 tons of sugar in the world, and through bounties in European countries and the stimulation and increase of sugar in those countries and in our own we find that there are 11,000,000 tons and over produced this year, a surplus of 1,000,000 tons of sugar.

The consequence is, the supply being so greatly in excess of the demand, the price of sugar has been forced down to a point lower than it has been in years; to a point about a cent lower a pound than it has averaged for the past few years. When it comes to Cuba, the price is down below the point where they can produce sugar at cost, let alone producing it at a profit. According to the evidence before the committee it costs 2 cents a pound to produce sugar in Cuba. I know there were two or three gentlemen who testified that they went there three years ago and examined among the planters and found out that they were producing sugar at from a cent and a half to a cent and three-quarters a pound, and yet it was uncontradicted in the evidence before the committee that wages in Cuba had increased in the last few years from 50 to 75 per cent, and as the cost of sugar is principally the cost of wages, it follows that the cost of producing sugar has increased in the last three years; and this only corroborates the statement of the gentlemen engaged in the production of sugar in the island when they say it can not be produced at less than 2 cents a pound.

On the 1st of January last the price of sugar in Cuba, free on board at Habana—and, by the way, this cost is free on board at Habana—was 1.5 cents per pound. Hence at that rate there was a loss of a half cent a pound on every pound of sugar produced in Cuba. This was what was staring them in the face when the appeal was made by General Wood in December last for aid for Cuba in this emergency. To be sure the price of sugar has somewhat advanced since that time, and it reached a point as high as $1.81 per hundred free on board in Cuba. That is the highest point it has reached since the 1st of January, fluctuating to a little below that point and back to $1.81. That meant a net loss of nineteen one-hundredths of a cent per pound on every pound of sugar of the present crop.

These planters in Cuba are obliged to go to the bankers and to the merchants for money and supplies to raise and harvest their crops. There are 196 centrals in the island of Cuba, great grinding establishments where the cane is brought from their plantations and from the smaller plantations called the colonos, and there ground up and boiled into sugar and shipped to the ports for the market. These 196 centrals are surrounded by hundreds of the colonos, nearly 16,000 of them in the island of Cuba, little planters having 5, 10, or 20 acres, who raise their sugar, carry the cane to the railroad or to the central, where it is finally accumulated and, as I say, ground and boiled into sugar. The usual arrangement between the colono and the central is that the colono produces the cane and receives for it half the sugar which the cane produces. To raise this cane costs about 50 per cent of the entire cost of producing the sugar free on board in Habana; so that it is a fair divide for the colono to have half the sugar his cane produces. They commence grinding the crop about the 1st of December, and the grinding season continues until about the 1st of May. They are still grinding cane in Cuba at this time, although they have ground the greater portion of the crop.

Now, the planters, large and small, are forced, in view of what occurred during the war, to borrow the money to care for the crop and to harvest it. This is the almost universal rule. The planter finds that he has invested a larger per cent of money in labor upon the crop than the crop of sugar he is raising will pay. Labor is employed in Cuba; labor is employed to-day, and at fair wages. They are building a railroad there that takes the surplus of labor. It is not a question of what has been done up to the present time for the laborers, although it may be a question as to how much these sugar planters are in debt to their laborers. Having to borrow money for the crop, and not having sufficient value in the crop to pledge for the money they borrow, the question is as to the future of those laborers. When the grinding is done, then comes the planting season. Fortunately in Cuba that is not so great an expense as it is in some other places, like Louisiana, for a planting there will last from five to ten and sometimes fifteen years without replanting, so that not more than 10 per cent, perhaps, of the whole area has to be replanted every year on an average.

The next thing in order is to keep down the weeds which grow with such terrific prolificness in the island of Cuba. They go through the plantations four or five times cutting down the weeds, and after that is done and the cane is high enough it shades the ground and prevents the growth of the weeds, and then they have no further labor until harvest; but so great is the labor in caring for the crop that it is worth one-half of the value of the sugar. And now, when this labor is just about to commence, the farmers and planters and colonos are anxiously looking forward to see where they can get the money to plant and care for the next year's crop. If they are obliged to sell the sugar at less than 2 cents a pound, they can not pay their debts, and where will they get their money for the next year's crop? As a writer said, who has been through the island of Cuba at a recent date, the 20th of March:

While the masses of Cuba are not actually suffering from lack of food, the planters and business men are on the verge of collapse and bankruptcy, and are anxiously hoping for concessions in the United States tariff in order that they may receive new life and hope. The merchants have large sums of money trusted out and are not paying each other. They are simply holding each other up in the hope of obtaining relief, and if failures once begin they will run like wildfire.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman state who the author of that is?

Mr. PAYNE. I can not state now; I will tell the gentleman afterwards.

Mr. TAWNEY. I wanted to know if it was Mr. Pepper, who has been writing articles to the Star, of this city.

Mr. HAMILTON. Was it in the hearings before the committee?

Mr. PAYNE. It was in a letter written by a man, whose name I have not at present, to a member of the House. I would give the gentleman the name, but I have not it with me. I included the statement in my report.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would not add to the distress of Cuba. I know that some gentlemen are anxious to have Cuba annexed at once. I am not one of those gentlemen. The time will come when Cuba will be annexed to the United States, and when it does come I believe I shall have to do as I had to do in the Cuban war, bow to the inevitable, and Cuba will be annexed. You want it annexed at once—some of you do. The interest in the United States who are opposing this bill want it annexed at once, and free trade in every item of commerce that comes from Cuba to the United States. We have been professing that it was our endeavor and our solemn duty to give Cuba a chance for a free and independent government; and now, when we are about to establish a government, with ruin staring Cuba in the face, shall we sit idly by, supinely by, and do nothing to try to help Cuba in its effort for a government.

Mr. Chairman, I confess for one when I entered into this subject, and since I entered into it down to the present moment, I have looked to another question. That question was whether we could aid Cuba without injuring any industry of our own. I have had that steadily in view. Mr. Chairman, I have been a protectionist since I learned protection at my father's knee and read while a youth in Horace Greeley's Tribune his articles on protection. I studied protection at the committee table by the side of William McKinley and Nelson Dingley, when we together framed the McKinley bill; I studied protection in 1897, sitting at the right of Nelson Dingley, when we framed the Dingley bill, and if there is any principle of political economy that I have ever studied and learned to believe in, it is the principle of protection to American industries. I have seen the wonderful growth of this country under the protection of American industries. I would be the last man to strike down an American industry, fostered and prospering under the protection given it by the Republican party.

Mr. FORDNEY. And you are the first at this time to strike that very thing.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will ask me a question in an orderly manner, I will listen to him.

Mr. FORDNEY. I beg your pardon. I asked you if you were not the very first now to advocate striking at that very thing?

Mr. PAYNE. Not by any means, sir. I am standing by protection, and you are taking a course that would strike down the industry that you are assuming to protect. [Loud applause on the Republican side.] Why, gentlemen seem to think that there is something so sacred in every line of the Dingley bill that you can not alter a word in it without becoming a free trader.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. PAYNE. I think I will not be interrupted. There are several gentlemen who want to interrupt me, but I do not know how much time I will take. After I get through, if the House wants to ask questions and will listen to me, I will submit myself to cross-examination. [Laughter.] I had something to do, Mr. Chairman, with framing the sugar schedule in the Dingley bill, both in committee and in conference. That sugar schedule as presented to the House did not present exactly the same appearance that it presents now since it has become a law. It was altered in the Senate and changed in the committee of conference. As the bill left the House it provided a duty of 1.63 on 96° sugar, and as it appears to-day it presents a duty of 1.68½. That is not the whole story.

One object in framing the schedule was to produce revenue. Sugar is a good revenue producer. It strikes everybody that uses sugar, and it is a prolific producer. We knew we had got up past the limit of protection of the beet-sugar industry when we framed that schedule. When it left the House there was not a beet-sugar man in the United States that objected to the protection that was given in that schedule, and yet what was it? One and sixty-three hundredths subject to contingency. Why, the Republican party started out on the idea of reciprocity in 1890, and section 3 was ingrafted into the McKinley bill providing for reciprocal trade relations; and when the committee and Chairman Dingley were making the sugar schedule of the Dingley bill we had a section 3 that provided that the President might make reciprocal trade relations with other nations, and when he did and proclaimed them a good deal after the manner as stated in this present bill, then that certain duties should be decreased, and one of the duties to be decreased was the duty on sugar, a reduction of 8 per cent, bringing the duty of $1.63 down to $1.50, providing reciprocal trade relations were made.

Now, every man in the House understood section 3 and understood the sugar duty. Every beet-sugar man in the United States understood section 3 and understood the duty of 1.63.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. There were mighty few of them then compared with the present time.

Mr. PAYNE. We will come to that later. Mr. Oxnard was one of them. Mr. Oxnard was here and he knew what was in the bill, and he did not protest, and no one protested, because they knew that the protection was ample, and more than ample, and that we made it high only to get revenue as well as protection out of that item. You voted for it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Yes; I voted for it.

Mr. PAYNE. You gentlemen all voted for it. It was a good Republican doctrine then, it was protection doctrine, it was Dingley protection, it was McKinley protection, and I stand for the same kind of protection here to-day.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CAPRON). Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. PAYNE. I can not yield now.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would like to ask a question right there.

Mr. PAYNE. I shall have to decline. I do not know how much time I may get.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. There will be no disposition on our part to check it.

Mr. PAYNE. I decline to yield at present. Mr. Chairman, what does this bill propose to do? The tariff on sugar at 96 is 1.63½, and the bill proposes to take off 20 per cent. When we take off 20 per cent, it leaves 1.35—15 points less than the Dingley bill under reciprocal trade relations, fifteen one-hundredths of a cent less than that of the Dingley bill.

Now, they did not complain about the Dingley bill; they had no dread about that. They did not complain, because they knew it was more than sufficient protection. They had had experience under the Wilson bill; even with the 40 per cent ad valorem duty protection the first year under the Wilson bill the beet-sugar production in the United States was 20,000 tons, and the second year it was 30,000 tons, and the third year it was 40,000 tons. They knew something about protection. Of course, the price of sugar was higher, but the equivalent specific duty was not as high as we propose to leave it to-day on this sugar. Under that bill and under the workings of the ad valorem they doubled their production in three years.

Who says it is going to injure any American industry? Why, sir, they said, "You may reduce the duty 20 or 25 or 30 per cent, and it will not make any difference in the price of sugar in the United States until you have fostered the industry in Cuba to the point where the Cuban sugar growers will be able to produce all the sugar we import—2,000,000 tons or more annually—and then, of course, the importation will reduce the price in the United States; and not until then." How are they going to increase the importation next year under this bill to 2,000,000 tons? The labor in Cuba is all employed; they can not get labor enough to produce anything like 2,000,000 tons. It takes all their labor to produce the present crop—900,000 tons.

But the suggestion has been made "if you make this reduction of 20 per cent the sugar growers in Cuba will bring over Asiatic labor, and so increase the production of sugar by a resort to this lower rate of wages." But, gentlemen, we have guarded you on that point. We have been looking out for the protection of American industry all the time. And so we have incorporated in the bill as a condition precedent that the Cubans must pass and enforce contract-labor, exclusion, and immigration laws as exclusive as those of the United States. So that they can not introduce any Asiatic labor, and can not in that way increase the production of sugar. It can be increased in only a very small degree—so small as not to reduce the price of sugar in the United States. But what they may do in that direction can not take off a scintilla of protection which the sugar people now have.

Now, as to tobacco. No one pretends to claim that tobacco will not be amply protected, even if the 20 per cent should go off. So we say we are injuring no American industry if we make this 20 per cent reduction.

Will this aid the Cubans? It means thirty-four hundredths of a cent per pound on their sugar, added to $1.81 making a net price of $2.15, beyond the cost of production, and fifteen hundredths of a cent profit for this year. If sugar should return to the normal price next year and advance a cent a pound, there would be a profit of 1.15 cents on their sugar. Will this help them?

We are told that the sugar trust is going to get the advantage of all that we take off of sugar. When those who make this claim are asked why, they say, "Because they will; because the sugar trust is the only customer for this sugar." Well, this is disputed. There is no doubt that the Arbuckles are running independently of the sugar trust and are buying raw sugar to meet them in the market. As to whether the National is doing the same thing depends upon the word of Mr. Post, who appeared before the committee, and to whose evidence there was very little contradiction.

But, gentlemen, let us go back a little way. How has it been about fixing the price of sugar by the sugar trust or anybody else in the United States in years that are past? The sugar market of the world is in Hamburg. The price of sugar is fixed in Hamburg for the port of New York. When sugar comes from Hamburg to New York the price is adjusted on the cost of transportation and the cost of our duty. Add these to the price of sugar in Hamburg and you have the price of duty-paid sugar in New York. Then the price of sugar coming from the Hawaiian Islands, or from Porto Rico, or from Cuba, or any other place in the world, is fixed according to that standard. Deduct from the price of the duty-paid sugar in New York the duty and the cost of transportation and you have the price of sugar in Habana Harbor.

Gentlemen, we have had experience in respect to this matter. We need not abandon ourselves to speculation or attempted prophecy. We have had experience along this line. We have had Hawaiian sugar free for years; and though the committee hunted diligently for the facts they could not find any proof to show that the Hawaiians had not received the full price for their sugar, duty free, coming into the port of New York, although the sugar trust during a portion of these years was omnipotent and had no rival refiners of any kind in the United States.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman allow me a simple question?

Mr. PAYNE. I would rather not.

Mr. PIERCE. I simply wanted to ask who pays the duty under the gentleman's statement—the foreigner or the American consumer?

Mr. PAYNE. On sugar? That is a very easy question, my friend. I think the American consumer pays it.

Mr. PIERCE. That is what you have been denying all the time. You have been insisting that the foreigner paid it.

Mr. PAYNE. Every protectionist knows that when we put a tariff duty on an article not produced here in sufficient quantity to satisfy our markets, so as to create competition among ourselves, the duty is added to the price.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If the volume is large enough.

Mr. PAYNE. If the volume is large enough to affect the price here in the United States by way of competition. Yet that is not always true. We put a duty of 10 cents a pound upon tea. We did not produce any tea; still, it was proved conclusively that the Japanese paid half of that duty in order to get into our market.

How much of that comes out of the foreigner on sugar, of course, I do not know; but my own opinion is that in the case of sugar the most, if not all, is paid by the consumer in the United States.

Now, to get back to what I was talking about. We made a reduction of 85 per cent in the tariff on sugar produced in Porto Rico. Some of us were afraid that we would have trouble, that the sugar trust would get the benefit of that reduction or a part of it. We passed the bill, and we have now a record of results. What does the record show? Why, sir, the people in Porto Rico are getting the benefit of that reduction. When their sugar comes into the New York market it sells there at the market price of sugar—the world's market price—deducting only the cost of transportation from Porto Rico to New York.

Some gentlemen have raised a quibble as between the price of Porto Rican sugar and Cuban sugar and German sugar, but when examination was made it appeared conclusively that the only difference in price arose from the difference in grades of sugar, one sugar being graded higher than another according to the productions of the different countries.

So in the past the planter has got the benefit of the reduction we have made on the sugar tariff. I would rather go to history than prophecy for facts, especially when the prophet is a zealous man bent on having his own way about a particular proposition. Why, Mr. Chairman, we made this reduction so light that the Cuban planter has got to have it in order to get out even and have a few dollars to spare. We did not put a reduction of 50 per cent on, or 100 per cent, because we did not wish to injure anybody in the first place, and we knew when we made it only 20 per cent the planter would have a right to demand and receive the full benefit.

Now, such was the testimony before the committee, Mr. Chairman, and still I see that some of these numerous gentlemen, each one of whom publishes a pamphlet and distributes it around to the members for their information on this subject, refers to the testimony of Colonel Bliss, at page 392, and furnishes what Colonel Bliss says at that point, which I will read:

Mr. NEWLANDS. If that entire duty were taken off the Cuban sugar it would sell in our markets just as the Louisiana sugar and beet sugar does, would it not? Would there not be an increase?

Colonel BLISS. I am not an expert on that question and I do not like to answer. It appears to me that the question relates to the price that the Cuban producer would get, and I do not know what proportion of increase would go to him; I believe not more than 30 per cent.

Well, now, Colonel Bliss recurs to that question again at page 395, and I will read it:

Mr. METCALF. Colonel, coming back to an answer given by you a short time ago, if Congress remits the present duty on sugar, will it not tend to continue the large estates?

Colonel BLISS. So far as the question relates to sugar alone, undoubtedly it will. I want to qualify that statement, however. The tendency in Cuba now is, and has been ever since I have been there (how long before that I do not know), to increase largely the number of the colonos, the men with a few acres of land who grow cane, or the men who have land which they devote to other purposes, with here and there a patch of it which grows cane to advantage.

The tendency is more and more toward the establishment of centrals, buying cane at the best price they can get it from the small planter. I think the first effect of any reciprocity that would affect Cuba at all is going to be shown in the improved condition of the colono and the laborer. So soon as the mill owner finds that it is more profitable to make sugar he will immediately reach out and bid for this man's cane and that man's cane, in competition with other mill owners doing the same thing; and they will bid it up to the limit, beyond which they can not go without losing whatever profit the concession gives them.

In the same way, as there is certainly no waste labor in Cuba at this time, and probably will not be for the next season of cultivation, the colono will reach out and bid for this man's labor and that man's labor in order to make as much cane as he can. In short, the mill owner will compete for the cane in order to make all the sugar that he can, and the colono will compete for labor in order to grow all the cane that he can.

I think, and most of the Cubans to whom I have talked agree with me, that if you were to give 50 per cent off, or 33 per cent, or whatever you give, probably not more than 30 per cent at the very most would go to the planter, and the rest of it, whatever did not stay in the United States, would go to the laborer and the colono, the man who cultivates small fields of cane.

Now, that is the opinion of Colonel Bliss, based on his observation in Cuba as to the division that would be made between the planter and the colono in Cuba. He did not know what would be retained in the United States. He was not a prophet. He had not studied the history of what had been done with Porto Rico and Hawaii. He says, "I am not an expert on this subject and I do not like to express an opinion;" and the gentlemen are welcome to what they get out of Colonel Bliss's statement in view of the whole, the unanimous evidence of every other witness upon this subject.

So I say, gentlemen, I have no fear that this money will go to the sugar trust in case we make this reduction. Why, Mr. Chairman, who holds the sugar now? Who holds it to-day, or yesterday, because I have returns up to the 7th day of April? In March I made a request of the Department to find out from Governor Wood where the crop was. One paper, claiming to be respectable, had published a telegram from another paper, generally known as one of the "yellow journal" stripe, saying that the sugar trust had bought up the entire crop in Cuba. It was immediately denied, but I wanted to get at the facts, and Governor Wood sent out letters of inquiry to every planter in Cuba—194 of them, sugar centrals—and he received up to the 2d day of April 126 answers. He also telegraphed to 36 Cuban banking firms, and he has received replies from the 36. He found that up to that date there had been ground 584,259 tons of sugar. He found that there were held at the option of the American Sugar Refining Company 3,285 tons; held at the option of other American purchasers, 2,285 tons; exported to the United States, 25,646 tons. He says:

All sugar above mentioned, except that at the option of the American Sugar Refining Company and other American purchasers, is in the hands of Cuban planters and Cuban and Spanish commission houses doing business in the island of Cuba, and is not at the option of anyone. Where held as security for loans advanced to planters, the planters will get the advantage of any rise in the price under conditions of deposit, as is the custom in the island. This statement shows conclusively the absolute falsity of the declaration that the sugar trust has control of a considerable portion of Cuban sugar. I expect other statements will be sent as soon as possible.

That is signed by Governor Wood.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Will the gentleman not concede that by the time this bill passes the Senate, if it takes the usual course—

Mr. PAYNE. I will come to that a little later. Do not ask such questions as will lead me off the subject I am discussing. You know one man can make a speech better than half a dozen, even though the half dozen are sharper than the one.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But the question is, in whose hands it would be at the time of the passage of the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. We will get to that by and by.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have an additional statement, bringing it down to the 7th of April, the reports from 10 more centrals. In this statement it appears that 24,755 tons have been ground in these establishments. General Wood says:

The increase above mentioned is in the hands of planters and Cuban and Spanish commission houses doing business in the island, with the exception of 3,388 long tons exported to the United States; none at option of the American Sugar Refining Company nor other American purchasers. When held as security for loans, planters to get advantage of rise in price, as stated in telegram of 2d instant.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that shows that up to the present date about 30,000 tons of sugar have been shipped to the United States. Last year at the corresponding date there had been shipped 200,000 tons to the United States. The total production of sugar last year sent to the United States was 490,800 tons, so that more than two-fifths of it had been shipped to the United States up to the corresponding date last year, and this year only 30,000 tons. What is the reason of that? Why, simply because these men are looking to Congress for a reduction of the duty, and like men everywhere, seeing a dollar in sight, they are doing their best to be in a position to get hold of it when the time comes.

Now, I am asked, Mr. Chairman, if, when this bill goes through the Senate, that will still be the situation. Now is the time for them to have sent two-fifths of their crop, or 350,000 tons. They have actually sent 30,000 tons. They have held on until now because everybody interested in that sugar is concerned in holding on to it until the last moment. The men who loaned the money are interested in holding on to it. They want these sugar people to go on and have their crop next year. They know they will come to them to borrow money. They want to keep them in condition so they can raise a crop next year. Every interest in the island is concerned in holding on to that sugar.

Now, gentlemen want to know when the Senate will pass this bill. I give it up. I do not know when the Senate will pass this bill. We will get it through the House as soon as we can. If we do not have too many roll calls on the question of going into the Committee of the Whole and delays of that kind, and if we can get along without too much debate, we will get it over to the Senate in ample time. I understand it is the disposition there to take it up at once. There is no reason why it should not be a law before the 20th day of May, when this Cuban government goes into operation. Having held on to all but 30,000 tons of it until now, it does not require a prophet or the son of a prophet to foresee that they will still hold on to that sugar until the time comes that this reciprocal agreement shall go into effect.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I desire to ask whether when you make the statement that all the parties interested in Cuban sugar are holding it awaiting the action of Congress you also include their principal customer in this country, the sugar trust?

Mr. PAYNE. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have not any doubt but what the sugar trust is guided by business men as eminent in their profession and business as my friend who interrupts me with this question. I have not any doubt as to their grasping propensities. I shall not institute any comparison with my friend on that point, because that would be impolite and odious.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I have examined—

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I have examined their testimony, too.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I have examined their annual report just filed.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I have examined their annual report. I think I know as much about the sugar trust as the gentleman does.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I hope you know a great deal more.

Mr. PAYNE. I think I have fought them as long as the gentleman has, and I shall continue to fight them as long as I am able to fight. I want the gentleman to understand that. But when I see a chance to confer a great benefit without injuring anybody, I am not going to be driven from giving the share on 850,000 tons to the people in Cuba because I fear the sugar trust may get some of it on the 30,000 tons that have come to the United States. I am not such a fool in fighting trusts as to come to any such proposition as that.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I do not believe the gentleman would aid the sugar trust intentionally, but their last annual report, if you will permit me to say, discloses strange facts—

Mr. PAYNE. No; I will not permit you to say anything of that kind in my time now.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will you let me finish that sentence?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not care what their annual report does. I know what it is.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Perhaps the House wants to know.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, in your own time you may state all that Mr. Havemeyer has ever said, or talk about something else that is not relevant to this question. You may discuss that as much as you please. I propose to discuss the question before the House.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. You are avoiding that clearly.

Mr. PAYNE. That question is not here.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. It ought to be here.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, there is a difference of opinion, and I am making the speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York refuses to yield.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, how much will this cost the Treasury of the United States. Last year, ending June 30, 1901, we collected $27,000,000 in duty on goods coming from Cuba, $18,000,000 on sugar and $9,000,000 on other products, largely tobacco. This year on the present crop the full duty would be about $41,000,000. We take off 20 per cent, that would make $8,200,000 of loss of revenue, and that loss of revenue goes to the people of the island of Cuba, to the people we have been trying to set up in government, a people whom we are trying now to save from certain bankruptcy.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You say it is $8,000,000 on sugar alone?

Mr. PAYNE. The total is $8,000,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. On sugar $8,000,000?

Mr. PAYNE. About $7,000,000 on sugar. The rest was on tobacco and other products; but all coming from the island of Cuba.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The whole reduction aggregating about $8,000,000?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes. The calculation was made on the estimated crop, and this report of General Woods confirms the estimate, but in my judgment it looks more like 900,000 tons instead of an 850,000-ton crop. Of course we may be getting the large-sized centrals, so many have reported and others have not.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to show to those gentlemen how much the Republican party have been engaged in changing the sugar schedule. In 1861 we made it 5 cents; in 1862, 4 cents; in 1864, 5 cents; in 1870, 4 cents; in 1874, 5 cents; in 1883, 2½ cents and 3½ on refined, and in 1890 one-half cent on refined and a bounty of 2 cents on raw sugar, so that we have not always regarded it as sacred.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. We did not have any beet-sugar industry then.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, we had a beet-sugar industry away back in the eighties, and we had cane sugar after the war was over.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Oh, I know that.

Mr. PAYNE. I only wanted to call it to mind. Of course you know it.

So, Mr. Chairman, the committee found a way to help Cuba, injuring no American industry and strictly in the line of Republican doctrine and the Republican platform. We have been preaching reciprocity since 1890. We put the same in the platform of 1896, and we put in these other things written there. Now, I am not so hidebound upon the subject of platforms as some of my friends. I know how they are made. They are written in one night, on the judgment of a half dozen men.

Legislation like the Dingley bill is written out after three, four, or five months of hard labor by men who have investigated every phase of the subject, and when they get through with it they are experts on the subject. That is the difference between a platform and a bill. What is of more significance to me is that the Ways and Means Committee should report a bill here for a reduction almost like the one we are making, to hold out not only to Cuba, but to every country, reducing the whole tariff on sugar to reciprocal countries, that would give us all the sugar that we could consume. It is more to me that a committee, on mature judgment, should put such a clause in the bill, when it is a Republican House, by Republicans, than that some man should put it in a platform. But reciprocity is in the platform.

Reciprocity is a Republican argument, and this is reciprocity on a basis that hurts no American industry. What do some of these gentlemen propose? We do not make reduction enough to suit them. They want a reduction of the duty on refined sugar in the interest of the beet-sugar industry. The beet-sugar product at the factory is refined sugar, and every pound of refined sugar that comes into the United States at a lower rate of duty goes into direct competition with beet sugar in the United States. They want that. We propose reciprocity, on the one hand, without lowering the price of sugar in the United States. They are not satisfied with that. They want to include in the bill a lower rate of duty on refined sugar from all countries on the earth and reduced prices of sugar as much as you lower the duties. That is the answer that is made to this bill.

Mr. Chairman, the bill is limited to the present sugar crop.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may continue and conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may continue and conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. BALL of Texas. I do not intend to object, but I hope that the gentleman who is at the head of this great committee will answer a question or two before he concludes.

Mr. PAYNE. If my time is to be extended, and if I can get through one sentence without interruption, I shall have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman, before he proceeds, permit me an interruption upon the line upon which he has just concluded?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. The matter I am interested in more than anything else is what effect this bill will have upon the price of sugar to the American consumer.

Mr. PAYNE. The universal testimony before the committee was that it would not reduce the price unless it was continued for such a length of time as to enable Cuba to supply the principal part of the imported sugar.

Mr. BARTLETT. This bill contains a provision that the reduction under it shall cease in December, 1903, and, as I understand the gentleman, that would not reduce the price of sugar to the consumer?

Mr. PAYNE. I think it would not. There is a production in the United States and in the islands of about 900,000 tons and in Cuba of about 900,000 tons, making 1,800,000 tons altogether; and the probable consumption of sugar in the United States will be during the next year 2,500,000 tons, so there will be about 700,000 tons that must be imported under full duties.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman another question? Referring to the sugar trust, is it not a fact that the evidence before the Ways and Means Committee showed that the American Sugar Refining Company bought and refined and sold 90 per cent of the sugar that is used in this country?

Mr. PAYNE. That was not the evidence before the committee, but it was in evidence that Mr. Havemeyer had claimed before the Industrial Commission that that was the fact. This fact was disputed by Mr. Post before the committee.

Mr. BARTLETT. At the hearings before the Industrial Commission it is stated that Mr. Havemeyer said that his company refined and sold 90 per cent of the sugar.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman that this is the precise fact: He was examined several years ago before a committee of the New York legislature, and he testified that he distributed and refined 90 per cent of all the sugar. Before the Industrial Commission he was asked that question and admitted that he had said so, but said he did not know how much they did refine, but he thought about 90 per cent now. Mr. Post, who is the president of the National Refinery, said that Mr. Havemeyer did not refine more than five-eighths of it. I leave it to those two gentlemen to determine which was right.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. The gentleman says that the price of sugar will not be reduced to the consumer. I would like to ask, for information, how much the revenue will be reduced?

Mr. PAYNE. On sugar?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. How much will be the reduction of the revenue by the reduction in this bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Between six and seven million dollars on sugar.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Who gets the benefit of that reduction?

Mr. PAYNE. I have been trying to demonstrate that the people in Cuba get it. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Another question on that line. If there is no competition in this country in reference to the purchase of raw sugar, how does the Cuban hope to get the increase of this price? Why can not the purchaser put it in his pocket?

Mr. PAYNE. The same conditions exist now that existed in reference to Hawaii and Porto Rico, except there is more competition now than there was in relation to Hawaii, as there was none then. There is competition by the Arbuckles and the National. Mr. Post claims that he is a competitor, but that is disputed; whether he is a competitor or not I do not know.

Now, if the gentleman will pay attention he will not have to ask the question again. In these cases the planters did get the full amount of it, and I believe they will in this. The sugar trust has got to have the sugar as much as the planter has got to sell it. If they do not buy it of them they must go to Germany, and if they go to Germany they must pay more for it, or they must take this sugar. Each one is independent of the other.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I was speaking about taking the differential off from the refined sugar. Yesterday I received a telegram, as follows:

BINGHAMTON, April 7.

Use all honorable means to oppose tariff reduction on refined sugar.

J. E. ROGERS,

President Beet Sugar Company.

There is a man that understands his business, and he is not afraid to say so. I know there are others that have said the same thing, and I know why they have not made more fuss about it. I know the influences that have been at work upon them and the petitions and appeals that have been made to them.

Mr. Chairman, Cubans do not come to us in the attitude of beggars or mendicants. They do not come to us asking concessions without offering concessions in return. They are willing to give us their market and to buy their supplies of us in exchange for this reciprocity. Last year they bought some $28,000,000 worth of us.

About thirty-eight millions were purchased from foreign countries. It is believed by General Wood, by Colonel Bliss, and other Americans there, and it is believed by leading Cuban merchants, that with a fair reciprocal agreement we can get the first year thirty millions of that balance which we do not get to-day. General Wood believes that their importations will speedily rise from sixty-seven millions to one hundred millions; and that if the thing could run on they could soon buy of us $200,000,000 worth of goods—a chance for our farmers, for our merchants, for our manufacturers, for our mechanics, because the Cubans are willing to accept these little concessions which do not hurt us, and give us in exchange their trade. They are willing to impose these restrictions on immigration because they see that it is best for them and their country to do so. They are willing to make these reciprocal trade relations because they believe it will be to the mutual advantage of both countries.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Whom is the gentleman quoting on this subject?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I am quoting a number of people; I can not name them all.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. You are not quoting the officers of the Government there, are you?

Mr. PAYNE. No, sir.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Is there anyone authorized to speak for the Cubans now?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think there is.

Mr. BALL of Texas. The gentleman said that the Cubans are offering these things. He has pictured the distress in Cuba in case they refuse to accept this differential rate. Now, I ask, if they should make a tariff and decline to give the steel trust and the beef trust (saying nothing about the trusts in other articles) the benefit of that tariff, then the people there could not get the benefit of "reciprocal trade," and their country would become bankrupt, would it not?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not exactly understand the gentleman's question. Of course, if they do not accept the reciprocity which we offer them they will not get it.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I understood the gentleman to say that this measure was being passed in order to prevent bankruptcy in Cuba.

Mr. PAYNE. I say that if they do not accept it they will have to go their course. We are doing the best we can for them.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Then if they will not let the steel trust and the beef trust in they will have to starve?

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose the gentleman is satisfied now, and will sit down.

Mr. BALL of Texas. The gentleman seems to be satisfied, as head of the Ways and Means Committee, to decline to answer questions that gentlemen are entitled to ask.

Mr. PAYNE. I did answer the gentleman's question. I am sorry I could not address the understanding of the gentleman so that he could understand the answer. I answered the question as I understood it. If I did not understand it, I am the loser.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have limited the operations of this bill, as I said half an hour ago, to the present crop and the next crop. One of the reasons for this limitation is the action of the recent conference at Brussels. That matter involves the question of the bounty to beet sugar. I shall not go extensively into the bounty question. Gentlemen all understand it—a high tariff and a high price for consumption in Germany, exportation under a direct bounty, and then a concealed or indirect bounty through the cartel system. England has complained of this because it has destroyed her refineries. Finally, a conference of the several governments interested was held at Brussels, and it was agreed that after the 1st day of September, 1903, all bounties on beet sugar should cease. This agreement will have to be ratified by the several governments before it will become binding upon them.

In view of the action of this conference we have limited the operation of this bill to the 1st day of December, 1903, giving an opportunity to get all of the next year's crop, which is finally ground about the 1st of May, to market under the limitations and provisions of this bill. Whether that provision was a wise one or not, I am not here to say, but the reason for it will be found in that Brussels conference, and I sincerely hope that the agreement reached in that conference may be ratified, because I think it will make a difference in the price of Cuban sugar, as well as other sugar, in the hands of the producer, thus doing away with this government bounty.

As to whether the next year's crop will be sold at the normal price it is difficult to say. That being the last year of the bounty, the producers of beet sugar may be stimulated to get in as large a crop as possible while the bounty is in operation. But for that agreement I have no doubt that sugar would have returned to its normal price in the next year and would have increased nearly a cent a pound over the price of to-day.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What per cent of the Cuban planters are among the poor people you speak of who need this 20 per cent help?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, there are 196 centrals, and there are between 16,000 and 17,000 planters, so it would seem that nearly all of them were the small planters. But it is not for the small planters alone; it is for the laborer. Cut off the supply, cut off the money to pay the laborer, and you create discontent, and down there in that hot climate among those people who are passionate always how easy it is to kindle a fire of insurrection and insubordination to overthrow the government set up and to compel us to intervene for good order in Cuba.

Gentlemen, it is a thing that I do not wish to contemplate. I want to do all I can, and I have labored to do what I could to bring relief to the situation in Cuba and relief to these Cubans in this hour of their greatest trial in setting up a government, in this hour of their greatest emergency; and it is a broader question than the question of reciprocity and the question of trade.

We have become so linked to the Cuban people that our destiny can not well be separated from theirs. We have taken Porto Rico; we have given them a good government; we brought prosperity to that island such as was never dreamed of before in all its history. It is a near neighbor of Cuba. The Cubans are looking upon our experiment there. The most intelligent of them are looking toward annexation with the United States. They may come in a year; they may come in five years. When they come I pray God they will be in no worse condition than they are to-day. If we can keep out this horde of immigrants, if we can keep out this cheap labor from the East, if we can keep out undesirable labor as we are keeping it out in our own country, and enable them to build up their industries, diversified industries in that island, finding their principal market in the United States, it is a consummation devoutly to be wished.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman spoke a moment ago of the conditions in Porto Rico being so favorable now that they were more prosperous than ever in the history of the past. I want to know why it would not be well to treat Cuba as you treat them and give them a free-trade relation?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, the gentleman does not seem to know that Porto Rico belongs to us and Cuba does not. That is the only reason.

Mr. LLOYD. I appreciate the fact that Porto Rico is now a part of us, and I see very clearly that the disposition here is not to treat Cuba as if it ought to be a part of us.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, that is a question for the gentleman, of course. Cuba is not a part of us. I am not anxious that she should be a part of us, but I think without question she will be; and, preparing for that day, I want to do the best I can for Cuba, with due regard for our own people.

Why, Mr. Chairman, we hear a great deal about the cost of the sugar beet and the cost of producing beet sugar. I was talking only a few days ago with one of the most intelligent producers of sugar beets in the United States. I said to him: "From what I know of the industry, from what I know of your being able to take care in the near future of the by-products, which ought to bring you three-quarters of a cent a pound on every pound of sugar you produce, I expect you to produce sugar in the United States, granulated sugar ready for the market, at 2 cents a pound."

He replied: "Well, Mr. PAYNE, you are a little more sanguine than I am, but if you had said 2½ cents a pound I would say you were clearly within bounds."

Now, Mr. Chairman, my idea was to give rest and quiet to the beet-sugar industry. It is threatened by what? By the results of the Spanish war—by the threatened annexation of Cuba. It threatens free sugar from Cuba, and if any country on earth can compete with American beet sugar, it is Cuba. It is threatening to come upon you at once. I seek to put it off. I seek to put the question to sleep and at rest for a few years, and with this 20 per cent reduction let the beet-sugar industry march on to its final triumph. But instead, you say "No, let the agitation go on; put it off till next December; send a commission down there and let the agitation go on." And it is agitation that is threatening your industry. Is it not much better to have the 20 per cent reduction and have it understood, as it would be, that that is the only reduction to Cuba until Cuba comes in? Then the sugar industry would go on in rapid strides, as it has in the last two or three years.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, yes.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Was there any disturbance of the beet-sugar interest until this agitation was proposed?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, certainly; it has been disturbed ever since we had the war with Spain. Why, how they hollered when we proposed to put 15 per cent on Porto Rico instead of the full Dingley rate. The beet-sugar men were frightened to death for fear of their industry, and yet that country only produced 120,000 tons of sugar in a year. Frightened! Yes, ever since the Spanish war closed and those countries were annexed to the United States. I would save your beet-sugar industry. I am a better friend of it than you are, because I dare to say to them as I say to you, and as they admit, that this 20 per cent reduction does not hurt their industry. By that reduction I would save them from the danger of a larger reduction and full free trade with Cuba.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. How many more such friends does the gentleman think the beet-sugar industry could endure? [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, well, the gentleman is new here. I have fought for the beet-sugar industry before I ever heard of the gentleman or knew anything about him.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I will survive if the gentleman does not think of me at all.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman woke up about the time that a beet-sugar factory was established in his district, or in an adjoining district, and then he thought everything revolved around beet sugar. I have a beet-sugar factory in my own district. Every ton of beets used in that factory is raised in my district. There is a factory in the adjoining district, where one of the counties in my district sends the beets that it raises. It is a question with my constituents about beet sugar. I know how they feel about it. They are on their second year. Their sugar cost them  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cents a pound, and that is all they got for it the second year. They are hopeful. They know what the people have done in Michigan on the third year. They are looking for 6 and 12 per cent dividends, and they know about this 20 per cent reduction, and they accept that, because they do not want the full free trade that you are trying to force on them.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. You stated a few moments ago that your arguments were in line with Republican doctrine and Republican precedent, if I remember rightly. I should like to ask if it has been the practice of the Republican party in this House to reduce the revenue on competing goods when an industry was seeking to establish itself?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I will refer the gentleman to the Dingley bill as it passed the House, and let him read it through.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Oh, no; I have not time to read that now.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, it was so provided in the Dingley bill. If the gentleman had been here he would have voted for it as every other Republican did.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Did you seek to reduce the duty on tin plate, on steel, on hides, on leather, on wool, on any of the things where we were competing to establish a successful industry?

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will study the Dingley bill he will find that we did reduce the duty on a great many of the items he has mentioned and on a great many others that he did not mention.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. But we have had tariff bills before the Dingley bill.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman does not seem to appreciate the situation. We are not reducing the duty on sugar 20 per cent to all the world, and thereby reducing the price and starting up competition. We are reducing it on what we receive from Cuba, which your friends say will not reduce the price, and hence will not start competition.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That is not the point I have in mind.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, that is the point I have in mind. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The gentleman will see my point later.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman indulge me another question?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, yes; but I must wind this thing up.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I have known the gentleman longer than my colleague from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH]. I was here and helped to pass the Dingley law. I was here when the gentleman helped to frame it. I ask the gentleman from New York if he did not say at that time on this floor that if we would build a beet-sugar factory in every Congressional district of the United States you would not disturb the tariff for a quarter of a century?

Mr. PAYNE. I did not.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I quote you, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. Let me take what you have got there, and I will show you what I did say, unless this is also a garbled extract.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. All right. I heard you make the statement and I have my own recollection about it, as well as the official record.

Mr. PAYNE. Where do you get it from?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I get it from the report of your speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. PAYNE. I am not ashamed of this speech.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Neither am I; let us hear it.

Mr. PAYNE. I stand by every word of it. It was delivered before the Spanish war:

What shall be done with the sugar trust? Well, I will tell you what, in my opinion, is the best way of dealing with it. Establish a beet-sugar factory in every Congressional district in the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] Give competition, and lots of it, everywhere. Put the farmers over against the trust by passing this bill, and reduce the price of sugar so that German raw sugar can not be brought in to be refined here. Gentlemen on the other side, come over and help us, while we help the farmers out. [Laughter and applause.]

You Grangers over there, come and help us. You Populists that go up and down the streets day after day proclaiming your devotion to the interests of the farmers, help us out now when we are trying to help the farmers in this industry that we can establish so successfully. In this way you will do something toward demolishing the trust. You will accomplish more in this way than by mere invective—by running windmills and all that. [Laughter and applause.]

Then I go into the next paragraph. I do not say that you will—

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I leave it to the House what you said.

Mr. PAYNE. "Why should we not produce all of our sugar?"

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. On his word Michigan men put $10,000,000 into this industry.

Mr. PAYNE (continuing):

Why should we not produce all of our sugar in this country? Why, it costs us, Mr. Speaker, about one hundred millions. We were looking around for proper subjects for taxation. We knew that sugar would produce an enormous revenue; and besides all that, we knew that an adequate protective tariff would build up the industry in this country, and as it was gradually built up the revenue from that source will be reduced; by and by the revenue will come in more largely from other sources—

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. All right.

Mr. PAYNE. Any beet-sugar factory in that?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Go right along.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I know what is here—and when this industry is fully established and revenue from sugar ceases, the reduction will keep pace with the increase. The thing will regulate itself; we will not disturb our tariff in the next quarter of a century.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. How about that?

Mr. PAYNE. We have not disturbed it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. We took you at your word.

Mr. PAYNE. Hold on. I decline to have the gentleman shake his fist at me while I am making a speech.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I beg your pardon. We took you at your word and our citizens put $10,000,000 into the beet-sugar industry in Michigan.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I decline to have the gentleman make a speech. Now, that remark referred to the reduction of the revenue and the replenishing of it from other sources. That is what that remark referred to, that we would have no change in the tariff in that respect for twenty-five years, and the prediction is justified, because the revenue has not only come in and taken care of the country, but it has gone far to pay the expenses of our Spanish war; and the prediction justifies itself.

But I did not think then that gentlemen would be howling—I beg pardon, talking—up and down this Hall, bloodthirsty for war with Spain, or that something would blow up the Maine and force war upon the people of this country. I did not think that we would have Porto Rico and the Philippines and Cuba upon our hands in any degree within the space of five years when I made that speech. I stand by every word of it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. So do we.

Mr. PAYNE. And still, in the light of current events, protect the beet-sugar industry. I was for protecting it then, as I am to-day. I bring in this bill, Mr. Chairman, making a reduction of about 20 per cent, leaving that industry fully protected. Let us pass it and stop this agitation to remove the whole duty by the annexation of Cuba to the United States.

Gentlemen, this question is before us. We ought to meet it as patriots. We ought to meet it with due regard to our own constituents, but in such a way that we may appeal to them, as I do to mine, as reasonable men. We ought to do it to aid Cuba at the present time. We ought to do it to bring prosperity and insure peace to the government we are establishing.

We are held in the eyes of the nations of the earth to use our utmost endeavor to give good government to Cuba; and finally, when she comes in by annexation, let us have Cuba without Asiatic hordes forcing themselves in with her; let us have Cuba prospered with diversified industries; let us have a Cuba that will not misrepresent what our Government has done for them; let us have a Cuba that stands for cleanliness, that stands for health, stands for good order, and stands for the very life, honor, and glory of the people of the United States. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MAHON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4284. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889;

S. 5046. An act for the promotion of anatomical science and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia;

S. 1556. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Sterling, in the State of Illinois;

S. 642. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands;" and

S. 150. An act for the establishment of an assay office at Provo City, Utah.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4071) granting an increase of pension to George C. Tillman, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. DEBOE, and Mr. CARMACK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

RECIPROCITY WITH CUBA.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to any concessions to Cuba unless they are accompanied by a cordial invitation to Cuba to become a part of the United States; first, as a Territory under the Constitution and laws of the country, including the tariff laws, and later as a sovereign State of the Union. I am against the pending measure, first, because, according to the statement of the gentleman from New York, it inaugurates a policy of reciprocity, that reciprocity which has been termed the handmaiden of protection. I am opposed to this bill because it does not reduce the price of sugar to the domestic consumer. I am opposed to it because it is an extension of the imperialistic legislation inaugurated by the Republican party, for it seeks to add to the restraints already imposed by the Platt amendment upon the autonomy of Cuba or the independence of Cuba. Our own laws relating to immigration and contract labor, which, while good in themselves, are entirely unjustified when applied by pressure by this country to a so-called independent power.

I believe that we should take ground now against this measure, because it is a continuation of the imperialistic legislation, and the opportunity is now offered us of presenting to the American people a policy of the extension of the republic as opposed to an extension of the empire. For there can be no question but that the deliberate purpose of the Republican party, as expressed in the Platt amendment and expressed in the restraints upon the independence of Cuba imposed by this country, is, when Cuba, induced by her desire to secure access without restriction to the markets of this country, applies for annexation to accept her, but to reduce her to the abject position of a colony or military dependency.

Now the question is, What position shall the members of this side of the House assume to this bill? I insist that it violates every principle which should be pursued and maintained by the party to which we belong. In the first place it inaugurates a policy of reciprocity. What does that mean? Does it mean a tariff for revenue? Does it mean reduction to our consumers? Does it mean the withdrawal of protection from the trusts, which now manufacture and sell in a protected market at a high price and outside of our boundary sell at a low price? Oh, no! Reciprocity is an extension of the protective system by enlarging its area, and no better illustration or exemplification of it can be secured than this bill.

This bill does not make a reduction in the price of sugar to the American consumers. It discriminates against the agricultural interests and promotes the manufacturing interests—these manufacturing interests now largely dominated and controlled by the trusts. It threatens by alarm and fear the sugar production in this country. It promotes the production of the trusts. We thus trade off one interest, the interest less protected, for another interest, the interest most protected. We extend the area of their protection, practically extend our protective laws to Cuba, so far as the trust products are concerned.

Now, I insist upon it that reciprocity is no part of the Democratic doctrine. It is absolutely inconsistent with tariff reform and tariff revision. It does not mean reduction in the price to domestic consumers; it does mean discrimination against one domestic interest and the promotion of other domestic interests, and that will always be the case. Therefore, such a policy is likely to produce and increase envy, jealousy, and distrust within the Republic, and is always likely to secure international enmity outside of the Republic.

How does it operate outside? We seek a single nation and endeavor to make a reciprocal arrangement with her by which certain of her products will come into this country with a less duty. The result is that such a country is favored in the introduction of her products to this country. And how will the less-favored nations regard such favoritism? They will look upon it with envy, suspicion, distrust, and upon us with enmity. They will immediately seek to secure a position where they can negotiate successfully with us. And how will they get the vantage ground except by raising a tariff wall against our products, and thus making it to our advantage or interest to treat with them?

To-day Germany is raising higher and higher her tariff walls against our products in retaliation for the high duties of the Dingley Act and with a view to restraining our exports to that country. The very first country with which it would be for our interest to make a reciprocal arrangement would be Germany, because she has placed the most restraints upon our trade. So, to make a reciprocal arrangement with her, we should have to allow her products to come into this country at a less rate than those of other countries. I ask in what position England, at present imposing no duties on our products, would then be placed? Why, she would be forced to retaliate by raising a tariff wall against our products and entering upon a protective policy. She would then be in a position where she could insist that in consideration of certain concessions made by us in our tariff she would make similar concessions to us.

I insist that the effect of reciprocity will be not only to create ill feeling and distrust, suspicion and a sense of favoritism at home, but it will either drive the nations of the world into the protective system, drive them into raising their tariff walls against our products, or it will secure their enmity as the result of favoritism to some States as against other States.

Now, a great many of my Democratic friends are deceived by the suggestion of reciprocity. They think it means larger trade, freer trade, and they say if they can not get tariff reduction as to the products of all nations, they are inclined to make an arrangement that secures it from each nation singly. I deny it; it enlarges the protective system; it practically extends our protective system to other countries. Our policy should be the revision of the tariff, the reduction of the tariff, now universally unequal, and particularly to reform legislation regarding the trusts which, within the field of their monopoly in this country, charge such exorbitant prices and outside in the field of competition abroad much more moderate prices.

Now, this bill purports to be a reciprocal arrangement, a reciprocal treaty. The agricultural productions of Cuba are to come in with a 20 per cent reduction, and all her products are agricultural. Our manufacturing products are to go in there with reduced duty, so that you can see that it is to the advantage of one interest and the disadvantage to another in this country, and to the disadvantage of that interest which thus far has received the least of the protection of our fiscal policy.

There is another reason why reciprocity is false in principle, and that is it subjects our fiscal system to the changing sentiment and caprice of our treaty-making power.

All our fiscal arrangements should be clear, certain, and stable. Our taxes should not be varied from time to time according to the judgment of the treaty-making power. They should remain certain, the same to all the peoples of the world and to all like products throughout the world; they should not be varied from year to year by the treaty-making power, thus varying our revenue itself, making that a matter of uncertainty and our governmental operations a matter of uncertainty or diminishing our revenue from customs, and thus forcing from time to time reprisals upon the people of this country through our internal revenue system in order to maintain the revenue essential for the operations of the Government.

The motto of this country should be "one boundary for the Republic, including its possessions, free trade within that boundary, and absolutely impartial trade with all the nations of the world outside of it." That is the only kind of a policy that will promote friendliness at home and will prevent enmity and suspicion and distrust abroad.

Now, this bill is open to another objection, and that is that it is practically an extension of the imperialistic policy inaugurated by the Republican party. We all remember the resolutions by which we promised Cuba her independence. By those resolutions, properly and justly construed, we could have meant but one thing—the independence of sovereignty, the autonomy of sovereignty, the unrestricted power of Cuba to govern itself. How did we restrain that power in the Platt amendment? Why, in the first place we declared that we would turn Cuba over to a government of her own people upon certain conditions. One of those conditions was that she should turn over to us her military posts and her naval stations, that being demanded for the avowed but hypocritical purpose of protecting the independence of Cuba. The right of an independent country is to protect her own independence; and Cuba sacrificed her own autonomy when she surrendered control of those military and naval stations.

We also restrained her debt-contracting power. Now, the right of an independent nation is to contract whatever debts she pleases, and not to submit to another nation the control of her judgment as to the wisdom of such debt making. We also imposed limitations upon her sanitation, practically throwing the sanitary conditions of the island under the control of the United States.

Now, we have gone that far in our imperialistic policy regarding Cuba—almost relegating her to the position of a military dependency. In this bill we go farther, and we impose upon her our immigration laws and our contract-labor laws. Those immigration laws are good laws and those contract-labor laws are good laws. We have all participated in their enactment. But what I protest is that this country, an independent government, has no right to impose upon Cuba, an independent government, our own laws, laws which may ultimately restrain and control the line of growth which she may desire to pursue.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I should like to ask the gentleman from Nevada whether he thinks the sugar industry of Cuba could be carried on successfully and profitably by American labor?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman think that the rice, tobacco, and sugar industries of the Hawaiian Islands could be carried on with American labor?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is not done now in Hawaii. The gentleman from Nevada was closely connected with the annexation of those islands, the resolution for their annexation that passed having been presented by him. I hope, therefore, that before he gets through he will be able to tell us about the possibility of American labor carrying on the industries of Cuba.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me state that the climate of both Cuba and Hawaii is temperate. Col. Tasker Bliss, the military collector of the port of Habana, who has lived in Cuba for three years, says that the climate of Cuba is unsurpassed; that it is warmer in winter and cooler in summer than any part of the United States. And that makes the very perfection of climate.

Now, as to the ability of our people to work there. It is in evidence that men from America have gone down there and established market gardens and are working in them themselves. Colonel Bliss states that it is a climate in which the American race will not degenerate. So, too, with the Hawaiian Islands. It is true that the labor conditions of Hawaii are unfortunate, because before annexation Hawaii had reached out for her labor to the countries nearest to her—had reached out to China and Japan. Because those people were employed there we assumed that they were the only people that could be employed there. But such is not the fact. On the contrary, the climate is admirably adapted to the white man. It is a temperate climate. After annexation our immigration laws and contract-labor laws were, of course, applied to her, and as these restricted the Mongolian supply of labor the price of labor went up, and the Cuban planters have been clamoring for the modification of the Chinese-exclusion act, but as that will not be modified they will gradually seek for white labor, and they will secure it among the Porto Ricans, the Italians, and the Portuguese.

The conditions of the laborer in Hawaii are improving every day. The wealth of the landowner is diminishing every day just as the condition of the laboring man advances, and that is what I claim would be the result of annexation of Cuba by this country. With the application of our immigration and contract-labor laws we will restrict her labor markets, and that increase of production will draw simply upon a fixed population there or upon our labor population, and every additional acre put under cultivation will create an additional demand for that labor and will increase its value. The very best evidence of it is that the Cuban production of sugar has increased within the past three years from 300,000 tons to 850,000 tons. They have been increasing their production notwithstanding the low price of sugar.

While you speak of the distress of Cuba, it is not an existing distress; it is anticipated distress. During the past year the price of labor in Cuba has gone up 50 per cent, and the evidence was that the wages of the laborers employed upon the sugar plantations of Cuba equaled, if it did not surpass, the average wages paid to the farm laborers of this country during the past year. The very effect of the increase will be to increase the production of Cuba and to increase the demand upon their labor, and that increase of demand under and upon a restricted labor market will increase the value of every unit of that labor in the day's wage.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman has admitted there is a similarity between Cuba and the Hawaiian Islands, but he seems to lose sight of the fact that the commission we sent to the Hawaiian Islands said in their report in 1898 that white labor could not successfully be employed there in their judgment. He overlooks that colonies of Americans who have been sent to Hawaii, as is said by the plantation owners, are unable to successfully compete. He seems to lose sight of the fact that in the Philippine Islands a like condition prevails, and in Hawaii and the Philippine Islands the chambers of commerce and the people who are exploiting the islands say they can not work them with white and American labor. Now, would not the same conditions prevail in Cuba?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have nothing to say regarding the Philippine Islands. My hope and expectation is they will be lopped off and will no longer be a part of us.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Omitting that, then, does not the gentleman know that the same condition will prevail in Cuba unless these immigration laws are extended at this time?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am not objecting to immigration and contract-labor law. I am objecting to the imposition of them by one sovereignty upon another.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In that I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am opposed to the bill because it is right in the line of imperialism. I believe that the application of our immigration and contract-labor laws to Cuba, when annexed, will be entirely legitimate. She will then be a part of the Union, and we will then be legislating for our own people, and she will be subject to our equal laws; but what I object to in this bill is that we are legislating for another people, a people whom we have declared independent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And when she is annexed the gentleman will find the same conditions as prevail in Hawaii to-day.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Ah, not at all.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. HOOKER. I want to know and I have often thought why it was that after the result of the Spanish war, in which we spent so much money and lost so many soldiers, we should take hold of Cuba, and our Government should take hold of the archipelago on the other side of the globe, but relinquish the only island belonging to Spain that was worth anything to America?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I quite agree with the gentleman as to the importance of Cuba as a part of the United States. I differ with him as to Hawaii. I think that the proper expansion of this Republic involves not only the expansion over contiguous territory, but the acquisition of islands essential to our coast defense; and I have always regarded Hawaii, halfway as it is toward the Orient, as a most valuable place as a military and naval station, and as also constituting a defense to our coast line from Alaska to San Diego.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Thus diminishing both our military and naval expense. If the gentleman will hear me, I have always felt that if those islands were in the hands of a hostile power, that if such power had a naval station there, it could be made a point from which a radiating attack could be made upon our entire merchant marine upon the Pacific coast, and you must recollect the coast line of the Pacific is longer than that of the Atlantic. Take a radial line of only 2,500 miles from Hawaii and it would touch every part of our coast from Alaska to San Diego, and if an attack were aimed upon us from the Asiatic coast the ships would be derelicts in the ocean before they would reach our shores unless they could take on coal at Hawaii; and the very possession of the islands has in itself been a matter not only of diminishing the military and naval expense, but a matter of legitimate expansion to the commerce of the Republic.

Mr. HOOKER. In the line of the gentleman's argument, I would like to ask him another question. Why should the Government of the United States pass over Cuba, the most fertile country on earth, which we have always desired to have, and seize upon Porto Rico, beyond Cuba, no less fertile, but a less favorable possession than Cuba?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The reason was that we promised Cuba independence, and there has been a hypocritical effort upon the part of the Republican party to keep that promise. They have been seeking all the time to fasten upon her the control of military power and to reduce her to the position of a military dependency, whilst they have been preaching the doctrine of benevolence and disinterestedness.

Now, I propose, so far as we are concerned, that we should insist upon it that if any concessions as a matter of sentiment are made to Cuba we should accompany those concessions with a cordial invitation to Cuba to become a part of the United States. That is not the application of force. We could make a temporary reduction to those islands, and give Cuba to understand that she was to have abundant time for deliberation and consideration. The force that would bring her into this country would be the force of her own reason and of her own necessity, which ought always to guide and control a people. Now, with reference to this proposed bill, I have already stated that it would not reduce the price to the American consumers. That is very easily demonstrated. The production of sugar in the world is about 10,000,000 tons. The United States consumes about one quarter of that, or about 2,500,000 tons. You can understand, then, how desirable a market the United States is. Now, of this 2,500,000 tons consumed in America about one-third is produced by Porto Rico, Hawaii, Louisiana, and our beet-sugar farms. Another third comes from Cuba. The other third comes from the rest of the world.

With a view to protecting the production of sugar in this country, as well as collecting revenues, a tax of $34 a ton was imposed by the Dingley Act upon sugar coming to this country, thus practically doubling the world's price of raw sugar as it stands to-day. Now, admit Cuban sugar free, or admit it with a reduced duty, and what is the result? Will the price of our domestic sugar be reduced? Not at all, for the price of our domestic sugar to-day is the world's price of sugar plus our duty, plus the freight to this country, and that will be the case until the United States produces its entire consumption. As long as 100,000 tons are imported from abroad and this duty lasts the domestic price of sugar in this country will be the world's price, plus the duty, which means that in America to-day the American people pay double the world's price for their sugar.

Now, suppose we let in Cuban sugar free or with a reduced duty. It means that only one-third of the two-thirds of foreign production comes in with a reduced duty. We still import 750,000 or 800,000 tons, and the price of that will be the world's price, plus the duty, so that the domestic price to consumers will be maintained at the same rate. The very purpose of the Dingley Act was to accomplish this, and the very purpose of this bill, as alleged by its author, is not to reduce the price to the American consumer, but to transfer $6,000,000 of the duty now paid on Cuban sugar to the pockets of the Cuban planters. That is the proposition, $6,000,000—20 per cent.

Now, you say, that is only fair, that the Cubans pay the duty upon the sugar, and we return to them 20 per cent of what they pay. But the Cubans do not pay the duty upon her sugar. The duty upon her sugar is paid by our consumers, by our refiners, and their customers. Our refiners pay the duty and impose it as an additional price upon the consumer. So that we have here a reciprocity arrangement which involves no reduction in price to the American consumer, but a transfer of one-fifth of the tax paid by American producers upon Cuban sugar, and not by the Cubans upon Cuban sugar; a transfer to the Cuban planters of that one-fifth.

What is the reason this is urged? Why, it is urged simply because the Cuban planters are in distress. Well, I am sure that distress always has my sympathy. I sympathize with the Cuban planters if they are in distress. I sympathize with the Cuban laborers if they are in distress. I sympathize with our American farmers and our American laborers if they are in distress. But distress should not be the occasion of national legislation.

When the farmers of this country were in distress in 1893, receiving the world's price for farm products, recollect, just as Cuba is receiving it to-day, we did not seek by legislation to increase the price which they should receive. And yet, with reference to foreigners, we propose to increase the price which the foreign planters shall receive for their product, simply because they are not satisfied with the world's price.

And why is the world's price so low? Simply because Cuba has produced so much. Prior to the Cuban war the production of Cuba was 1,000,000 tons per annum. During the Cuban war that production fell to 100,000 tons per annum. That was the opportunity of the protected and bounty-fed sugar producers of Europe, and they entered the markets of the world that Cuba had controlled, and monopolized them, and the result was that when the Cuban war was at an end she found the places in which she had been accustomed to sell her crops monopolized by other producers. Notwithstanding that she started in to produce, and she has increased her production from 100,000 tons, the lowest production during the Cuban war, to 850,000 tons, nearly one-tenth of the world's product; and the surplus of 1,000,000 tons in the world to-day consists almost entirely of the Cuban products. The price which Cuban planters receive responds to the law of supply and demand. The supply has been increased beyond the demand, and the price has fallen. She is unwilling to accept the world's price of sugar, which is below 2 cents a pound, and she claims that she can not produce it for less. Therefore, she asks relief.

Judged as a mere reciprocal arrangement, judged by business considerations, there is no reason for this legislation. It is legislation unparalleled in the history of our country. It is a kind of legislation that we have never brought to the relief of our own producers. It is a kind of relief that we ought not, as a matter of business, to extend to the producers of other countries. But sentimental legislation—

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Sentimental considerations have been—yes, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Does the gentleman hold under the Platt amendment that Cuba is not allowed to enter into a commercial treaty with any other power?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Cuba is absolutely free to make a commercial treaty with any other country she sees fit, and this legislation can not be justified on the ground that the Platt amendment limits her treaty-making power. It does not in any way limit her power to make commercial treaties.

Well, my friends, I think we have all indulged in sentimental considerations; but the American people are becoming tired of sentimental legislation. We have spent $300,000,000 to free Cuba as a matter of sentiment. We have spent over $500,000,000 in endeavoring to carry civilization to the Philippine Islands. Now it is proposed that we should carry this sentimental legislation further, and that when Cuba is about to inaugurate her own government we make her planters a gift of the taxes imposed, not upon her people, but upon our people; and the only justification for that is that Cuba needs help. The proposition is to transfer these taxes to a foreign producer, because if you admit that Cuba is an independent government her people must be foreigners.

Now, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to extend this sentimental legislation. I realize the fact that Cuba is about to inaugurate her own government. I realize the fact that the low price of sugar is likely to have a depressing effect upon her industries. I will be glad when Cuba becomes a part of the United States. I am willing to add to the generosity which we have already extended to her, but I would add in connection with the extension of this liberality an invitation to become a part of the United States, and I would extend the invitation for this reason: The United States during the past three or four years, for the first time in its history, has entered upon a policy of imperial expansion. It has for the first time in its history asserted its right to hold a country subject to its domination and a people subject to its domination. Cuba may well feel that if she applies for annexation to this country she will be accepted, but will be reduced to a condition of a colonial possession or military dependency.

I would give her heart and courage now and insure her of the enduring sympathy of the Republic. That it is the purpose of this country, at least so far as she is concerned, to recognize that island as a part of the legitimate expansion of the Republic, and not as a part of the expansion of the empire. I would accompany this by a temporary reduction extending over one crop, or, if necessary, two, extending an invitation, giving her the benefit of the proposed arrangement, not as a part of a general reciprocity policy of the country, so that it should not be considered an indorsement of reciprocity, but simply as an extension of sentimental legislation already enacted, and giving her time for deliberation and consideration, without the pressure of economic distress. I would not give anyone the opportunity of saying that we forced Cuba into the Union through her distress, but I would give her to understand that after this temporary reduction for a single crop or two crops, tiding over such distress, reciprocal relations would exist no longer, and that after that commercial union could only be accomplished by political union. I would put an end to sentimental legislation in this way.

I believe that annexation will be a good thing for Cuba. I believe it will be a good thing for the United States. There never has been a time in the history of the Republic that Cuba has not been regarded as a desirable part of the United States. If we are to annex a country, let us annex a rich country, and Cuba is the richest country upon the globe. If we are to annex a country, let us annex a country with a good climate, and Cuba has one of the best climates in the world, a temperate climate, one that is suitable for exertion, and one that maintains a strong and vigorous race. Cuba is a country that is capable of sustaining a population of 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 people. If she is to be annexed I would rather have her annexed shortly after the withdrawal of military control, when the transfer will be easy, and not after years of strife, civil war, and confusion, such as are sure to be inaugurated, as in every Spanish-American republic.

I believe it would be a good thing for Cuba to give her the free access to our markets; give her this double price of sugar which is now paid by our domestic consumers and the price of her sugar will rise from $34 per ton, the price in the world's market, to $68 a ton in our market. Assuming that the present tariff is maintained, it will mean a clean gift annually to Cuba of $30,000,000. Of course, the result of that annexation will be that immediately the labor values of Cuba will increase. It will mean, with our immigration laws and with our contract-labor laws extended to that island as a part of the Republic, restriction of the labor there and an increase of the production equal to the point of the limited labor supply and would increase the value of every unit of labor, just as it has in the Hawaiian Islands, and thus gradually the labor cost of production in the beet-sugar farms and the cane-sugar plantations of Louisiana, Hawaii, and Cuba would be equalized.

In the Hawaiian Islands, unfortunately, when we took them we had the very worst form of sugar production. The production of sugar was upon great plantations, where the laborers occupied the relation of serfs attached to the soil. We could not change that condition in a day. We could not restore the Chinese and Japanese who were there to their own lands, but the very result of the extension of our immigration laws and contract-labor laws was to so increase the price of labor and the independence of labor that the planters have been clamoring for a relaxation of these laws. The very clamor of the planters indicates that the condition of the laboring classes has been improving. If we had been true to our duty and provided a gradual system of dividing up these great plantations into small farms, there is no reason why the production of sugar could not be made an industry that will sustain as good a class of producers as any other farming industry. The trouble is that capital has monopolized the business and controls great areas of land and obtained the cheapest labor. A wise legislation applied to Cuba will promote small land holdings in that island, will break up these great plantations, and will promote the welfare and the well-being of the individual laborers, and thus tend to advance Cuba's population to a condition of self-respecting citizenship in this great Republic.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I was quite interested in the reasons the gentleman gave for the annexation of Cuba to the United States. One of the reasons was, of course, that it would be beneficial to Cuba; and I can well understand that. The only reason why the gentleman gave for its being beneficial to the United States was that Cuba is a rich country. Has the gentleman any other reason?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think our people would settle in that country. I believe we would greatly improve and build up the country and it would be a benefit to us to have our population settle there. I believe that in time Cuba will be as beautiful as the Riviera of Italy and France.

Mr. SPARKMAN. How would that benefit the United States?

Mr. NEWLANDS. You might as well ask me how the extension of the Republic across the Alleghenies or the extension of the Republic to the Pacific coast has been of advantage to the Republic. It has increased the population, it has increased the wealth, it has increased the power, it has increased the prestige of the country. In addition to that, these islands stand right at the mouth of the Gulf. You may regard Cuba almost as a fortress at the mouth of the Mississippi. This island stands in the line of our isthmian canal. There is every reason why we should have this island as a part of the United States. It seems to have been lopped off by a convulsion of nature. I think it quite reasonable to believe that Cuba was at one time a part of Florida, which the gentleman represents.

Mr. SPARKMAN. One question more. I understand the gentleman to say that this concession to Cuba will interfere to some extent with the beet-sugar industry in this country.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It will to this extent. It will not affect the price of sugar in this country, but the prospect of reciprocity, and the prospect of annexation, I admit, will have some unfavorable effect upon the future extension of beet-sugar production.

But I claim that it will rest largely in the imagination. I asked the sugar producers who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee which they preferred, reciprocity or annexation, and they replied annexation, because they knew that our immigration and contract-labor laws would apply. This bill applies to them also, but who is to enforce them? A proper enforcement of the law depends upon annexation.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the prospect of this bill has that effect, what will the actual realization be?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think the realization will be less than the anticipation. I believe that sugar is almost altogether a product of labor. Sugar is produced cheaper in Cuba because labor is cheaper there than in the United States. But when our immigration laws and contract-labor laws are applied to that island, when she becomes a part of the United States, when we can enforce them, and not leave them to be enforced by the people there, the immediate effect will be an increase in the price of labor, just as in the case of Hawaii. Hawaiian planters thought they were entering upon an era of unequaled prosperity after annexation, but it has not been realized. Now there is an absolute depression in the sugar stocks there, arising from the fact that the price of labor has advanced as the result of annexation. The laboring classes have been benefited there by annexation more than the planting class.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Let me ask the gentleman how much the price of labor has advanced in the Hawaiian Islands since annexation?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I can not tell the gentleman mathematically.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The present price is about $17 per month, and board and clothe themselves.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What was it before?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. About $15 or $16 a month.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It has advanced a great deal more than that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Before annexation they had the contract-labor system, under which the large body of laborers were practically slaves, as the gentleman himself has told us. But the present price is about $17 per month. I mean, of course, Japanese and Chinese labor, practically the only kind utilized there.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The price of labor there has steadily advanced; and so far as Cuba is concerned the advance in wages is best illustrated by the fact that within the last year, as the result of the increased production of sugar in Cuba and the increased demand upon a limited laboring population, the prices of labor have advanced nearly 50 per cent and have equaled the wages of farm laborers in this country.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Is it not the fact also that under the labor laws in operation there before annexation, while the wages were nominally a certain amount, the penalties of one kind or another absorbed half of those wages?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am not familiar with the facts in regard to that. All I know is that the price of labor has materially advanced.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have stated my objections to this bill, and I have also stated the concessions which I think can be judiciously made to Cuba as an extension of our sentimental legislation. I believe in the expansion of the Republic over contiguous continental territory and adjacent islands that are essential to our coast defense. I believe that Cuba is a part of that desirable expansion. I believe that it is incumbent upon us to give the invitation to Cuba, rather than wait for her application, simply because she will hesitate to reply, knowing the experience of Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands; simply because it is our duty to express to her in clear and unequivocal terms our purpose in regard to her should she seek annexation—that we intend to make her a part of the Republic, not a part of the empire.

I am against reciprocity treaties in every shape and form as an expansion of the system of high protection, as involving no reduction of price to consumers and involving domestic ill feeling and jealousy from the favoring of certain domestic interests and the discrimination against other domestic interests, and also involving in the end international dislike, envy, and hatred. And so I am against this bill unless it be so amended as to be accompanied by the invitation to which I have referred, and which, if accepted by Cuba, will open to her such a future of freedom, prosperity, and happiness as she can never secure through independence. What greater boon of liberty can she enjoy than that secured by the Constitution and equal laws of the Republic, and what greater future can await her than that of ultimately becoming a sovereign State of this Union? [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAPRON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr.

PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who announced that the President had approved and signed a bill of the following title:

On April 7, 1902:

H. R. 13360. An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

RECIPROCITY WITH CUBA.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, after three months of the hardest kind of work—after concessions offered and concessions made—after rebellion sternly repressed—after semiofficial utterances printed in the semiofficial press to the effect that the Administration would die in a certain "last ditch" that has been moved forward and forward and forward until it has disappeared over the horizon—the much desired, the much prayed for bill for the relief of Cuba is at last before the House.

When I look across the center aisle and see the somewhat bedraggled and wearied appearance of the white dove of harmony that perches upon the banners of the Republican party, a little incident recalls itself to my memory—an incident that occurred at the beginning of the present session. There was a matter of importance before the House; and we Democrats were opposing it in the usual united and brotherly way in which we oppose everything [laughter], when suddenly out of the night of the Republican side came my committee colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], walking with stately tread across the well. He leaned upon one of the desks in the front row and recited to us a little poem that has since brought him well-deserved fame as a poet and has unquestionably resulted in his renomination to Congress. [Laughter.] It seems to me that the time is now opportune to return it to him—I only wish that he were here so that he might hear me recite it—to return it to him with the grateful acknowledgment of an appreciative minority:

When birdies in their nests agree,
It is a rare delight;
But, oh, it is so sad to see
Those little birdies fight.

—GROSVENOR.

[Laughter.]

I had feared that the majority party would be hopelessly divided upon this bill. We had heard of insurgents who would never, never die, and seldom surrender; but—

These were the gods of yesterday;
The wind hath blown them all away.

[Laughter.]

When the grand army began its retreat from Russia, Marshal Ney commanded the rear guard, 30,000 strong. As the remains of that army reached imperial territory, the Emperor sent for Ney. The "Bravest of the brave" rode up, a mere wreck of his former self, and saluted. "Ney," said the Emperor, "where is the rear guard?" "Sire," replied the marshal, "I am the rear guard."

I am no prophet, Mr. Chairman, but I venture to predict that when the roll is called upon the final passage of this bill, if anyone asks where are the "insurgents," the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], my colleague on the committee, will rise sorrowfully in his place and, respectfully addressing himself to the Chair, reply, "Mr. Speaker, I am the insurgents." [Applause and laughter.]

Self-examination is sometimes the most excellent self-discipline. For four years we have been trying to deceive ourselves that we fought the war with Spain simply as an incident of chivalrous knight errantry, without any selfish motive. What are the facts? It is true that sentimentality did influence us, and greatly influence us, but there was another cause that brought on the war with Spain.

Cuba lies at our door, the key to the Caribbean Sea; the key to the Nicaraguan Canal, if that is ever constructed. A condition of anarchy had existed in Cuba for nearly thirty years. Cuba, owing to misgovernment, was a breeding spot for pestilence that ravaged the cities of the United States. The conditions became intolerable. Then came the tragedy of the Maine and war followed. If we freed Cuba, at least we were repaid for that act of generosity. Cuba was freed and the Cuban people profited, but we profited quite as much. In the resolutions which virtually brought on the war we recognized the independence of Cuba. We proclaimed in the so-called Teller resolution—

That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination when that is accomplished to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

That was in 1898. We recognized the republic, for that was virtually what it meant—the independence of the Republic of Cuba. In 1901 we restricted that independence by the so-called Platt amendment. It is true the gentlemen on this side of the House, I think without exception, voted against the Platt amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman pardon me?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. You have said that by the adoption of the Platt amendment we have restricted the independence of Cuba.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Most certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will you explain to the committee in what particular we have restricted the independence of the island by the adoption of that amendment?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am about to do so, if my colleague will bear with me for one moment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I thought the gentleman was about to leave the subject.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I shall not, perhaps, be able to enlighten the gentleman, but I shall at least be able to solve his doubts. By the adoption of the Platt amendment we restricted, I repeat, the independence and sovereignty of Cuba. In paragraph 3 of the amendment we stated "that the Government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba," and so on, in reference to the treaty of Paris. We further reserved the right to take such coaling stations and naval stations as might be hereafter determined by treaty. Does anyone suppose that if Cuba declined to make such a treaty in the interests of good government we would not interfere and do exactly what we pleased? By the Platt amendment—

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly; I am always glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is there any evidence of a purpose on the part of our Government, in the event that Cuba refuses to enter into a treaty, such as is provided in the amendment, that we will intervene for the purpose of compelling transfer or anything of that kind?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, the only argument on which the Platt amendment stands or can be defended is that it is the ultimate outcome of the Monroe doctrine, and as the ultimate outcome of the Monroe doctrine it is necessary, according to the friends of the amendment, that we shall control the key of the Caribbean Sea. There is nothing specific in this, there was nothing specific in the Teller resolution, to suggest that we would take back part that we had granted. Nothing. In fact, there was everything to lead the average individual to suppose that we would never limit the sovereignty of Cuba, and yet we have done it.

Mr. PALMER. Just ask him how.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It is a mere question of splitting hairs—a mere question of splitting words—go on.

Mr. TAWNEY. A great many gentlemen around me are, together with myself, anxious to know how you interpret or how you conclude that we have limited the sovereignty of Cuba by the Platt amendment, when they are entirely free under that amendment to enter into reciprocal trade agreements with any country in the world, and when we do nothing more than to prevent them from entering into a treaty for the purpose of transferring that sovereignty to some other power.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have sat at the feet of the gentleman from Minnesota so often and absorbed from him sweetness and light that I am glad he comes to me for information. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; but I am not getting it very rapidly.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the gentleman will only have patience—he is to have seven hours later [laughter]—if he will only bear with me until I can speak for five minutes I will explain to him.

The gentleman asks how have we limited the independence of Cuba when we have "generously" permitted her to make trade agreements or commercial treaties with any other country—

Mr. TAWNEY. Or any other treaty—

Mr. McCLELLAN. Let me finish my sentence.

Mr. TAWNEY. Or any other treaty, except a transfer of her independence.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Pardon me, the only possible treaty under the terms of the Platt amendment into which Cuba can enter is a treaty of commerce, for the reason that we have guaranteed her independence. She can not agree to reduce that independence; she can not agree, even if she would, to become a part of any other country. She can not permit a foreign garrison to come on the island of Cuba if she wants to. She can not have any foreign relations except with the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN. She can not make an offensive and defensive alliance with any other country.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly she can not; and the permission that we have given her to make a trade agreement amounts to nothing, for what country would make a commercial treaty with Cuba knowing that if Cuba were to violate its terms, like some Latin-American republics, that she would be powerless either directly or indirectly even to request her to live up to the terms of that treaty without having to answer to the United States?

During the pendency of the Cuban constitutional convention the delegates of that convention sent to Washington certain representatives. Those representatives asked the President to make some arrangement of reciprocity for the benefit of Cuba. Congress was not in session and the President could make no pledge. It has been testified before the committee, it is a matter of common rumor, that while the President declined to make any such agreement because he had not the power, that he dismissed the delegates with one of those happy phrases for which he will always be remembered. "Go," said he; "trust the United States." We can not pay his memory a more respectful or a greater tribute than by showing that in his estimate of his countrymen he was not mistaken. [Loud applause.]

All witnesses who appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means, Cuban sugar growers, Government officials, even gentlemen from the central western part of the United States, representing beet sugar, conceded that economic conditions in Cuba were, if not to-day, at least would be in the immediate future, desperate.

Mr. TAWNEY rose.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Does the gentleman desire to ask me a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Excuse me. I have become so accustomed to answering questions from the gentleman that I thought he desired to ask me another.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will allow me to suggest, those statements before the Ways and Means Committee were in January last and this is the month of April, and we have not yet seen the evidences of that distress.

Mr. McCLELLAN. A case of Christmas in April. [Laughter.] The census of 1899, as I remember the figures, shows that 58 per cent of the rural real estate in Cuba has been mortgaged and 79 per cent of the urban real estate. Three-fourths of the people of Cuba depend directly or indirectly for a livelihood upon the raising and the manufacture of raw sugar. Upon the success or the failure of the sugar crop depends the very life of Cuba.

The world market for sugar is overstocked. It has been estimated that on October 1, 1901, the world's supply exceeded the world's demand by 1,812,355 tons. The stock on hand waiting a possible rise in price, or waiting an increase of the demand, is growing greater every day. This extraordinary condition of affairs has been brought about by the bounty and cartel systems of Europe.

When the production of beet sugar assumed serious proportions on the Continent, governments at once began to impose excises for revenue purposes, as they had on almost every taxable commodity produced. For the purpose of encouraging the beet-sugar industry both Germany and France, as well as Austria, inaugurated, nearly twenty years ago, a system of export drawbacks. On sugar leaving the country the excise tax was returned; but as the amount of the excise was intentionally computed upon a lower yield of sugar per ton of beets than what was actually produced, the drawback operated as an indirect bounty on exportation.

Under this stimulus the production of beet sugar largely increased and an overproduction soon resulted; that is, more was produced than the world was willing to absorb at a profitable price. Accordingly, in some countries the indirect bounty was abolished and a direct bounty paid on exports, while in other countries a direct bounty was paid in addition to the indirect bounty. Production continued to increase and overproduction again resulted. In Germany and Austria the situation was relieved by the organization of what is called the Zucker-Kartel, which is a combination or trust composed practically of all the beet manufacturers and sugar refiners in Germany and in Austria.

Thanks to a prohibitive tariff, foreign sugar can not be marketed. Taking advantage of this fact, the cartel buys from its members all the beet sugar they can raise. It then apportioned among the refineries a sufficient amount of sugar to meet the home demand, fixing the price at somewhat less than that at which foreign sugar can be sold, plus the prohibitive duty. In this way the sugar manufacturer of Germany and Austria receives not only the direct bounty of the Government for the sugar that he exports, but also an extraordinary and artificial profit from the sale of sugar at home. While it costs 1.8 cents to make a pound of sugar in Germany, it is sold at Hamburg for export at 1.47 cents a pound, one-third of a cent less than the cost of production.

In the United States our beet-sugar growers are protected not only by the countervailing duty against bounty-fed sugars, amounting virtually to the amount of the bounty paid, but also by a direct protective duty amounting to about 94 per cent ad valorem. The United States consumed about 2,400,000 tons of sugar during the year 1901, of which amount she imported 1,600,000. Of this Cuba supplied 580,000 tons, the East Indies 300,000 tons, the British West Indies 110,000 tons, South Africa 100,000 tons, Germany 225,000 tons, and the remaining 285,000 tons were imported from various sources. The United States is therefore not a very wide field for European sugar, owing to the countervailing duty.

England is the market for which all Europe has been competing ever since the existence of the bounty system. Sugar is sold in London at 2 cents a pound, at a profit to the continental producer, while the same grade is sold in Germany for 8 cents and in France for 10 cents.

The result of this artificial condition has been the constant reduction of the price of bounty-fed sugar. This constant fall in price caused by a further overproduction brought continental economists to a realization of the gravity of the situation. Eleven unavailing efforts had been made in international conferences to come to some general understanding upon the subject of bounties.

Conditions last year were so serious that another conference was held at Brussels, which has at last reached an agreement. The only alternative to a still further increase of Government bounties was the entire abolition of the bounty system, and this is the radical step that has been taken in the Brussels convention. After the 1st of September, 1903, the contracting parties, including every European power but Russia, are to abolish all direct and indirect bounties, while the surtax on imported sugar is limited to a maximum of 5.50 francs on a hundred kilograms of raw sugar, being an equivalent of 0.481 cent per pound avoirdupois, and 6 francs per hundred kilograms of refined sugar, being an equivalent of 0.525 cent per pound avoirdupois. This means that the margin between the excise tax levied on domestic sugar and the customs tariff imposed on foreign sugar shall never exceed a maximum of 5.50 francs in the one case and 6 francs in the other per hundred kilograms.

The effect of the abolition of bounties and of a reduction of the surtax to a minimum will immediately result in the disruption of the cartel in Germany and in Austria, for the cartel can only exist because of the bounties and of the enormous margin between the domestic excise and the customs duty. As sugar costs the German producer something like 1.8 cents per pound, and as it is selling for export at the world price of 1.47 cents per pound, the abolition of bounties and the disruption of the cartel must increase the world price of sugar to the cost of manufacture plus a profit. Professor Wiley, of the Agricultural Department, has estimated this increase of price at four-tenths of a cent per pound.

The first effect of the Brussels agreement was the fall in the price of sugar to the equivalent of 3½ cents in New York for raws 96° polarization. It is probable that this price may still further fall during the coming year, because as there are only two crops which will receive the benefit of bounties and the cartel, producers will strain every effort to make those crops as large as possible.

In other words, the supply will more than ever exceed the demand, and consequently the world price will certainly not go above its present figure. When the Brussels agreement goes into effect in 1903, there will be enormous quantities of sugar in storage that have not been consumed, estimated at at least 1,000,000 tons. This surplus sugar must be absorbed and production must be reduced to balance the supply under the new and natural conditions before the price of sugar will advance. When the effects of the artificial stimulation to production have passed away, then the world price of sugar will advance and be controlled by the economic law of supply and demand.

As Germany is the largest producer of sugar in the world, the world price of sugar is fixed at her principal port of export, Hamburg. The price of sugar in New York at any time will, therefore, be the Hamburg price plus freight and shipping charges, duty, and countervailing duty. The following statement will explain my meaning:

Parity of 88° analysis beet sugar and 96° polarization cane sugar, per 100 pounds.
Beet sugar, at 69 f. o. b. Hamburg, per 112 pounds	$1.47
Freight, 7.6 per ton	.083
Insurance, bank commission, loss of weight, ¼ per cent	.022
Duty (88° analysis outturns 94° polarization)	1.615
Countervailing duty (German sugar)	.26
Lighterage at New York	.03
Difference in value to refiners between 88° analysis and 96° polarization	.19

Parity of 96° polarization cane centrifugal..... 3.67

The price of sugar at Habana free on board ship at any time will be the price at New York less duty, freight, and shipping charges.

There are two standard grades of raw sugar produced in Cuba—centrifugal, polarizing at 96°, and molasses sugar, polarizing at 89°. The price of centrifugal sugar 96° test in New York yesterday was 3½ cents, while the price of molasses sugar is 2½ cents. These prices will scarcely increase permanently until the Brussels convention is in full force and operation. It is even probable that they will fall.

The Dingley duty on a pound of 96° centrifugal is 1.685 cents, making the bond price at New York 1.815 cents. To ascertain the shipping charges, freight and commission, I have drawn from the testimony of witnesses appearing before the Committee on Ways and Means. For freight, I have taken the figure given by the witness Leavitt, 0.11 cent per pound, which is below that given by witnesses not appearing in the interest of beet sugar. Insurance is 1 per cent, weighing 0.01 cent, brokerage and charges 0.01, loss in weight and test 0.02, commission 2½ per cent, making the total freight and shipping charges for a pound of sugar at the present price 0.252 cent. This deducted from the New York bond price makes the Habana price, f. o. b., 1.563 cents per pound.

To ascertain the average cost of a pound of sugar f. o. b. at Habana I have averaged the figures submitted by eight witnesses who appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means—namely, Col. Bliss, United States collector of customs at Habana, Messrs. Atkins, Hawley, Machado, and Fowler, for reciprocity, and Messrs. De Castro, Oxnard and Saylor against reciprocity. As those appearing in the interests of the beet-sugar trust made ridiculously low estimates, and some of those appearing in the interests of reciprocity rather higher estimates, the average of their figures would appear to be a fair statement of the cost. It is exactly 2 cents a pound. As the price f. o. b. at Habana is 1.563 cents, and as the average cost of producing and placing on shipboard a pound of sugar is 2 cents, the loss to the Cuban planter is 0.437 cent.

The price of molasses sugar is so low and the cost so comparatively high that very little is now exported to the United States. The amount is so small that it may be left entirely out of consideration, and the total crop exported may be considered as consisting entirely of 96° centrifugal sugar. It has been estimated that the total crop of Cuban sugar that will be ready for the market after May 1 will amount to about 850,000 tons or 1,904,000,000 pounds. As the loss per pound to the Cuban planter at the present market price is 0.437 cent, the total loss on this year's crop will amount to $8,320,000, or 21.8 per cent of the cost of production. This estimate is more than conservative.

Some authorities have estimated the loss upon the present crop as high as $23,000,000, but assuming that it will only be $8,320,000, it is none the less appalling. The average total cost of the government of Cuba under three years of American rule has been about $17,000,000. In other words, if no relief is given there will be a loss of nearly one-half the total cost of government. The present crop will necessarily be marketed, even at this enormous loss, for the alternative is the sacrifice of the entire crop of 850,000 tons, costing an average of $44.80 per ton, or a total of $38,080,000.

Next year, however, with credit gone, with no hope of making a profit, it is perfectly evident that the Cuban planter must close his mills, let his fields go to waste, discharge his workmen, and face bankruptcy. As three-fourths of the people of Cuba are employed directly or indirectly in the production of sugar, and as the entire population depends for prosperity on the prosperity of the leading industry, the bankruptcy of that industry must necessarily mean ruin to Cuba, to be followed by the inevitable consequences—starvation, riot, bloodshed, and revolution.

This loss of eight million and odd dollars is the emergency that confronts Congress to-day. It must be prevented if we are to permit Cuba to become prosperous, if we are to permit Cuba to sell her stock of sugar without loss.

Among the various arguments that have been used against this bill one stands out before all others. It has been urged that no reduction of the Dingley rate on sugar can be made that will not inure solely to the benefit of the American Sugar Refining Company, otherwise known as the sugar trust. The gentlemen who have urged this argument have shifted their ground repeatedly. They first said: "Of course, the sugar trust will derive the sole benefit from any reduction on Cuban sugar, because the sugar trust is the sole purchaser that Cuba has, and can therefore fix the price of sugar."

The sugar trust has a total capacity of 40,000 barrels a day. Independent refiners, of whom there are ten, three being controlled by the same parties, have a total capacity of 20,000 barrels a day. The custom to-day in Cuba is for the planter to sell directly to the agent of the refiner. There is nothing to prevent him selling upon the New York market. Sugar is sold upon the New York market as sugar, according to its saccharine strength. There is no particular brand of sugar as there is of cigars. Sugar is sold as sugar and it is impossible to distinguish as to the origin of the different kinds of cane sugar of the same polarization and color. If it is possible for the American Sugar Refining Company to derive the full benefit of this revenue, or any benefit by fixing the price of Cuban sugar, it must necessarily follow that there can be two prices for the same article at the same place and at the same time, and if the price of sugar is fixed at Hamburg, as it is, this is impossible.

The next contention of these gentlemen who believe that the sugar trust would derive the full benefit of the reduction of the Dingley rate was that, as in the case of Porto Rico, the reduction would be solely for the benefit of the sugar trust, because Porto Rican sugar failed to reach the price of Cuban sugar by 0.13 of a cent.

My distinguished colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LONG], to whom so much is owing in bringing this bill before the House, never did a better day's work in his life, of the many good day's work that he has done, than when he proved the absurdity of this position. Gentlemen who have maintained it were so ignorant that they compared an inferior grade of Porto Rico sugar with a superior grade of Cuban sugar, but when Mr. LONG brought these two grades to a parity in saccharine strength, the price was practically identical.

The last contention was that the entire crop of Cuban sugar has been sold, or that options on it have been sold, to the American Sugar Refining Company.

Mr. THAYER. Has the gentleman any means of knowing, or can he ascertain to a certainty, what portion of the vast crop of sugar from Cuba has already been pledged or sold to the sugar trust of this country?

Mr. McCLELLAN. You mean the present crop?

Mr. THAYER. The crop now ready for sale.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It is not all ready for sale; but I have seen a statement, made on the 2d of April, which was not reduced to tons, and I did not have time to reduce it—I think my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], stated it in his speech—I am told that he did—showing the exact amount in tons.

Mr. LACEY. I can give my friend from New York the statement showing the figures.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. THAYER. From what source were the figures derived?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Let me read these letters signed "Wood, military governor."

Copy of cablegram received at War Department April 2, 1902.

HABANA, ———.

EDWARDS, War Department, Washington:

Telegrams sent to 194 sugar centrals, to which 136 answers have been received to date; also telegrams sent to 36 Cuban banking firms, to which 34 replies have been received.

Figures, according to replies received, as follows:

	Long tons.
Output for the year to March 25.....	584,259
Amount actually in hands of planters.....	217,531
Sold and delivered to island firms.....	194,913
Contracted for in the island and not yet delivered.....	43,578
Pledged as security for loans in the island, but not sold.....	255,222
Held at the option of the American Sugar Refining Company.....	3,285
Held at option of other American purchasers.....	2,285
Exported to the United States.....	25,646

All sugar above mentioned, except that at the option of American Sugar Refining Company and other American purchasers, is in the hands of Cuban planters and Cuban and Spanish commission houses doing business in the island of Cuba and is not at the option of anyone. Where held as security for loans advanced to planters, the planters will get the advantage of any raise in price under conditions of deposit, as is the custom in the island. This statement shows conclusively the absolute falsity of the declarations that the sugar trusts have control of considerable portion of Cuban sugar crop. Other statements will be furnished as soon as possible.

WOOD, Military Governor.

Received at War Department April 7, 1902.

HABANA, April 7, 1902.

Captain EDWARDS.

War Department, Washington:

Reference your telegram to-day, telegrams sent to 194 sugar centrals, as previously reported in my telegram 2d instant. Ten additional replies received since, which report as follows:

	Long tons.
Output for the year.....	24,755
Amount in hands of planters.....	13,290
Sold and delivered.....	11,311
Contracted for with island firms, but not delivered.....	3,019
Pledged as security for loans in island, but not sold.....	1,546

All sugar above mentioned is in hands of planters and Cuban and Spanish commission houses doing business in the islands with the exception of 2,385 long tons exported to United States. None at option of American Sugar Refining Company nor other American purchasers. Where held as security for loans, planters will get advantage of rise in price, as stated in telegram 2d instant. Two remaining banking firms replied: "Do not make loans on sugar." Above amounts should be added to my cable of April 3. No change in situation.

WOOD, Military Governor.

In other words, the sugar trust will not benefit from any reduction. The sole beneficiary of any reduction will be the Cuban planter.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether it is not a fact that as to all the sugar which has been sold or contracted for at a given price the provisions of this bill will not benefit in any wise the planters of Cuba. That is true, is it not?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly; but the amount is infinitesimal.

Mr. FINLEY. One question more. Will the gentleman agree to an amendment to except from the provisions of the bill this class of sugar—sugar which has been sold or contracted for at a given price?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have no objection to that; as will be developed in my remarks a little later, I am ready to go still further to join the gentleman in far more radical methods of controlling the sugar trust, if I have the opportunity.

Mr. FINLEY. I am not alluding to the sugar trust; I am alluding to the sugar which has been sold or contracted to be sold at a given price.

Mr. McCLELLAN. You mean for delivery in this country.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes; for delivery in this country.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I think it would scarcely be fair to except sugar contracted for to be delivered in Cuba, because a great many of the Cuban local refiners contract with the small cane growers in advance, not necessarily as to price; but the ordinary custom is that they contract for a certain amount of sugar at what shall be the market price when the sugar has been ground and produced.

Mr. FINLEY. I think I understand the gentleman. I have studied this bill somewhat, and read the various reports connected with it, and listened to the arguments on it. From the information that I have thus far derived I am convinced that the only argument in favor of the bill is that it is calculated to benefit the Cuban people, the sugar producers. Now, when you take away or when you give to others than the Cuban planters the benefit which will accrue under this bill, does not that destroy the argument which has been made up to this time in favor of the bill? In other words, is it not right and consistent to confine the benefits arising out of this bill to the Cuban planters and producers of sugar?

Mr. McCLELLAN. If it can be done practically, I agree with you.

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman not think that this bill can be so shaped and framed?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I should be very glad to join the gentleman in an effort in that direction, but I think it would be only right to apply the same provision to all other Cuban products, although sugar is the great product, and on the same principle it might be wise—

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that I am willing to apply the same principle to all other products.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am willing to join the gentleman in the effort at any time.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Is there any refined sugar in Cuba sold in the United States?

Mr. McCLELLAN. No.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Is not all the Cuban sugar, or nearly all of the Cuban sugar, brought here and handled by the sugar-trust refineries?

Mr. McCLELLAN. No; but I should say, roughly, it is handled by the sugar trust in the proportion of about 4 to 2 or 2 to 1.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. It goes through the sugar trusts.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Not all of it.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. They purchase that which they sell to the American consumer.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly, they do not get it free. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Texas. They do not charge a toll for refining, do they?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Oh, yes, they do; about a cent.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. But the great quantity of Cuban raw sugar comes to the American refineries, and is refined and sold to the American consumer.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I should say that two-thirds was refined by the sugar trust and about one-third by independent refiners.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKMAN. About what proportion of the sugar production of Cuba is used in the United States?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Oh, virtually all, except a small amount. Cuba is poor and hard up, and she can not now afford the luxury of sugar for home consumption.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Do I understand that the gentleman agrees that the entire benefit of this reduction is to go to the Cuban planters?

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like at this point to enlarge a little on that subject. The beet-sugar people have made their opposition to this bill on the ground that reduction in the Dingley rates will so stimulate the prosperity of Cuba, and so stimulate the production of cane sugar, that we will become an exporting instead of an importing country in sugar. If the production of sugar in Cuba becomes sufficiently large—were that much desired state of affairs to come about—then our market price will be fixed by the law of supply and demand.

To-day the market price is fixed in Hamburg, and as long as we import any large amount or any appreciable amount of Hamburg sugar, the price in New York will be fixed in Hamburg. Just as soon as we begin to export the price will be fixed in New York by the law of supply and demand, and then must necessarily fall to the consumer. Of course the result of that would be that while the sugar trust might be driven out of business, the excellent Mr. Oxnard would probably be driven out of business at the same time, and that is what the beet-sugar industry fears. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I want to simply ask you if you agree with the gentleman from New York?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have no doubt that at present a 20 per cent reduction—

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Would have no effect on the sugar consumed.

Mr. McCLELLAN. No; I am afraid not.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Has not the Cuban producer of sugar already a protection that no other producer has?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Oh, no. Mr. Oxnard to-day has conceded himself that he has an ad valorem protection of 94 per cent on his product.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I say no foreign producer of sugar.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Inasmuch as there is no countervailing duty the Cuban producer has; but the gentleman forgets there is no bounty paid on Cuban sugar.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. But there is a countervailing duty charged here against all sugar grown elsewhere.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly, certainly, certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Then does he not get the advantage of that?

Mr. McCLELLAN. As far as it goes; but the gentleman forgets the fact that the German sugar raiser can sell his sugar at the port of Hamburg for 1.47 cents a pound, which cost him 1.80 cents a pound to raise, thanks to the bounty and the cartel. If the gentleman listened to the hearings, according to Professor Wiley, who takes the same position that the gentleman does, and who made little stump speeches every quarter of an hour against reciprocity—Professor Wiley says that the countervailing duty only countervails direct bounty and does not in any way reach the operation of the cartel. [Applause.] In other words, Cuba is not as well off as any country of Europe.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. If the gentleman will allow me—

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the gentleman will excuse me, I should like to have a chance to say something myself.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. McCLELLAN. To my esteemed friend, certainly. [Laughter.]

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I should like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the Indian Government has countervailed against the cartel?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes. We have not; but we ought to.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Does not that establish a precedent?

Mr. McCLELLAN. It establishes a precedent which we ought to follow, but we have not followed it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I understood you to say we could not follow it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Nothing of the kind. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. I said we have not followed it. I have not said that we ought not to follow it. I have said that our countervailing duty is absolutely insufficient to meet the countervailing duty which results from the cartel. The gentleman would have understood that if he had only listened to me, but I can not expect that of him. [Laughter.]

This bill consists of one section divided into four parts: First, a declaration of the purposes of the bill; second, certain conditions precedent upon the accomplishment of which by Cuba a horizontal reduction of 20 per cent on the part of the United States will come into effect, limited to a period of one year and eight months, which is the fourth part of the bill.

If the friends of the bill are accused of trying to make the least possible concession, of trying to save their faces, of trying to protect beet-sugar, and of trying, by refusing to consider the removal of the differential, to protect the American Sugar Refining Company, they have nobody but themselves to blame.

The bill has been attacked by my colleague the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] on the ground that it is sentimental legislation. That kindly, gentle soul tries to pose as being filled with the wormwood and the gall of cynicism, wishing to be paid for fulfilling an obligation cent per cent at market value. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Nevada sees fit to insist that Cuba must be annexed before she will be permitted to be prosperous. If the courteous highwayman, placing a revolver at my chest, asks me to give him my watch and pocketbook, I have the option to refuse, of course. The gentleman from Nevada offers Cuba the choice of starvation or annexation. Of course she can decline to be annexed.

For the benefit of the gentleman from Nevada let me suggest to him that there is a business side to this proposition which will even satisfy his dark and piratical soul. [Laughter.] The alleged purpose of the bill is to acquire reciprocal trade relations with Cuba. For the past three years our trade with Cuba has been steadily falling—that is, the imports into Cuba from the United States have been steadily decreasing. In 1899 the total imports from the United States to Cuba, excepting coin, were $29,580,657, as against $36,728,028 from other countries. In 1900 the imports from the United States had fallen to $29,225,123, as against $37,239,344 from other countries, while in 1901 the imports from the United States had fallen to $28,017,820 and from other countries had risen to $38,554,982.

The avowed purpose of this bill is to acquire for the United States the $38,554,982 of trade now furnished by foreign countries. During the past year there have been bought by Cuba from the United States of beef and meats other than fresh, $64,732, as against $1,917,016 from other countries; of rice—and this is a product belonging to the district and the State of my colleague, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON]—of rice, $3,481, as against $3,332,019. Oh, what an opportunity for Louisiana! [Laughter.] Of garden vegetables, $868,223 from the United States, as against $1,255,902 from other countries; of wine, $6,493, as against nearly $1,846,989 from other countries; and so on, and so on.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly, my piratical friend. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEWLANDS. The gentleman proposes to secure trade with Cuba which now goes to other countries?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. By this reciprocal arrangement?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman be good enough to state how it is to be accomplished? Is it to be accomplished by the reduction of 20 per cent upon the present Cuban tariff to American products, or is it to be accomplished by maintaining the present tariff so far as American products are concerned, and increasing the tariff 20 per cent as to all foreign products outside of America?

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the gentleman had not shown something of undue impatience, I was about to make a statement which would have obviated the necessity for the question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wished to ask the gentleman whether that is not the way in which they propose to do it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I was going to answer the gentleman's question with another—[laughter]—a case of teacher and scholar. Is the 20 per cent reduction on the present Cuban tariff, which is, after all, a revenue tariff, of the kind the gentleman approves? Is that 20 per cent reduction sufficient to give us a monopoly of the Cuban market? If it is not, it will be necessary for Cuba to increase her tariff as against the world. My idea is that the simplest way, and there is a way certainly of making a monopoly of the Cuban market, will be for the gentleman to join with me in my efforts later on, when this bill is read under the five-minute rule, to increase the reduction to 50 per cent or 40 per cent or 33½ per cent, which will most certainly give the United States a monopoly of the Cuban market. [Loud applause.]

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman answer me this question: Does he not understand that the Cubans propose to make this effective in giving America control of the Cuban markets by letting the present revenue tariff remain, so far as American products are concerned, and increasing the tariff on other foreign products? And I wish to ask the gentleman whether, so far as it is developed, the representatives of Cuba do not in that way propose to turn Cuba from a tariff for a revenue system to a protective-tariff system, and thus secure protection to American interests?

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the gentleman fears that unrighteous result let him join me in reducing it 50 per cent.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I desire to ask the gentleman if he limits his ambition to a reduction of 50 per cent?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have limited my ambition to a reduction of 50 per cent for this reason: In view of the fact that Cuba is a new Latin republic it is probable that she will have to depend upon her customs revenue for the purposes of government until we permit her to become prosperous, and therefore a greater reduction than 50 per cent would probably so far curtail her revenue as to disorganize her financial system. I would cheerfully vote for free trade with Cuba, if that is any satisfaction to the gentleman.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I thought that was what the gentleman would come to.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly. But she can not get on without a customs revenue.

Some of the opponents of this bill have professed to see a grave objection in the reciprocal feature of the bill. I know that two of my committee colleagues have in their reports suggested, one directly, the other by implication, that my Democracy is not sound, because I believe in reciprocity.

I know that some gentlemen on this side are inclined to look on reciprocity with grave doubt, fearing lest it will prevent the ultimate triumph of the great and sacred doctrine of free trade. They believe in free trade, and failing in that they do not want any reduction in the tariff. [Laughter.] Now, I may be right, and I may be wrong, and I should like to read to them certain quotations from the fathers, who until recently have never been suspected of being other than Democrats.

I may call to their attention the fact that the first treaty of reciprocity was negotiated by Franklin Pierce, a Democratic President. The Hawaiian treaty of reciprocity was renewed by a Democratic President, Grover Cleveland. The platform of 1892 proclaimed the doctrine, but what I want to call their attention to is the "report on the privileges and restrictions on the commerce of the United States in foreign countries," sent to the House of Representatives (this same House) on December 16, 1793, some years before my two committee colleagues became members. It was submitted by the then Secretary of State, Thomas Jefferson. In it he says:

Such being the restrictions on the commerce and navigation of the United States, the question is, in what way they may best be removed, modified, or counteracted?

As to commerce, two methods occur: First, by friendly arrangements with the several nations with whom these restrictions exist, or, second, by the separate act of our own legislatures for countervailing their effects.

There can be no doubt but that of these two, friendly arrangements is the most eligible. Instead of embarrassing commerce under piles of regulating laws, duties, and prohibitions, could it be relieved from all its shackles in all parts of the world, could every country be employed in producing that which nature has best fitted it to produce, and each be free to exchange with others mutual surpluses for mutual wants, the greatest mass possible would then be produced of those things which contribute to human life and human happiness; the numbers of mankind would be increased and their condition bettered.

Would even a single nation begin with the United States this system of free commerce it would be advisable to begin it with that nation, since it is one by one only that it can be extended to all. Where the circumstances of either party render it expedient to levy a revenue by way of impost on commerce its freedom might be modified in that particular by mutual and equivalent measures, preserving it entire in all others.

Some nations, not yet ripe for free commerce in all its extent, might still be willing to mollify its restrictions and regulations for us in proportion to the advantages which an intercourse with us might offer. Particularly they may concur with us in reciprocating the duties to be levied on each side, or in compensating any excess of duty by equivalent advantages of another nature. Our commerce is certainly of a character to entitle it to favor in most countries. The commodities we offer are either necessities of life or materials for manufacture or convenient subjects of revenue, and we take in exchange either manufactures—when they have received the last finish of art and industry—or mere luxuries.

Such customers may reasonably expect welcome and friendly treatment at our market. Customers, too, whose demands, increasing with their wealth and population, must very shortly give full employment to the whole industry of any nation whatsoever, in any line of supply they may get into the habit of calling for from it.

But should any nation, contrary to our wishes, suppose it may better find its advantage by continuing its system of prohibitions, duties, and regulations it behooves us to protect our citizens, their commerce and navigation, by counter prohibitions, duties, and regulations also. Free commerce and navigation are not to be given in exchange for restrictions and vexations, nor are they likely to produce a relaxation of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I ask unanimous consent that I may conclude my remarks. I have been interrupted so much. I will not take long.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I know that some earnest protectionists object to this reciprocal feature of the bill; they brush aside the cheap sophistry that reciprocity is "the handmaiden of protection," and know that this is the first step in the direction of a revision of the tariff and the reduction of the preposterous Dingley rates. This argument may have terrors for Republicans, but it should have no terrors whatever for Democrats.

The bill before us provides for a reduction of all Cuban products—but in considering it we should consider sugar chiefly—of 20 per cent. The present loss to Cuba under the Dingley rates, assuming that the present crop will amount to 850,000 tons, and that Cuba can market it at yesterday's price of 8½ cents per pound, will amount to $8,320,000. A 20 per cent reduction will still show a loss of $1,904,000 on this year's crop, or 5 per cent of the total cost.

A reduction of 25 per cent will still show a loss of $305,000, or eight-tenths of 1 per cent on the cost. It is not until we reach a reduction of 33½ per cent at the present price that we find a profit of $2,380,000, or 6.2 per cent profit on the cost of the present crop. In other words, this bill in its 20 per cent feature must be defended on the ground not that it permits Cuba to market her crop at a profit, but on the ground that it does partially reduce the loss. It is not a complete fulfillment of our pledge; it is only a step toward that fulfillment.

It has been further said by the distinguished chairman of our committee that the time has been limited to the 1st of December, 1903, because the Brussels convention will be in force then and sugar will go up a cent a pound, and Cuba will make a profit of 50 or 60 per cent on the cost of the crop. Professor Wiley, the most hidebound of all the representatives of the beet-sugar industry who appeared before us, only claimed, when trying to make out the best possible case for beet sugar, that the Brussels conference would increase the price of sugar four-tenths of a cent a pound. Assuming that it does, assuming that it goes up one-half a cent, and that would be 4 cents a pound, under the Dingley rate that would represent a profit of less than a million dollars on the total crop of 850,000 tons, or the magnificent profit of 2½ per cent and not 50 or 60 per cent.

Assuming that the result of the Brussels conference only brings sugar up to 3½ cents per pound, there will be no 50 or 60 per cent profit, but a loss of $1,871,000, or 3.6 per cent on the cost of production.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does the gentleman regard it as the duty of the United States from year to year to save Cuba from loss on sugar production?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I regard it as the sacred duty of the United States, having taken willingly and cheerfully an obligation, having contracted a debt, to pay it back in full. [Applause.]

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well. The gentleman proposes to make a reduction of 50 per cent, which will give the Cuban planter $15,000,000 more than they would receive under the present rates and at the present price of sugar.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Oh, no.

Mr. NEWLANDS. How much, then?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Twenty per cent shows a loss of $2,000,000 and over.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What I contend is that the gentleman proposes a reduction of 50 per cent, which will give them $15,000,000 more than they would receive if they accepted the world's price of sugar to-day.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Hardly that. I grant the gentleman it would give them a profit. It would give them 15 per cent profit on the present crop.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Cuba has 850,000 tons. Our present duty is $34 a ton, which would make it about $30,000,000. Now, if the gentleman proposes to reduce that 50 per cent, does it not mean that the Cuban planter will receive $15,000,000 more than they would receive by accepting the world's price?

Mr. McCLELLAN. No. The gentleman forgets the shipping charges and the costs. The gentleman forgets that the total reduction is not going back to Cuba in a lump sum to the planter; you have got to figure it out from the start down. If the gentleman figures it out that way, I have not the figures showing what it would be at 50 per cent. At 40 per cent it shows a profit of $4,512,000.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask the gentleman from New York if the Cuban planters would not receive under a 50 per cent reduction $15,000,000?

Mr. McCLELLAN. He would receive the difference of 50 per cent of 1.685.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would like the gentleman to answer how much they will receive in addition to the world's price of sugar.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Cuban planter receives to-day the price at Habana, which is the New York price less the duty and the shipping charges. But the gentleman must understand that the cost is greater by 0.315 per cent than the New York price. Now, if we give the Cuban planter 40 per cent reduction—I speak of 40 per cent only because I have the figures on that basis—I am trying to deal fairly and openly with the gentleman, and not to dodge any question that might arise upon a basis of 50 or 60 or 75 per cent reduction—if you give him a 40 per cent reduction on the present price he would receive a profit on every pound of sugar of 0.237 of a cent. Now, under the Dingley rate he will be receiving at Habana a price of less than 2½ cents, while the price at New York would be 3½ cents. He would be getting a cent less than the New York price.

Mr. NEWLANDS. These figures are entirely confusing to me—

Mr. McCLELLAN. Well, I can not guarantee that I will print my speech to-night, but when it is printed, if the gentleman will sit down and study it, or if he will read my report, which is short, I think this question will be perfectly clear to him. I do not want to keep the House here much longer—

Mr. NEWLANDS. I want the gentleman to state in gross the amount which the Cuban planter would receive if this 50 per cent reduction should take place in addition to what he receives to-day.

Mr. McCLELLAN. As I have already tried to explain to the gentleman, he would receive—

Mr. NEWLANDS. Can the gentleman state the specific amount?

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the gentleman would take his very active pen in hand—a pen that never grows weary—and multiply the difference between a loss of 0.315 of a cent and a profit of 0.237 of a cent and multiply that by 1,904,000,000, he will get his answer. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCOTT. Allow me to ask the gentleman one question. The gentleman's colleague [Mr. PAYNE] stated to the House in his opening address that if this reduction were made the Cuban product could be sold at a reasonable profit. The gentleman on the floor now tells us, in contradiction of his colleague, the chairman of the committee, that if this reduction be made the crop will be sold at a loss.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. Now, both of these gentlemen being members of the Committee on Ways and Means, and having given this matter thorough study, are entitled to be called experts. It seems to me, then, that this ought to be with them not a matter of conjecture, but of positive demonstration. I should therefore like the gentleman on the floor to tell, if he can, briefly how it happens that he has arrived at one conclusion and his colleague on the committee at another conclusion, while they are presumably figuring upon the same basis of facts.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I may suggest to the gentleman that my colleague on the committee, as well as my colleague in the delegation [Mr. PAYNE], possesses a bright and cheerful nature. He has not exaggerated, but he has taken the rosy view of everything that he has come in contact with. He has assumed, for instance, that the Brussels convention will raise the price of sugar 1 cent a pound, when, to be perfectly frank, there was no evidence before the committee that such would be the case. I do not mean to imply that the gentleman has undertaken to mislead the House; I think he is wrong, that is all.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to continue where I left off—

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman permit me to make a little calculation?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Most cheerfully, only I would rather not, because I do not want to detain the House.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN] declines to yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. No, I do not decline; the gentleman is always so charming and so persistent that I can not.

Mr. NEWLANDS. As I understand it, the present duty on sugar is about $1.70 a hundred pounds—

Mr. McCLELLAN. How much?

Mr. NEWLANDS. One dollar and seventy cents.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Oh, no; $1.68½ per 100 pounds of centrifugal 96° polarization. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEWLANDS. Which is about $34 a ton. Now, it is proposed that Cuba shall import into this country 850,000 tons. Multiplying that by $34 a ton—

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. You make very nearly $30,000,000.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Which the Government would receive as a duty on that sugar.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Granted.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the gentleman proposes to reduce that 50 per cent, it necessarily means that the Treasury of the United States loses $15,000,000 and that the Cuban planters gain $15,000,000. Now, I want to ask the gentleman whether he thinks it is the duty of this country to forever save the Cuban planters from loss year after year; if the property remains in the present condition, to give them out of the taxes of the Treasury, imposed upon our people as an additional price for sugar, $15,000,000?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I will answer that by asking the genial though somewhat cynical gentleman from Nevada another question. The gentleman proposes, as I have suggested, to seize Cuba, to lay violent hands on Cuba and forcibly annex her, giving her the choice of starvation.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Not at all.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That being the case, the Treasury, which the gentleman desires to protect with all the industry and energy that are in him—and both are great—the Treasury will not lose $15,000,000, but the people of the United States will lose the whole thirty-three millions under annexation.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is true, and the Cuban planters will get $30,000,000 more than under existing conditions, but they will then be Americans—not foreigners—and as American citizens will have the benefit of the laws that apply to the entire country.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes; and the gentleman wants to do it. I have no objection to the reduction of rates, but I have to the method employed.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Provided the duty remains the same. Let me ask another question. The gentleman says there is a compensating—

Mr. McCLELLAN. Oh, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Chairman!

Mr. NEWLANDS. The gentleman says there is a compensating loss in the imports into Cuba of the manufactured products of this country, the products manufactured by the trusts. Now, then, does he say that they will get an additional profit of $15,000,000?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Oh, the trust; no. I settled that question before. Mr. Chairman, I must really go on.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask if the gentleman will yield now to a motion to rise and then take the floor in the morning?

Mr. McCLELLAN. It will take me only a few minutes to finish, and I would rather go on now. There is one other point that has worried the gentlemen on this side of the House, and that is this: Gentlemen who are strict construers of the last party platform have sought in vain in the Kansas City platform for light and leading on this subject. They have sought in vain, for there is a higher principle involved than is contained in any mere iteration of words, and that is, that the good faith of the United States should be as good as the bond of any other nation. [Applause.] The great expounder of the Kansas City platform has expressed himself on this question. Let me read from the Commoner, William Jennings Bryan, editor and proprietor, Lincoln, Neb., March 14, 1902, and I submit this most respectfully to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]:

The beet-sugar business of this country amounts to about $5,000,000 annually. To protect this, Congress is willing to perpetrate injustice—tax millions of consumers and ignore popular demand. Of course it is a Republican Congress.

In his message to Congress Mr. Roosevelt said:

"I must earnestly ask your attention to the wisdom—indeed, the vital need—of providing for substantial reduction in the tariff duties on Cuban imports into the United States."

The Republicans in the House propose to make a 20 per cent reduction, which, according to General Wood, is by no means sufficient, and there are indications that on this point some Republicans in the House are determined that justice shall be done the Cubans somewhere reasonably in line with the suggestions made by General Wood. This will be another opportunity for President Roosevelt to test himself and for the American people to test Mr. Roosevelt.

The Chicago Record-Herald, a Republican paper, says that on this question "American honor is at stake." The Record-Herald says that the Republican majority "has made a sorry exhibition of itself in its anti-Cuban caucuses." It remains to be seen whether Mr. Roosevelt will compromise upon this "vital need" and accept whatever sop to Cuba the trust magnates are willing for the Republican leaders in the House to bestow.

[April 4, 1902.]

American consumers are taxed on 2,000,000 tons of sugar in order to benefit the producers of 100,000 tons of beet sugar. The beet-sugar syndicate is in the saddle.

Of course the men who arbitrarily fix the price of sugar beets are weeping most copiously at the thought that the beet raiser may be ruined by tariff concessions to Cuba.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. For what purpose does the gentleman read that?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I read it for the purpose of giving light and leading to Democrats upon this side of the House, including the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is nobody who questions Mr. Bryan, is there?

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman accept him on all propositions?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I think the Democracy preached by William Jennings Bryan is pretty sound Democracy, nine cases out of ten. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The effect of the enactment of this bill in its present form will be that Cuba will market this year's crop, with good luck, with comparatively small loss; but as no hope is held out for the future, and as planters are not going to continue in business without a reasonable prospect of profit, next year's crop will be reduced to almost nothing, and the threatened bankruptcy of the new Republic will sooner or later occur.

A 33½ per cent reduction, or even a 25 per cent reduction, would give the planters of Cuba a slight profit for the present, a slight profit for next year's crop, and a certainty of considerable dividends as soon as the Brussels convention is in full operation. But we are under obligations to the new Republic, not only as a nation, but as individuals, by our several votes for the Teller resolutions and the Platt amendment, and so if the majority sees fit to limit the payment of that obligation in the interests of a selfish, greedy, beet-sugar trust, we are perforce compelled to follow them in that part payment.

We are under an obligation to Cuba of our own seeking, an obligation that should not be fulfilled in part, but entire. The word of the United States should be as good as the bond of any other nation. This bill does not completely fulfill our obligation; it is not all that it ought to be, but at least it is a step in the right direction. It does not afford sufficient relief to Cuba, but it does minimize the loss on the present crop of sugar. It is possible, but by no means certain, that a 20 per cent reduction of the Cuban rates will be sufficient to give us the monopoly of the Cuban market.

The bill is an enunciation of the Democratic doctrine of reciprocity; it is a breach in the wall of protection, and lowers in part, at least, the preposterous Dingley rates. If I am afforded an opportunity I shall try to amend by increasing the rates of reduction so as to make certain not only the control of the Cuban market by us, but also the prosperity of Cuba. I shall also try to amend by striking out the time limit. Failing in these amendments, I shall be constrained to vote for the bill; I can not see how I can do otherwise as a Democrat and as an American. I can not see how the Democratic party can take any other position.

Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested to those of us who take the position that this bill does not accomplish all it should, that it is only a partial fulfillment of our obligation, but that none the less we should vote for it, failing to amend—it has been suggested to us that we are making a mistake, that we are failing to take political advantage of the opportunity afforded to us by our opponents. It has been suggested to us that we ought to let the Republican party shoulder the responsibility of failing to give any concession to Cuba.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there are questions that rise above petty politics; that there are questions involving the dignity and the honor of the United States, on which there should be no division. If I have erred in my position, if I am mistaken in the way in which I intend to vote, I am willing to take the responsibility, conscious of the fact that I have done my duty to the best of my ability, according to the light God gave me. [Loud applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12765) to provide for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10117. An act granting a pension to Sarah H. H. Lowe; and

H. R. 10530. An act to repeal war-revenue taxation, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 1025. An act to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service;

S. 3513. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Parkville, Mo.;

S. 5046. An act for the promotion of anatomical science and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 4284. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JOHNSON, for one day, on account of important business.

To Mr. ELLIOTT, indefinitely, on account of important business.

LOWELL M. MAXHAM.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. McCALL, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Lowell M. Maxham, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation for quarters for marines at Culebra, P. R.—to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with accompanying documents, a response to the inquiry of the House in relation to the transport service between San Francisco and the Philippine Islands—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 5078) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Esseltine; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DOLLIVER introduced a bill (S. 5079) for the relief of George P. White; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5080) granting a pension to Hester A. Farnsworth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5081) granting an increase of pension to John D. Pickard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5082) granting an increase of pension to John W. Harvey;

A bill (S. 5083) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Fell;

A bill (S. 5084) granting an increase of pension to James Devor;

A bill (S. 5085) granting a pension to Abigail Campbell;

A bill (S. 5086) granting an increase of pension to William M. Cockrum;

A bill (S. 5087) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Carter;

A bill (S. 5088) granting a pension to Maggie E. Knight;

A bill (S. 5089) granting an increase of pension to James H. King; and

A bill (S. 5090) granting an increase of pension to Edwin W. Harleman.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 5091) to grant land warrants to the Delaware Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. McCUMBER. To accompany the bill, I present a memorial of the Delaware Indians, which I move be printed as a document and referred, together with the bill, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARMACK introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5092) for the relief of the estate of Henry Sewell, deceased (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5093) for the relief of W. W. Fussell; and

A bill (S. 5094) for the relief of the estate of John Henley, deceased (with accompanying papers).

Mr. CARMACK introduced a bill (S. 5095) for the relief of William M. Henry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 5096) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. May; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5097) granting an increase of pension to Albert E. Osborne; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 5098) for the relief of the county of Flathead, State of Montana; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BEVERIDGE introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5099) granting a pension to Spencer Woods (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5100) granting an increase of pension to William P. Marshall (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 5101) granting an increase of pension to Thaddeus K. Miller (with an accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 5102) granting an increase of pension to John B. Glover (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 5103) to promote the efficiency of the clerical service in the Navy of the United States, to organize a clerical corps of the Navy of the United States, to define its duties, and to regulate its pay; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SIMON introduced a bill (S. 5104) granting a pension to Reuben F. Canterbury; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KITTREDGE introduced a bill (S. 5105) fixing the terms of the circuit and district courts in and for the district of South Dakota, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURNHAM introduced a bill (S. 5106) granting an increase of pension to Horace L. Richardson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 5107) for the relief of Maurice Langhorne; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5108) granting an increase of pension to Leonard F. Otey; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 5109) granting an increase of pension to Lewis M. Gillaspie; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5110) for the relief of Stephen Bird, executor of John Bird, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 5111) for the erection of a public building at Richmond, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5112) for the relief of the estate of R. J. H. Hatchett; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced a bill (S. 5113) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon to be used for a hall of records; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BURTON introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5114) granting an increase of pension to Joel E. Cox;

A bill (S. 5115) granting a pension to Ann Wilburn; and

A bill (S. 5116) granting an increase of pension to John Clay.

Mr. BURTON introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5117) granting an increase of pension to John U. Allen;

A bill (S. 5118) granting an increase of pension to Adam Stuber;

A bill (S. 5119) granting an increase of pension to Samuel S. Walch;

A bill (S. 5120) granting an increase of pension to James W. Evans;

A bill (S. 5121) granting an increase of pension to Winfield S. Maxwell;

A bill (S. 5122) granting an increase of pension to William S. Burch; and

A bill (S. 5123) granting an increase of pension to James McMorro.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5124) for the relief of James A. Carroll; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LODGE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 77) providing for printing the general index to published volumes of the Diplomatic correspondence and foreign relations of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for the purchase of land belonging to heirs of M. H. Schneider, adjoining the present Garfield Memorial Hospital land on the west, in the District of Columbia, and for leveling and improving the same, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $206.02 for burial expenses of Elmer B. Gavett, late lieutenant, Thirty-ninth Infantry, United States Volunteers, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for military posts from $1,500,000 to $1,700,000, and providing for the expenditure of $200,000 of said amount in the erection of additional buildings at Fort Lincoln, N. Dak., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McENERY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,785.55 to pay E. A. McIlhenny for rescuing, housing, feeding, clothing, and caring for shipwrecked sailors in the Arctic Ocean in the years 1897 and 1898, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BACON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000 each to pay the rental for suitable rooms and accommodations for the holding of the circuit and district courts in the northern district of Georgia at Athens, Ga., and at Rome, Ga., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MALLORY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $29,000 for continuing the improvement of the Indian River, Florida, between Goat Creek and Jupiter Inlet, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN HANDFORTH.

Mr. DEBOE. A few days ago I introduced a bill (S. 4641) for the relief of Benjamin Franklin Handforth, and it was referred to the Committee on Claims by mistake. I move that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

MICHAEL HAYES.

Mr. MARTIN. On the 18th ultimo the bill (H. R. 6847) to correct the military record of Michael Hayes was adversely reported from the Committee on Military Affairs and indefinitely postponed. I was not present when that order was made. I should like to have the bill go on the Calendar with the adverse report. I ask that the order indefinitely postponing the bill may be set aside, and that the bill be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the bill referred to by the Senator from Virginia was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. PENROSE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted Benjamin F. Hasson to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in his case, copies of the same having been left in the files, as provided by clause 2 of Rule XXX.

REGULATIONS FOR EXCLUSION OF CHINESE.

Mr. PATTERSON. I submit a resolution for immediate action. The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to supply the Senate the regulations promulgated December 8, 1900, relating to Chinese exclusion, or regulations of any date subsequent to October 1, 1900.

Mr. PATTERSON. I wish to state that there was some dispute yesterday as to whether the regulations contained in the pamphlet which was issued on the 1st of October were all the regulations concerning Chinese exclusion. I am informed that regulations subsequent to October 1 have been issued and are not contained in the pamphlet which was printed last night under the order of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I did not hear the Senator's statement.

Mr. FORAKER. Let the resolution be again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution, and the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Is not that the pamphlet which is on our tables this morning?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to inquire whether the pamphlet on our tables includes all the regulations or not.

Mr. PATTERSON. No; it does not. The pamphlet contains the regulations up to October 1, but regulations were issued, as I am informed, December 8, after the promulgation of the regulations that are on our tables.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado to insert the words "send to the Senate" instead of the word "supply." "Supply" is not our usual phrase in such a direction.

Mr. PATTERSON. Very well; let the resolution be so modified.

Mr. FORAKER. Before the resolution is voted upon, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado, who is more familiar with this publication than I am, whether it contains the dates at which the regulations that are here published were adopted by the Treasury Department?

Mr. PATTERSON. Immediately following the title-page you will find a letter from T. V. Powderly, Commissioner-General, under date of October 1, 1900.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand, but I have not yet been able to find anything in the publication showing at what time the regulations were adopted, whether they were in force, for instance, at the time of the enactment of the law of 1892, or whether they were adopted subsequently thereto. I supposed when I sent the compilation to the desk yesterday, and asked that it might be printed as a Senate document, that it contained all the Treasury regulations which had been adopted and are in force, and that it gave the dates when they had been adopted. I got the publication from the Senator from Colorado, and I supposed from what he told me about it that it had all that information in it. What I call attention to now is the apparent lack of the dates, and I request that the resolution may be so amended as to call for that information also.

Mr. PATTERSON. Any amendment that will make the information we get more definite will be very gratifying to me. The letter of Mr. Powderly shows that the compilation is made up to date, and the date is October 1, 1900. What I desire to have for the information of the Senate are the regulations which, I understand, have been promulgated since that time, and which are not now before the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not suppose any Senator has an objection to that, but we are furnished with certain regulations of the Treasury Department which the publication shows were at some time in the past adopted, but what I want is the dates when the regulations were adopted.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then I suggest that there be incorporated in the resolution a request that the Secretary of the Treasury will also inform the Senate when the several regulations that are contained in Document No. 291 of the Senate were adopted or promulgated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado modifies his resolution. The Secretary will read it as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to send to the Senate the regulations promulgated December 8, 1900, relating to Chinese exclusion, or regulations of any date subsequent to October 1, 1900, and also that—

Mr. BLACKBURN. You use the word "or." It should be "and."

Mr. PATTERSON. Where the word "or" is used insert "and." Now let the Secretary read it entire as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to send to the Senate the regulations promulgated December 8, 1900, relating to Chinese exclusion, and regulations of any date subsequent to October 1, 1900; and also that he will inform the Senate when the several regulations in Document No. 291 of the Senate were adopted or promulgated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS IN COLORADO.

Mr. TELLER. I send to the desk a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Postmaster-General be, and hereby is, directed to report to the Senate the amount of salary required to be paid to each of the postmasters in the State of Colorado named on the memorandum schedule hereto attached, or to their heirs, for services as postmasters in each biennial term specified on such memorandum schedule, in order to make effective sections 473, 474, and 475 of the postal regulations of 1896, and the act of June 12, 1896, section 8, and the act of March 3, 1883, as construed by Postmaster-General Gresham in an order dated June 9, 1883, addressed to Hon. Frank Hatton, First Assistant Postmaster-General, and in a declaration as to the intent, meaning, and requirement of said statutes furnished for publication to the press through Chief Clerk Walker on February 16, 1884, and printed as Exhibit A, Senate Executive Document No. 148, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. As near as I can ascertain from the reading of the resolution, it has reference to a very old controversy, and I hope the Senator from Colorado will allow it to go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. TELLER. It does not have reference to a very old controversy.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, a controversy since 1883.

Mr. TELLER. Yes. That is not very old. I have no objection to the reference of the resolution if the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will ever report it. If they do not I shall endeavor to have it brought before the Senate in some shape. We have attempted for some time to get from the Government archives a report as to what the books of the Government show. There is a considerable number of claims in Colorado, and the aggregate amounts to about $15,000. The claims run all the way from $50 up to $500 and $600.

Mr. ALLISON. The amount is not large as applied to Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. The resolution applies only to Colorado.

Mr. ALLISON. It applies only to Colorado, but of course whatever is done with Colorado will be done with other States, and it involves several million dollars in the aggregate.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know about that; but if the money is due from the Government of the United States to these people the Government ought to be able to pay it.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, they ought. I agree to that.

Mr. TELLER. And the Government ought to be bound by its own books. If the books show that this money is due to these claimants, the Government ought to pay it. If the committee do not report the resolution, I intend to press this matter for action in some shape until we do get the information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. I understood the Senator from Colorado to agree that it shall be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Iowa objects to its consideration, of course I will agree to the reference.

Mr. ALLISON. I do object to its adoption without a reference.

Mr. TELLER. I understood that the Senator objected. I should not myself desire a reference to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2960—the Chinese-exclusion bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2960) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all possessions and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, to my mind this bill is uncalled for, unnecessary, unwise, and un-American. It is harsh in its provisions, unjust in its definitions, and clearly violative of solemn treaty stipulations. It is the kind of legislation that prejudice engenders and unthinking agitation produces. It is a measure aimed at a weak people, and which would never be dreamed of in connection with any nation able to defend itself. It is narrow, bigoted, intolerant, and indefensible legislation. It assumes conditions that do not exist, and aims to correct evils that are purely imaginary. It suggests the want of laws to prevent undesirable Chinese immigration into this country, when the fact is that existing laws are entirely adequate to accomplish that purpose.

The bill comes to the Senate bearing the indorsement of the Pacific coast Senators. It is called a Pacific coast bill, and we are asked to support it because of certain alleged evils that exist on the Pacific coast in connection with Chinese immigration. The authorship of the bill has been somewhat in doubt, and had not the junior Senator from Massachusetts assured the Senate that it is a well-digested measure, one might well have attributed it to the fertile brain of some sand-lot agitator. Fortunately for us all the authorship of the bill has come to light, as will be seen by this extract from the statements made before the Committee on Immigration of the Senate when they had this bill under consideration.

A Mr. Livernash was before the committee, and he was asked by the chairman:

Will you please state whom you represent?

Mr. LIVERNASH. I particularly represent the State of California as a State, under a commission issued by the governor of California, the commission extending to the duty of pleading for California with members of the Congress, with a view to bringing about the enactment of a thoroughly satisfactory law for the exclusion of Chinese immigrants other than those permitted by the convention of 1894 between the United States and China to enter our territory.

I also appear as the commissioned representative of a popular convention held in California in the closing days of November, a convention made up of 1,000 delegates, representing civic, industrial, and other organizations of that State.

I further appear as the friend and associate of the American Federation of Labor, as a result of conferences concerning the bill I purpose, with the indulgence of this committee, to discuss. That bill I feel particularly interested in in that it was drafted by me and has been indorsed and approved first by the California commission, of which I am a member, afterwards by the American Federation of Labor, and subsequently by the Pacific coast Senators and Representatives in Congress.

So this bill was born in the brain of Mr. Livernash, and came into the possession of the Pacific coast Senators after it had been christened and received the blessing of this distinguished advocate of anti-Chinese legislation.

Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is ostensibly the exclusion of Chinese laborers from the United States, but it goes much further than that. A laborer is understood, according to the definition given in the existing law, to mean both skilled and unskilled laborers, including Chinese employed in mining, fishing, huckstering, peddling, as well as laundrymen and those engaged in taking, drying, or otherwise preserving shell or other fish for home consumption or exportation. (Act November 3, 1893, section 2.)

There is no serious difference of opinion as to the wisdom of excluding this class of Chinese from the United States. It has become almost an established policy of this country. Both parties are in favor of maintaining it. The healthy growth of American institutions demands it; the protection of American labor demands it. We are nearly all in favor of the exclusion of Chinese laborers, but I wish to point out that the present bill goes very much further than the necessities of the situation demand. This is evident from a cursory examination of the bill. Take the last clause of section 3, for example:

Every Chinese person shall be deemed a laborer, within the meaning of this act, who is not an official, a teacher, a student, a merchant, or a traveler for curiosity or pleasure, as hereinafter defined.

This is the drag-net provision which will catch every Chinaman who attempts to enter this country. The ostensible openings in this drag net are in the shape of the five exempt classes, and are more illusory than real. Let me first call attention to the definition of "teacher" as given in the bill:

The term "teacher," used in this act, shall be construed to mean only one who, for not less than two years next preceding his application for entry into the United States, has been continuously engaged in giving instruction in the higher branches of education, and who proves to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer that he is qualified to teach such higher branches and has completed arrangements to teach in a recognized institution of learning in the United States and intends to pursue no other occupation than teaching while in the United States.

This provision means, if it means anything, that only such Chinese as may have been invited to become professors in our colleges and universities can come to this country. The only American university that is looking for a Chinese scholar, so far as I know, to fill the professorship of Chinese language and literature is Columbia University. There is a possibility that Yale and Harvard may also be thinking of doing the same thing. In any case the number of Chinese which the bill allows to come to this country under this head is practically restricted to three or four. Let me ask, did the Chinese Government have only three or four persons in mind when it inserted the word "teacher" in the treaties? No reasonable man will think so.

Now, let us take the definition of "student" as given in section 7 of the bill.

The term "student," used in this act, shall be construed to mean only one who intends to pursue some of the higher branches of study, or to be fitted for some particular profession or occupation for which facilities of study are not afforded in the foreign country or the territory of the United States whence he comes, and for whose support while studying adequate provision has been made, and who intends to return whence he came immediately on the completion of his studies.

I read the text as it was originally in the bill as reported from the committee. It has not been materially modified. This is a definition not to be found in any dictionary and utterly unwarranted. Surely China did not have it in mind when the treaty was negotiated. One of the conditions for the admission of a student to this country is that adequate facilities for study are not afforded in the foreign country whence he comes. This clause practically excludes all who may wish to come to the United States as students, for there are advanced schools and established colleges in China. There is an imperial university in Peking, another university in Tientsin, and another in Canton. Now, if young men are not allowed to enter this country unless "no adequate facilities for study" are afforded in China, this absolutely restricts the number of admissible students to a very small number. Now, why do American students go to Europe for study? Not because facilities for study in Europe are greater than those afforded in America. We know that students often go to this or that college because of a wish to study under this or that professor. Professor Dwight used to attract students to the Columbia Law School. The same may be said of Professor Dana, of Yale, and Professor Cope, of the University of Pennsylvania. This provision of the bill leaves out entirely the personal element that often governs a student's choice of a college. It is impossible that the Chinese Government should have understood the word "student" in the very narrow and restricted sense of post-graduate study given to it by this bill.

It has been said that the restriction of the exempt classes of Chinese to officials, teachers, students, merchants, and travelers has been acquiesced in by the Chinese Government, but I have documentary evidence to the contrary. In the treaty of 1880 it is expressly provided that only laborers come within its purview, "other classes not being included in the limitations." The treaty of 1894 modifies the treaty of 1880 only so far as to give the United States the right of absolute exclusion of laborers, which it did not have under the treaty of 1880. The rights of other classes than laborers are not affected in any way by the treaties. They are to enjoy the rights, immunities, and exemptions accorded to the most favored nation. For sixteen years—that is, from 1882 to 1898—the executive branch of the Government recognized only two classes of Chinese in the administration of the Chinese-exclusion laws, namely, Chinese laborers and Chinese other than laborers. This distinction is clearly made in the act of May 5, 1892, and the act of November 3, 1893. In section 6 of the act of May 5, 1892, it is made obligatory upon Chinese laborers to register and take out certificates of residence, while it is optional with Chinese persons other than laborers to do so. And the same distinction appears in the act of November 3, 1893.

In 1898, four years after the ratification of the treaty of 1894, the last treaty made between the United States and China, without a moment's notice, the uniform practice of two Republican and two Democratic Administrations was completely reversed by an opinion of Attorney-General Griggs. He held that only five classes of Chinese, mentioned in the treaty of 1894, could be admitted, and Treasury regulations were issued in pursuance of that opinion refusing admission to capitalists, bankers, physicians, lawyers, bookkeepers, salesmen, traders, clerks, keepers of restaurants, etc. It is idle to say, as has been contended, that it has been the uniform practice of our Government to restrict the right of admission to officials, merchants, teachers, students, and travelers. Now, has the Chinese Government acquiesced in the new interpretation put upon the treaties and laws by Attorney-General Griggs? I refer you to "Foreign Relations of the United States for 1899" for an answer, and I beg to call attention to a note of the Chinese minister at this capital to the Secretary of State upon this subject, dated November 7, 1898 (Foreign Relations, 1899, pages 189 to 194), especially the last part of the note. Also Minister Wu's note to the State Department of December 10, 1901.

These documents show clearly that the Chinese Government did protest at the time against the narrow interpretation of the treaties and statutes by the Attorney-General of the United States. I am informed that the Chinese Government, through its minister at Washington, has continued to protest against this narrow and forced interpretation, as is evidenced by the note addressed by the Chinese minister to Secretary Hay on this subject, bearing date December 10, 1891, which has been transmitted to Congress and printed.

Now, as long as there is a difference in interpretation of a vital point of the treaty, it seems hardly courteous to the Chinese Government to embody the disputed points in legislation in defiance of the views and opinions of that Government. We do not do that in our intercourse with England and France. Take the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, for example. Our Government has held that it is no longer in force, but as there was doubt about it, a treaty was recently concluded with Great Britain with a view to its formal abrogation.

The same may be said with respect to the Alaskan boundary dispute. If we were to act toward Great Britain in the same way as we propose to do toward China, we should occupy all the disputed territory in Alaska without any more ado and abide by the consequences. If we were to act in this way, we would probably have a war on our hands in short order. Then why should we act in this way toward China? This is a matter for diplomatic negotiation and not for Congressional action. There is a difference of opinion in the interpretation of the existing treaty provisions between the two Governments. If we insist that our interpretation is right, and act accordingly, China has good reason to complain of our arbitrary proceedings. She may be too weak to retaliate, but she is sure to cherish ill feeling against us, which will take a long time to remove.

I wish to call attention to the provision in the bill which makes it necessary for all Chinese in the United States, merchants, students, and other members of the exempt classes, to take out a certificate of registration with a photograph attached; and persons who fail to obtain such certificates are presumed to be laborers and not entitled to remain within the territory of the United States, and are liable to arrest at any moment. This will give the Chinese in this country no end of annoyance, and subjects them to arrest at the caprice of the customs and immigration officers. If this bill becomes a law, few if any self-respecting Chinamen will come to this country. I am supported in this assertion by the statement contained in a letter which was printed in the Washington Times of last Sunday, from the pen of a learned and distinguished Chinaman.

Again, the Chinese minister has recently written a letter to the State Department, dated March 22, 1902, drawing attention to the objectionable clauses of the bill, pointing out that if this bill is passed it will prevent all respectable Chinese from coming to the United States, in consequence of which the present friendly relations between the United States and China will be endangered. This letter, at the request of the Chinese minister, has been transmitted by the Secretary of State to the Senate and has been referred to the Committee on Immigration. I have also read in the papers that the Chinese Government in Peking, through Mr. Conger, our minister, has requested our Government to be reasonable and not violate treaty obligations in our new legislation with respect to the Chinese. Thus great concern is manifested by the Chinese Government and her people, and we should exercise great caution in all legislation which affects the interests of foreigners.

The recent communication from Minister Wu Ting-fang to Hon. John Hay, Secretary of State, is so important that I think I may well beg the indulgence of the Senate to read it. It will be remembered that this letter was written only two or three weeks ago.

No. 240.]

CHINESE LEGATION, Washington, March 22, 1902.

SIR: When the Chinese Government consented in 1880 to a modification of the treaty of 1868, whereby the free immigration of Chinese laborers into the United States was restricted, it was provided in the treaty that where the legislation of Congress authorized by that convention was likely to work hardship on the Chinese subjects the minister in Washington would be permitted to communicate with the Secretary of State, to the end that mutual and unqualified benefit might result.

In making use at this time of the privilege granted in the cited treaty provision, I desire not to be understood as antagonizing the just provisions of pending legislation or influencing Congressional action, but to bring to your attention, and through you to Congress, some of the hardships which will inevitably result to the subjects of China in case some of the proposed legislation should become a law. Should I remain silent until the bills now before Congress be enacted into a law, it will then be too late to remedy the evil. I trust, therefore, that what I say to you may aid the honorable Congress in making a right conclusion on the subject.

I desire especially to direct attention to the bill S. 2060, which has been reported to the Senate from the Committee on Immigration. In the concluding paragraph of the report which accompanies the bill it is said:

"There can be no doubt that under a wise, humane, and fearless enforcement of this act the importation of Chinese laborers will be prevented and the ingress of Chinese merchants and others of the exempt classes facilitated, and that the present relations between the United States and China will be strengthened thereby."

I feel it my duty to say to you, and through you to the Congress which will soon be called to act upon this bill, that if it becomes a law it will have just the contrary effect from that stated by the committee. It can not fail to seriously disturb the friendly relations which have up to the present existed between the two Governments and peoples.

I do not wish to go into the different provisions of the bill in detail, but I should like to call your attention in a general way to its effects. It restricts the privileged Chinese persons, other than laborers, to come to the United States to only five classes, viz, officials, teachers, students, merchants, and travelers, in direct contravention to the treaty of 1880, in Article I, where it states that the limitation or suspension of immigration shall apply only to laborers, "other classes not being included in the limitation." So also the history of the negotiation shows that it was the intention of the two Governments that laborers alone were to be excluded. Under the bill there would be excluded bankers, capitalists, commercial agents or brokers, and even merchants who come only to make purchases; also scholars and professors, of which there are many in China of high attainments; also physicians, clergymen, and many other classes which do not fall under the five classes exempt by the bill. The provisions of the bill as to the five exempt classes are so restrictive as to practically nullify the treaty in regard to them. The definitions as to teachers, students, and merchants are so contrary to the spirit of the treaty as to make them almost impossible of observance.

A woman married according to the Chinese custom to a person of the exempt classes would be prohibited from entering the country, because according to the provision of the bill it is necessary that the marriage shall be legal and binding by the laws of the United States.

The bill requires that all Chinese laborers now in the United States shall undergo a new registration. It will be remembered that my Government remonstrated against the first registration that was proposed under the Geary law, and only consented to it at the earnest request of the Secretary of State at the time. All the Chinese laborers submitted to that requirement and were registered, and now it is proposed to nullify all that and subject them to the annoyance and trouble of a new registration. It is an unnecessary hardship and should not be required.

The bill also contemplates the registration of all merchants and of others of the exempt class. This can not be required under the treaty, but the bill attempts to obviate that obstacle by making the failure to register a serious prejudice of their rights.

I have heretofore complained to you of the great hardships to which laborers, merchants, and others are subjected after they have been admitted to the United States and are lawfully domiciled in this country. Past experience shows that Chinese have been arrested by the wholesale, placed in jeopardy, and subjected to molestation and insult. When found innocent, no redress is obtained for such illegal arrest. Persons charged with being unlawfully in the country and taken before a court are denied the privilege of bail, but must remain in jail until their case is decided. The bill, in place of providing some relief for these hardships, rather adds restrictions thereto.

The provisions with regard to transit across the United States imposed by this bill are almost impossible to be complied with, because people who are passing through the United States en route to other countries do not know the laws of the country, and they can not understand the intricate rules and regulations made by the Commissioner-General of Immigration.

The report of the committee says that "the greatest degree of fairness and justice to the exempt classes will be insured by the provisions of the bill, which provides better means for the investigation and disposition of their claims." And again it says: "The features of the bill * * * will tend to protect the worthy immigrant in his treaty rights and privileges."

I have referred to the fact that the provisions as to the admission of the exempt classes are in direct violation of the treaty; and in addition to this the bill provides that the exempt classes must submit their right to admission to the adjudication of the Immigration Bureau, which, as I showed in my note to you of December 10, last, was a purely ex parte investigation, where the claimant was not permitted to confront the witnesses, was deprived of the privilege of counsel, and was excluded from an appeal to the courts. I can not understand how the committee can style this "the greatest degree of fairness and justice," or how the "worthy immigrant is protected in his treaty rights and privileges." It seems to me, on the contrary, that his treaty rights are taken away from him.

The provisions of the bill above referred to, and others which might be cited, place so many restrictions upon Chinese persons and require them to comply with such strict provisions that no Chinese having the least respect for himself would submit to such indignities and come to this country. I fear the effect of the bill, if it becomes a law, will be that Chinese merchants will not come here to buy goods nor students come for educational purposes.

Another feature of the bill must be alluded to. The new possessions of the United States, such as Porto Rico, the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippines, and others which may hereafter be acquired, are subjected to its provisions. It can not be claimed that they were considered when the treaty was negotiated, and it is hardly just or in accordance with international comity that the treaty should be extended to them without the consent of China.

I have received repeated instructions from the Imperial Government, in view of the reenactment of the exclusion laws, to exert myself to see that treaty rights are observed and that no unnecessary hardships are placed upon Chinese subjects, and I feel that on account of the pendency of the legislation referred to I could not refrain from asking you to lay before the honorable Congress the views above set forth. You know that in regard to the exclusion of laborers my Government and myself have stood ready to cooperate with your Government in making the treaty prohibition effective. But with regard to the exempt classes who seek to come here for trading, educational, and other legitimate purpose, I must earnestly protest against the unwarranted and unjust provisions of the bill. In place of "insuring the greatest degree of fairness and justice," as stated by the Immigration Committee, it would impose such indignities and hardships upon these classes that few, if any, would come here. And notwithstanding the sincere wish of my Government and myself to maintain and cement closer the friendly relations between the two countries, I greatly fear that those friendly relations would be endangered by the enforcement of the act.

Accept, sir, the renewed assurance of my highest consideration.
WU TING-FANG.

Hon. JOHN HAY,
Secretary of State.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask to whom that communication was addressed, Mr. President?

Mr. GALLINGER. It was addressed to the Secretary of State.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask the Senator what he thinks of the propriety of a minister of a foreign government sending a communication here and trying to influence legislation?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Secretary of State evidently thought it was proper. If anybody is to blame, it is not the minister who represents the Imperial Government of China, but it is an officer of the United States Government; and my impression is that the Chinese minister has the undoubted right to do this, and that there is a propriety in his communicating respectfully through the Secretary of State his views on this subject.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me, I will call his attention to the fact that the letter which he has just read was written by the Chinese minister in accordance with a provision of the treaty—

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Which reserved to him the right to communicate to this Government at any time in regard to the operation of our laws enacted under the treaty, with a view to securing exemption from hardships to which the subjects of China might otherwise be subjected.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is precisely as I understand the matter.

Mr. FORAKER. I suggest, therefore, that there was no impropriety in the Chinese minister addressing such a communication to the Secretary of State.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have already called attention to that fact.

Mr. President, a large number of commercial bodies have petitioned the present Congress for the appointment of a commission to study industrial conditions in the Orient, and two bills are now before the Committee on Commerce looking to the appointment of such a commission, which was recommended in two messages by the late lamented President McKinley. In view of that fact, among others, my feeling is that we ought to reject the bill now under consideration and reenact the existing law. There we stand on firm ground, without running the risk of giving offense to the Chinese Government or doing violence to ourselves by abrogating solemn treaty obligations.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Does the Senator know whether the Chinese Government has protested against the restrictions of the existing law?

Mr. GALLINGER. I know, Mr. President, that the Chinese Government, through its minister, has protested against the interpretations placed upon existing law.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Then, would the Senator think it advisable to reenact the existing law in the face of those protests?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, Mr. President, I would think it advisable. I choose always the lesser of two evils, and as we have got along comfortably well under the existing law I can see no earthly reason why we should now enact a law that is so much harsher in its provisions and that emphasizes to such a degree the very objections which have been raised by the Imperial Government of China.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from New Hampshire perhaps is not aware that there are cases—more than one—pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, in which a question is raised to the effect that the treaty of December 8, 1894, abrogates and repeals the sixth section of the act of 1882 as amended by the act of 1884 and as extended ten years by the act of 1892? Now, suppose the Supreme Court of the United States should hold that that contention is good, and you pass a bill here simply extending the existing law, in what kind of a position would this country be left under such a decision? We should simply have no law at all on the subject of exclusion, nothing relating to the exclusion of Chinese except the treaty of 1894.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss legal questions with these distinguished lawyers.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is a very important question, bearing right on the subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that, and I will answer the Senator in my own way.

Mr. MITCHELL. All right.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will answer just as a country doctor would naturally answer a learned member of the legal profession, by saying that I am not aware of any duty that rests upon us to determine in advance what the Supreme Court of the United States is likely to decide in a pending case. I think we had better wait, and not cross the bridge until we come to it.

I will say, furthermore, to the Senator from Oregon that, if I have correctly read the existing treaty with China, we have a good deal of protection under the treaty in the very matters which are in controversy here. I do not know what the Supreme Court may do in the pending cases, but I have no doubt that the Supreme Court will do justice and will decide them according to law. What the decision of the Supreme Court will be of course is at best problematical.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I merely want to ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] what is the precise question involved in the cases now before the Supreme Court?

Mr. MITCHELL. The precise question, as I understand it—I know it is the precise question in one case, because I have just filed my brief in that case this morning and expect to argue it next week—the precise question in that case is whether the third article, I think it is, of the treaty of 1894 abrogates and repeals the sixth section of the act of 1882 as amended by the act of 1884, which was extended by the Geary Act of 1892 for a period of ten years.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the question for the court to decide?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is the question in that case.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have called attention to the fact, Mr. President, that before the Committee on Commerce at the present time are two bills and a mass of memorials from the commercial bodies of this country, praying us to have a commission appointed to study the commercial and industrial conditions in the Orient, and I take it for granted it is the desire of every Senator to cultivate more intimate commercial relations with China, so that we may obtain our proper share of the Chinese trade.

Again, common sense would seem to dictate that we should treat Chinese of the merchant class with special consideration. Are we doing this by enacting this bill? This is the definition of "merchant" given in the bill:

SEC. 8. That the term "merchant," used in this act, shall be construed to mean only one who is engaged in buying and selling merchandise, at a fixed place of business, and who, during the time he claims to be a merchant, does not engage in the performance of any manual labor, except such as is necessary in the conduct of his business as such merchant.

And where an application is made by a Chinese person for entry into the United States as one formerly or at the time engaged in China as a merchant, or in some other foreign country as a merchant, or where such application calls for entry into one portion of the United States from another portion thereof, then, as a prerequisite to entry, the applicant must have been engaged as a merchant for at least one year next preceding his application; and it must appear to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer at the port of entry that he comes to exercise in good faith his calling as a merchant, and that calling exclusively, and that he has the means under his immediate control for forthwith becoming, and has completed the arrangements for forthwith becoming, the owner, in whole or in part, of a good-faith mercantile business in the United States, or any portion of the territory thereof, a business strictly within the meaning given by this act to the business of a "merchant."

I need not here point out the tedious process that a Chinese merchant who desires to come to this country must go through with to obtain a proper certificate—a certificate, it must be remembered, in the English language, which he does not understand. Now, if I were a merchant and had to comply with all the requirements prescribed in this section in order to be able to land in China, I would think twice before I should take the trip. But after all the certificate is only prima facie evidence.

After obtaining it, a merchant may be refused a landing on the least technicality. Even after landing, his trouble does not end there. While in this country he is liable at any time, if I read this bill correctly, to be arrested and put in jail, just to satisfy the whims of a Treasury or an immigration officer. This is certainly a strange way of liberalizing the existing laws, as is asserted by some Senators this bill proposes.

Suppose the conditions were reversed. Would citizens of this country be willing to submit to the indignities and restrictions heaped upon Chinese merchants by this section? I think not. Such being the case, why should we annoy and molest Chinese merchants in this way? I wish to call particular attention to the provision of the bill which says that a Chinese merchant, in order to be able to come here, must have "completed the arrangements for forthwith becoming the owner in whole or in part of a good-faith mercantile business in the United States or any portion of the territory thereof, a business strictly within the meaning given by this act to the business of a merchant." Now, this will necessarily exclude a large class of persons rightly belonging to the merchant class. How about capitalists, bankers, commercial agents, and others who wish to come to this country to look over the field? All these are excluded.

The animosity of those who drew up this bill against the Chinese and the extreme harshness of many of its provisions are most apparent. As an instance let me refer to section 56, which would not permit any Chinese coming to this country for the purpose of participating in any fair or exposition. Just think of our Government having requested China to take part in the exposition to be held in St. Louis and then telling her she can not send any of her people to this country to participate in it. I am glad to find that even the Senator who is in charge of the bill is willing to have that unreasonable clause stricken out, but it shows the extreme severity and harshness of the bill as it was when reported by the committee.

Mr. President, I will not attempt to trace the connection between the exclusion policy of this country and the increase or decrease of American trade in China. For detailed information I will refer to Minister Wu's note to the State Department of December 10, 1901, pages 15 and 16.

I am of opinion that the exclusion policy of the United States does affect the trade between the two countries, but the connection between the two is such as to be incapable of measurement by exact statistics. It is an economic law that people will buy cheap and sell dear. If there is a difference in the prices of articles of the same quality offered by different parties, the buyer will take the cheapest every time, irrespective of sentiment; but when the prices are the same everywhere, here is where sentiment comes in as a deciding factor. Other things being equal, a man will buy from one who has treated him kindly rather than from one who has given him a kick. This is human nature the world over. I am of opinion that the Chinese are like other people in this respect.

Now, we all want our share of the trade with China. There is no difference of opinion in this regard. All the resources of American diplomacy have been directed to securing an open door in China for American products for the past few years, and every stump in the last campaign resounded with eloquence as Republican orators pictured the great advantages that were coming to this country because of the open door that had been secured in China. Are we now to neutralize the advantages thus gained with so much difficulty by hostile legislation? If we had no competitors in the field, it might not hurt us to treat our prospective customers with discourtesy, not to say insult; but we all know that competition in the Chinese market is keen. The English, the French, the Germans, the Russians, and the Japanese are trying to get all they can. It will not do for us to give our competitors any advantage which they may use against us.

Now, what is our share of the Chinese trade? According to the latest statistics, the total value of exports from the United States to China for 1900 was $15,213,285, but last year, 1901, this total was reduced to $10,287,302. Now, what is the proportion of this trade to the whole trade of China? The total value of all the articles imported into China in 1900 was $148,383,000, and I have not the figures for 1901, but there is no doubt that there is an increase. Judging from those figures, in 1900 our share was less than 10 per cent of the total trade of China, and last year our share was very much less than that, even if we take the same figures of total imports for 1901 as we do for 1900.

Now, are we satisfied with this showing? On the other hand, we find the value of merchandise imported from Germany to China increased from 35,412,000 marks in 1885 to 50,647,000 marks in 1899, and this increase was steady, with the exception of the year 1897. And the increase of trade between Japan and China is even more remarkable. Japan in 1896 sold 13,828,844 yens to China of merchandise; in 1897, 21,325,065 yens; in 1898, 29,193,175 yens; in 1899, 40,257,034 yens, and in 1900, the Boxer year, 31,871,576 yens.

These figures show that the trade between Japan and China is increasing at a tremendous rate. Manifestly, we must be up and doing if we want to have our proportionate share of China's trade. With all the advantages, both natural and geographical, in our favor, we ought to make a better showing. Having now transformed the Pacific Ocean into an American sea, we ought not to impair our chances by unwise action on our part.

The industrial development of our country renders it imperative that we should look to China for a market for our surplus products. Take the cotton industry, for example. China is now our best customer. In 1899 China took $9,823,253 worth of cotton goods from us. This was just before the Boxer trouble. The total value of exports of cotton by the United States in that year was $23,566,914. This shows that China consumed that year about 40 per cent of the total exports of cotton goods of the United States. All Europe took only $1,484,363; British North America took $2,759,164; all Africa took $516,193; all South America, $2,513,957. Now, this shows that the demand of China for our goods is instrumental in building up our cotton industry, especially in the South.

I was surprised the other day to hear a Senator from a Southern State, a State that is having a magnificent development in cotton manufacturing, speak in favor of this bill, although he did say he should support it with great reluctance. I should think he would. On account of the disturbed condition of China at the time of the Boxer trouble the demand for cotton goods suddenly fell to $4,620,998 in 1901, and many cotton mills in the South had to shut down in consequence. I will let Mr. John Fowler, American consul at Chefoo, tell the story.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted as a part of my remarks Advance Sheets of Consular Reports, dated March 19, 1901, which discuss this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The reports referred to are as follows:

[Advance Sheets of Consular Reports, March 19, 1901.]

EFFECT OF BOXER TROUBLE ON UNITED STATES TRADE.

The uprising in North China broke out, as is well known, in the month of June, 1900; the press of the entire world has since that time been full of accounts of the events that transpired in this section. They have treated nearly every phase of this subject, and, while we know how our countrymen suffered in North China, I have not seen any statistics published showing the loss involved to merchants in the United States; and believing that such statistics, taken from the Chinese customs returns, will prove of interest I submit the following as showing—

WHAT THE BOXERS COST THE AMERICAN EXPORTER.

To do this fairly it will be necessary to adhere to the Chinese values, where given, instead of the gold values, which are not the same for the periods under review, and I am compelled to include the months of April and May (which were unusually prosperous), as the returns are published by quarters and do not show the trade by months.

CHEFOO.

Imports of merchandise specially termed American for the quarter ended June 30, 1900, and same period of 1899.

Articles.	1899.	1900.	Increase.
Drills .....	30,474	33,098	2,624
Jeans .....	3,440	3,800	360
Sheetings .....	140,305	178,230	37,925
Flour .....	86,650	193,994	107,344
Oil, kerosene .....	994,040	2,214,980	1,220,940

The above shows enormous increases in the classes termed American, and I am aware that all other lines of imports from the United States showed the same prosperity. These figures are all the more remarkable when it is borne in mind that while covering a full quarter they actually represent the imports for two months and ten days—i. e., to June 10. After the 15th of June the imports ceased, all commercial transactions being absolutely nil. For a clearer understanding the returns for the following full quarter are given:

Imports of merchandise specified as American for the quarter ended September 30, 1900, and the same period of 1899.

Articles.	1899.	1900.	Decrease.
Drills .....	46,810	3,714	43,096
Jeans .....	2,760	200	2,560
Sheetings .....	134,530	22,515	112,015
Flour .....	153,275	19,225	139,050
Oil, kerosene .....	857,100	5,000	852,100

Of course, all other lines fell off likewise, and yet Chefoo and the interior saw no armed hordes, no military movements, and, as compared with the immediate northern ports, was peaceful. As a matter of fact, Chefoo was the base for communication with the allies and the world, while Shantung was comparatively quiet, owing entirely to the friendly stand taken by the governor, Yuan Shi Kai; yet there were more riots and tumults in my district than ever known before, and the various American mission losses will probably total $150,000 gold. But the idea of this summary is not to show what America lost in China, but what Americans lost in America through the Boxers in China.

TIENTSIN.

Imports of merchandise specified as American for the quarter ended June 30, 1900, and the same period of 1899.

Articles.	1899.	1900.	Increase.	De-crease.
Drills.....pieces..	239,869	73,320	-----	166,549
Jeans.....do.....	22,445	10,470	-----	11,975

Oil, kerosene.....gallons..	585,000	713,600	128,600	-----

It will be seen by the above that the effects of the Boxer movement were felt much earlier and more seriously in Tientsin than in Chefoo. During the month of June Tientsin was practically closed to the world; yet it is odd to notice that oil showed a gain, especially when it is known that the Boxers boycotted that commodity first of all things foreign. I know of ships loaded with Oregon lumber that reached Taku and were unable to land their cargoes, thus entailing an enormous loss upon the American lumber trade. One American firm paid through this office over $5,000 gold on demurrages alone on this account, besides losing the sale of the lumber destined for Tientsin.

Imports of merchandise specified as American for the quarter ended September 30, 1900, and the same period of 1899.

Sheetings.....do.....	398,285	58,655	339,630
Oil, kerosene.....gallons..	588,000	20,000	568,000

This is almost annihilation, and at what is usually the busiest time of the year for our trade. Tientsin is the port for Pekin, all Chihli, etc., and it is not necessary in this summary to remind our people of the strife enacted therein during this period.

NIUCHWANG.

Imports of merchandise specially termed American for the quarter ended June 30, 1900, and the same period of 1899.

Articles.	1899.	1900.	De-crease.
Drills.....pieces..	234,235	112,980	121,255
Sheetings.....do.....	554,885	399,340	155,045
Oil, kerosene.....gallons..	790,000	616,000	144,000

It is to be noted that Chefoo has five classes specified as American, of which all show gains. Tientsin has four classes, of which only one shows a gain, while Niuchwang has only three, and all show a heavy loss for the June quarter.

Imports specified as American for the quarter ended September 30, 1900, and the same period of 1899.

Articles.	1899.	1900.	De-crease.
Drills.....pieces..	148,022	-----	148,022
Sheetings.....do.....	306,665	620	306,045
Oil, kerosene.....gallons..	653,000	25,000	638,000

This is annihilation pure and simple, and yet Niuchwang saw less fighting than Tientsin; and the only foreign power that interfered there was Russia. That Government seized the port as early as August 4, and on the 12th had control of the custom-house.

KYAO-CHAU.

The custom-house at Tsintau, German colony in Shantung—or, as the customs term it, Kyao-chau—was opened for business July 1, 1899; therefore, no comparison can be made for the June quarter of 1899, and the imports for 1900 are too insignificant to mention.

RESUME—NORTH CHINA.

Imports specified as American into the three northern ports of Chefoo, Tientsin, and Niuchwang for the quarter ended June 30, 1900, and same period of 1899.

Articles.	1899.	1900.	Increase.	De-crease.
Drills.....pieces..	504,578	219,398	-----	285,180
Jeans.....do.....	25,885	14,270	-----	11,615

* Chefoo only; not specified elsewhere.

Thus in this quarter, in spite of the large gains credited to Chefoo, the northern imports declined more than half from those of the same period of 1899.

Merchandise specified as American imported into the ports of Chefoo, Tientsin, and Niuchwang during the quarter ended September 30, 1900, and the same period of 1899.

Oil, kerosene.....gallons..	2,053,100	50,000	2,003,100

The above gives a good idea of what a mob in China can do in interfering with trade. The greatest loss is, of course, in cotton piece goods, and this cessation of imports must have been most keenly felt in the Southern States. Probably no country in the world suffered as much as did the United States, for the scene of strife covered practically our field of trade.

These tables do not by any means show our losses. They only serve to show the losses in a few specified lines.

Imports of merchandise into the ports of Chefoo, Tientsin, and Niuchwang during the quarter ended September 30, 1900, and same period of 1899.

From the above list I have excluded native sundries; for instance, Kaiping coal all comes from Tientsin and rice from Canton and Chinkiang; and, although I have set forth the figures in strict accordance with the customs returns, nevertheless they do not give an accurate idea of the trade.

SHIPPING.

The total collection of duties for all China during the quarter ended September 30, 1900, was 5,163,795 haikwan taels, while for the same quarter of 1899 it was 7,623,386 haikwan taels, a loss of 2,459,591 haikwan taels. This loss is for only one quarter.

The foregoing statistics are compiled from the returns for the quarters ended June 30 and September 30, 1900, issued by the foreign customs of China.

UNITED STATES STATISTICS.

An examination of the returns issued by the United States Treasury Department reveals the following:

Value of exports from United States to Chinese Empire for first ten months of 1899 and 1900.

1899	$12,628,955
1900	10,442,811
Loss	2,186,144

This does not show what we really lost, for there are immense quantities of merchandise in the ports to be worked off before importations can recommence. The year 1900 began with the greatest increase in our trade ever known and ended with the most serious losses.

The losses to the cotton trade alone I estimate at over $3,000,000.

For the five months of 1900 before the outbreak our trade had increased (net) $684,216 over that for the five months of 1899.

For the five months from June to October there was a net loss of $2,865,043. The Treasury statistics, it should be remembered, do not embrace all of our trade with China, as large quantities of merchandise are sent into China from the United States via Japan, Hongkong, London, etc.

As nearly all the cotton piece goods from the United States are for the northern trade, I extract the following from the Treasury statistics to show how this trade was affected:

Value, by months, of the exports to China of cotton piece goods.

JOHN FOWLER, Consul.

CHEFOO, February 3, 1901.

EXPORT TRADE FROM TIENTSIN.

The export returns herewith submitted give striking evidences of how Tientsin and north China have suffered in consequence of the uprising. The enormous discrepancies between the figures for the present and for last year tell a tale of loss to the producer as well as to the merchant that is startling. In the item of dogskins, it will be noticed that 1,284 were exported this year against 18,837 last year, while in bristles, sheepskin clothing, and many other articles the falling off is equally noticeable. Nor is the outlook for the year 1901 favorable for large shipments. The country north of Tientsin, where the principal articles of export are produced, is now overrun with ex-Boxers and exsoldiers who have turned bandits, and it will be exceedingly difficult for merchants to get goods out of or into the interior.

Principal articles of export for the years 1899 and 1900.

IMPORTS.

I am unable to give any reliable import statistics. Outside of supplies imported for the armies (not accounted for in the customs records), the same ratio of loss appears as given in the export returns. The cotton and woolen industries have suffered heavily.

The supplies furnished the United States troops have attracted the notice and envy of all other nationalities, including the merchant as well as the soldier—an advertisement that could not well have been procured in any other manner.

JAMES W. RAGSDALE, Consul.

TIENTSIN, January 3, 1901.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on account of the contraction of the foreign market for the products of Southern mills the goods were thrown on the domestic market with disastrous consequence. The cotton mills of New England, which up to that time had supplied the domestic market, also suffered severely. Although we have wrested the cotton market from England, Japan and Germany are ready to take it away from us. Ought we not to do everything in our power to retain it, and refrain from offering a gratuitous insult to our best customer by enacting this hostile legislation? The question of possible retaliation by China and her people should also be remembered. There are already rumors to that effect, the Chinese merchants and others in this country, it is understood, having recently urged the Chinese Government to take measures to retaliate in case of unduly severe and harsh laws in violation of treaty provisions. Although we need not pay undue heed to such rumors, and we should do what we think is our duty to our own people, yet we should not give unnecessary offense to a friendly nation with whom we wish to continue to trade.

As I have before said, the reenactment of the present law answers what is required, and this bill, for the reasons that I have given, ought not to be passed.

Since the Senator from Oregon in his speech on this subject—and it was a very able and exhaustive one—referred to Minister Wu's address, delivered at the International Commercial Congress in Philadelphia in 1899, concerning our trade with China, it is but fair to give the whole address, instead of cutting out two or three paragraphs in it, and, by the courtesy of the Senate, I will append the minister's address herewith as a part of my speech. It will show that he apprehends that our trade with China may be retarded by unwise methods and hostile legislation.

The address referred to is as follows:

MR. CHAIRMAN, LADIES, AND GENTLEMEN: We are assembled here to-day to discuss matters affecting international commerce—to enter into a general discussion respecting the world's trade—with a view to its development for the benefit of all nations. China gladly takes part in this congress, and she has accordingly sent two delegates to represent her in this body. It is a well-known fact that China's trade and commerce with foreign nations has been and is increasing every year. This is especially the case with the United States. Since the opening of my country to foreign commerce, fifty years ago, her trade with the United States has been steadily increasing. To go no further back than the year 1801, I find in the trade returns of the imperial maritime customs for that year the exports of the United States to China amounted, in round numbers, to 7,700,000 taels, and the imports from China to 9,000,000 taels.

The volume of trade has increased rapidly every year, and it reached the following figures last year: Exports from the United States to China, 17,163,312 taels, and imports from China, 11,936,771 taels, with a total of 29,100,083 taels. It is a significant fact that for many years the value of your exports to China was less than your imports, but last year it was the other way. Your exports exceeded your imports by over 5,000,000 taels. Thus it indicates clearly that your export trade has been and is increasing immensely. I have taken these figures, as I say, from the customs returns; but, according to the United States consul at Chefoo, Mr. Fowler, who seems to have taken great pains in going over the figures, the United States trade with China is underestimated by one-third, because the customs method of reckoning is to credit the ship with the merchandise she carries; so a steamer, say, flying the British flag and carrying a large quantity of American goods, the goods so imported will be put down as British and not American.

Thus, according to Mr. Fowler, your trade with China last year was 40,000,000 taels. Gratifying as these figures are, they will not stop there, but will continue to advance every year. Now that the United States has practically become our neighbor by its recent acquisition of the Philippine Islands, the prospect is brighter than ever, and I should not be surprised if, under favorable conditions and not retarded by unwise methods, the trade will be doubled or trebled in a few years. I say, if not retarded by unwise methods. Let me give you an illustration. Mr. Wildman, the United States consul-general at Hongkong, used these significant sentences in his report of November 22, 1893, after having studied the question thoroughly: "Broadly speaking, there is not an industry in the islands (Philippines) that will not be ruined if Chinese labor is not permitted." And again, in his report of July 1 last, speaking of the establishment of cotton mills in Hongkong, which is looked upon as a remunerative undertaking, he says: "The only thing that the promoters of this English industry fear is that mills will be established in Manila, which would only be possible if Chinese labor were admitted freely."

This opinion of your consul, who has been many years in the East, and whose business is to protect the interests of his countrymen, is universally confirmed by all other competent judges in the matter. It is therefore manifestly to your interest that Chinese immigration to the Philippines should be as free as possible. In settling upon a policy of such vital importance, affecting the welfare and prosperity of your newly-acquired possessions, it is well to study the course pursued by another great power in its colonies adjacent, whose conditions are very much similar. Take the case of Hongkong. It was but a barren rock on the Chinese coast. But since its occupation by Great Britain, every inducement has been given to the Chinese to come and settle there. Now it has become a great center of trade, as fair a city as can be found under the tropical sun, a genuine pearl of great price, and the pride of the British Empire.

It is the Chinese that have contributed so largely to the prosperity of that British colony. Then again, consider the Straits Settlements, which are not so near to China as the Philippines. There the Chinese form a large proportion of the population. Their presence has been deemed desirable, and no restriction is placed upon their admission. The English people are well known to be shrewd and good colonizers, and if Chinese immigration were objectionable, they would have stopped it long ago. But instead of doing that, they have held out every inducement to Chinese to come to their colonies, because they know by experience that Chinese are useful to them. It is not for me to say what policy should be adopted by the American Government for the Philippine Islands, but apart from other considerations, and looking solely to the interests of the archipelago, it would seem to be a suicidal policy, from a statesman's point of view, to prohibit the entrance of Chinese labor into those islands.

While upon this subject I feel compelled to refer to the status of my countrymen in this country. Although from fear of undue competition with American labor, it was thought expedient seventeen years ago to enact a law to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to this country, subsequent legislation on this subject has gone so far as to interfere with the coming of other classes of Chinese as well. It has been held by the highest legal authority in this country "that the result of the whole body of these laws and decisions thereon is to determine that the true theory is not that all Chinese persons may enter this country who are not forbidden, but that only those who are entitled to enter are expressly allowed." In consequence of this opinion, all collectors of customs and inspectors in this country and in the Hawaiian Islands have been instructed to refuse admission to persons described as salesmen, clerks, buyers, cashiers, physicians, proprietors of restaurants, etc. My attention was called the other day to the case of three Chinese clergymen who were not allowed to land. The legal functionary stated his decision thus: "I am of the opinion that ministers, preachers, and missionaries, as well as doctors, lawyers, etc., are not of the exempt class."

Therefore should His Excellency Li Hung Chang come to New York as a private individual he would not be allowed to land. Fortunately, I came to this country before this opinion was rendered, otherwise I should have been excluded, and I must abandon any intention I may have of coming to the United States in the future as a Confucian missionary because I shall be turned back. It must not be inferred that in this matter I throw any blame on the officials charged with the carrying out of the Chinese-exclusion laws. They are simply doing their duty. And here I would acknowledge the uniform courtesy and kindly feeling shown me by all the officials, high and low, with whom I have come in contact. I simply point out that under the existing laws and regulations, my countrymen are singled out as the only people who are not permitted (except a very few under certain strict conditions) to come to the United States and its colonial possessions, while the subjects and citizens of all other nations, of whatever color or race, including Japanese, Malays, Siamese, and other Asiatics, and Africans, and even savages, are at liberty to enter freely. Persons are generally disliked on account of their indolence, immorality, and other bad qualities, but I believe this is the first instance in the history of the world that a people are considered as undesirable and excluded from a country because of their industry, perseverance, honesty, and other good qualities. China does not make such invidious distinctions.

What is open to one nation is open to all nations. All are equally welcome. So far from taking any retaliatory measure, she is still holding the most friendly and cordial relations with the United States, and I hope and trust these relations will long continue. And referring to the discussions to-day about open door, China is for open door; she opens her doors; her doors are wide open to you all without distinction of race and color and of any nation at all; all are welcome equally. In view of the certain increase of this vast trade and commerce between China and the United States, and in view of the unrivaled opportunities China offers to American capital and enterprise, the question naturally arises whether it is worth while to keep in your statute book a discriminating law against a people with whom it is to your interest to keep and maintain relations of the most friendly nature. This is a question for the merchants, manufacturers, capitalists, and laborers of this country to decide, and I am sure they will decide rightly and fairly when the facts are laid before them. I do not fear that even American laborers will offer any opposition, because being intelligent men and men of commonsense they will understand that increase of trade means, of necessity, increase of employment and work, hence prosperity for them.

With the view of expanding the trade between China and the United States, it has occurred to me that the establishment of an institution on lines somewhat similar to those laid down for the Philadelphia Commercial Museum, at some Chinese seaport, say Shanghai, would be an excellent thing. Manufacturers could then send samples of their goods there on exhibition, so that the natives could see what America has to sell in the way of manufactures and agricultural products. On the other hand, the products of Chinese factory and soil might also be placed on exhibition in the same building. A permanent exposition of this kind would certainly result in lasting benefit to both sides. I notice that a similar scheme has been proposed by the United States consul-general at Shanghai and Hongkong, and I take great pleasure in recommending such a scheme to the favorable consideration of the manufacturers and merchants of this country.

I am exceedingly glad that I have been able to be present at some of the sessions of this congress. This is an era of conferences and international conferences. We have seen the Social Congress, the Medical Congress, the Women's Congress, the Mothers' Congress, the Congress of Demography and Hygiene, the Disarmament Congress, etc., that have been held in different countries. Now we have this International Commercial Congress. Great credit is due to Dr. Wilson and his associates for getting up this congress, and I am sure I am expressing the sentiment of all of us that we are grateful to them for inviting us to take part in it. This congress, in my opinion, can not fail to do good to the world at large. It has brought together the representative men from different countries and afforded them an opportunity to propose and express their views from the standpoint of their respective countries, and at the same time ascertain the views of other nations and States.

Anticipate that the results of this congress will be far-reaching. When the representatives of the different nations report to their respective governments and chambers of commerce the things they have seen, the people they have met and talked with, and the impressions they have formed from personal contact and investigation, a better understanding will naturally be established between nations and peoples, leading to closer friendship and to the increase of trade and commerce. My earnest hope is that in our deliberations here we shall rise to that higher plane which enables us to see our way to contribute as much as possible to the common good of the world, while not giving up the national interests of each. I pray that the efforts of these good men in getting up this congress will be crowned with great success, and its beneficial results will be permanent. [Prolonged applause.]

MR. GALLINGER. Is there any necessity for our arousing the ill feeling of the Chinese in the United States and the Chinese Government? If there were an absolute necessity for it, I should not much care what legislation was passed here, for I am for America against the world. Yet I should then hope that the Congress of the United States would not, even under stress of circumstances so far as our own people are concerned, waive lightly aside obligations that we are under to other nations because of solemn treaties into which we have entered with them.

Admitting, Mr. President, that there are now and then frauds committed by laborers who personate themselves as merchants, students, or others of the exempt classes, as has been charged in this debate, is that a sufficient ground for enacting unduly harsh measures, which not only interfere with the coming to this country of the respectable classes of Chinese, but encroach on the privileges guaranteed to these classes by treaty. Shall we be justified, under the cloak of preventing frauds by a few laborers, in practically stopping all respectable classes of Chinese from coming here? Would we be justified in stopping all people from going out at night because thefts are committed under the cover of darkness? There is as much argument in this as there is for enacting some of the provisions of this bill. The present law seems to be adequate, and has proved effective, as the census reports show.

I find that the Chinese population of the United States, according to the census reports of 1890, were 107,488, and in 1900 the number had been reduced to 89,863.

Mr. President, as I have listened to some of the speeches in this Chamber on the pending bill, I have wondered if it could be possible that the Senators were so frightened because 89,000 Chinese have habitation in a nation of 80,000,000 people. There are 89,863 Chinese in the United States, according to the census reports of 1900. So there has been a decrease of 17,625 in this country during the last decade, which shows that the existing law is effective in keeping out the Chinese from our territory. In 1890 there were 72,472 Chinese in California, while in 1900 there were only 45,753, a decrease of nearly 40 per cent in a single decade.

They are being blotted out rapidly, and if the decrease continues for twenty-five years a Chinaman will be as scarce in California as an angel's visit is, and yet the Senators from the Pacific coast lift up their hands in holy horror and declare that the best interests of this Government demand that we shall enact this harsh and unnecessarily restrictive legislation.

What necessity is there for it, I will ask, and I ask it with more emphasis than I otherwise would from the fact that I believe it will arouse alarm among the Chinese who are properly in this country and create ill-feeling against us in the Chinese Empire.

Mr. President, while I sympathize with every well-directed effort to protect labor from foreign competition, I do not see that there is any real necessity for this rigid legislation. The danger has been greatly magnified. If we are really sincere in our professions of friendship and good will to China and do not wish to violate our treaty provisions, why should we proceed to enact such drastic measures in defiance of the protest of China? Of course we have a perfect right to legislate as we think proper, but while we are professing sincere friendship for China and want her to keep her doors open to us and give us a share of her trade, is it proper to place obstacles in the way of her merchants, buyers, and other respectable Chinese from coming here for the purpose of trade, or education, or travel? In these days of international intercourse a strong and powerful nation should not do anything, either by legislation or otherwise, to annoy a people of a friendly nation who may be weak and unable to retaliate.

I want now to briefly advert to some of the so-called "testimony" that was taken by the committee, none of which was, properly speaking, testimony, but rather unsworn statements by gentlemen representing both sides of the controversy.

The Senator from Indiana quoted at length from the statement of James R. Dunn, chief of the Chinese bureau in San Francisco. That gentleman made an attack on the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, saying that he had information that that company had systematically violated the Chinese-exclusion law. He did not give the name of his informant, so that Mr. Dunn's unsupported statement is all we have on that point. On the other hand, the officers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company absolutely and unqualifiedly deny the truth of the charge, and yet Mr. Dunn's statement has been made to do service in this debate as though it were a matter of the greatest possible consequence.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. May I interrupt the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. In order to get accurate information, I will ask the Senator if he will indicate where in the record the denial is to be found, if it is to be found there.

Mr. GALLINGER. What denial?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The denial of the steamship company.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that I have it personally from some of the officers of the steamship company, and I give it on my own personal responsibility.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I did not know but that there was a denial somewhere else.

Mr. GALLINGER. The junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] made the denial very pointedly the other day in this Chamber.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have in my hand the affidavit of Mr. Schwerin, vice president and general manager of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, in which he denies the truth of the statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is the Senator willing to have it inserted as a part of my remarks?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted as a part of my remarks.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It was handed to me.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I wish the Senator would permit me to interrupt him a little further.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I simply desire to state that the statement of Mr. Dunn was made some weeks ago, and it was printed and published in the published hearings of the Committee on Immigration, and until the junior Senator from Vermont challenged the statement a day or so ago it has gone unquestioned. The steamship company was represented before the committee by counsel, very able and eminent counsel, and the statement made there by Mr. Dunn was not challenged by him or any officer of the company.

Mr. GALLINGER. That may be so. Mr. Dunn did not swear to what he said. Mr. Schwerin, who is a very reputable man, says, under oath:

CITY OF WASHINGTON, District of Columbia, ss:

R. P. Schwerin, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I am now and have been for eight years last past vice-president and general manager of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and my office has been in San Francisco, Cal. Prior to becoming the vice-president and general manager of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company I was lieutenant in the Navy of the United States, and had been in the naval service from 1874 until 1892.

I have had called to my attention a statement made by James R. Dunn, on page 316 of the testimony before the Senate Committee on Immigration, as follows:

"I am informed upon absolutely credible authority (here I will state that I will give to the chairman of this committee, if desired, the name of my informant, which, however, I will not divulge in this public meeting), that a prominent San Franciscan, personally favorable to the admission of Chinese, called the attention of the general manager of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to the possibility of 'bringing over' large numbers of Chinese laborers in the guise of merchants, students, teachers, and travelers. It appears that until then this generous provision of the law had been virtually ignored by the promoters of Chinese immigration. After very careful consideration by the representatives of the steamship company the scheme was put in operation, and agents were sent to China for the purpose of working up the business. Chinese laborers were provided with certificates as merchants, students, etc., and the Chinese passenger traffic grew to immense proportions. For some two or three years the business thrived. The collectors of customs looked upon these certificates as absolute evidence of the right of the applicants to admission, and they were admitted after little or no investigation."

I deny absolutely and without any qualification whatever the foregoing statement of Mr. Dunn as to the whole and each and every part thereof.

I deny that any "prominent San Franciscan," or any one else, ever called to my attention "the possibility of 'bringing over' large numbers of Chinese laborers in the guise of merchants, students, teachers, and travelers."

I further deny that "after very careful consideration by the representatives of the steamship company the scheme was put in operation and agents were sent to China for the purpose of working up the business."

I further deny that "Chinese laborers were provided with certificates as merchants, students, etc., and the Chinese passenger traffic grew to immense proportions."

I further aver that neither I nor any other officer or employee of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has ever been engaged in any wrongful or improper attempt to increase the Chinese traffic on the ships of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company by any unlawful or improper means, or by the practice of any fraud whatever in the matter of furnishing certificates to Chinese laborers or in any other way since the time that I have been vice-president and general manager of the said company.

R. P. SCHWERIN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 7th day of April, 1902.

E. L. CORNELIUS,

Notary Public, District of Columbia.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. May I interrupt my friend?

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to add just one word; that as against this affidavit we have the unsupported and unsworn statement of Mr. Dunn. In that statement Mr. Dunn said he would give the name of his informant to the chairman of the committee, which I understand he has not yet given, unless the Senator has it in his possession this morning.

Mr. PENROSE. I will state for the information of the Senator from New Hampshire that I asked Mr. Dunn yesterday to furnish me with the name of his informant. He has addressed a letter to me giving all the particulars. I will send for the letter, which I loaned to a Senator to examine, and as soon as it arrives, which will be in a few minutes, I will produce it and have it read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish the Senator would get Mr. Dunn to swear to it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. May I now interrupt the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It will be for just a moment. By reference to the testimony before the Committee on Immigration, page 285, it will be found that the date of the hearing at which Mr. Dunn made his statement was Monday, February 10, which was practically two months ago. For full two months the positive statement of Mr. Dunn has gone unquestioned, until challenged by this affidavit. I ask the Senator the date of it?

Mr. GALLINGER. This affidavit is dated the 7th day of April, only a day or so ago.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It is very recent.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is very recent.

Mr. PENROSE. We have a letter, dated April 8, and if it will not interfere with the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire, and as it is brief and this is the proper place, I will ask the Secretary to read it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like very much to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF IMMIGRATION,

Washington, April 8, 1902.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry as to the name of the person who gave me the information regarding the manner in which the business was developed of importing Chinese laborers in the guise of members of the exempt classes, which was related in my statement before your honorable committee and printed on page 316 of the document entitled "Chinese Exclusion, Testimony taken before the Committee on Immigration," I have the honor to inform you that Mr. Robert H. Swayne, of San Francisco, the senior partner of the firm of Swayne, Hoyt & Co., prominent customs and shipping brokers, informed me about one year ago in the office of the Coronado Hotel, California, that he had personally suggested the plan to the general manager of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; that said plan was adopted, after careful investigation of the possibilities, and that prior to that time but few, if any, Chinese had ever sought admission to the United States under this right and privilege.

Mr. Swayne described this undertaking with considerable detailed information, which it is unnecessary here to repeat, but which may be made known if there is any challenge of my veracity or of Mr. Swayne's statements. As

Mr. Swayne's prominence and wide knowledge of Chinese matters rendered it impossible to discredit his statements, and as said statements but served to amplify information already possessed by the authorities, I made an official report to the Treasury Department covering the circumstances of our conversation soon after it occurred.

As I stated in my address to your committee, I was prepared to give its chairman the name of my informant, which, however, I would not divulge in the open meeting of the committee. I have never been asked for the name of my informant until now, and it is promptly given you for the information of your committee and others interested, but of course with the understanding that it will not be made use of in such public manner as to injure Mr. Swayne, who, although actively engaged in business with the Chinese, is a frank, honorable, and prominent citizen of San Francisco.

Respectfully, yours,

JAMES R. DUNN.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not wonder that Mr. Dunn suggested that he hoped this matter would not be made public in a way to injure Mr. Swayne. According to the statement made by Mr. Dunn, this Mr. Swayne is a criminal and nothing else. He is a criminal by his own confession, and his unsworn statement is placed here as against the sworn statement of the vice-president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. This Mr. Swayne admits that, understanding what the laws of the United States were in regard to this matter, he deliberately and in cold blood went to an officer of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and suggested to him a way in which he could violate the laws of the United States, and then he comes in here and poses, I suppose, as a modern reformer who wants to save us from the iniquities that are prevalent in this wicked world of ours.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to state for the information of the Senator from New Hampshire that if he is hunting trouble on this subject I can furnish him with the details and the affidavits necessary in this matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to the details or the affidavits, only I do not want a criminal to be brought in here as a witness against an honorable gentleman, who, under oath, denies the unsupported charge against him. I do not know why the officers of the company allowed this matter to rest a month or so. I have myself rested quietly under slanders and falsehoods for more than two months, and in some instances I never took the trouble to refute them.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think perhaps I should make a statement, as I furnished the affidavit of Mr. Schwerin. I was present when this testimony was given in the committee, but the matter passed out of my mind largely until it was brought forward by the Senator from Indiana the other day. I then interrogated him in open Senate as to the person who had furnished this information, and he, like myself, had never been put in possession of that fact. I then interrogated the chairman of the committee, not in the Senate, and found that he had not at that time asked for the name of the gentleman referred to by Mr. Dunn. But while the discussion was on I was called from the Chamber, and there Mr. Schwerin, the vice-president and general manager of this company, denied the truthfulness of it, and since that time he has furnished me this affidavit, which he asked me to use if it became necessary. That is the way it happened to be produced here to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. FAIRBANKS. May I impose upon the Senator's kindness for one moment more?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is always welcome.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I dislike to interrupt the Senator. He is always courteous and kind. I wish simply to make a suggestion at this point. It seems to me the Senators were entirely justified in accepting Mr. Dunn's unchallenged statement made two months ago as being founded in fact. If that statement was untrue, it was the proper thing for the officers of the steamship company to challenge it before the committee made its report to the Senate, in order that we, having jurisdiction on the subject, might investigate further into its absolute authenticity.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator doubt the authenticity of this affidavit of the vice-president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I doubt the propriety of its being presented to the Senate two months after the charge was made.

Mr. GALLINGER. The matter of propriety does not cut any figure in a question of fact.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I have simply this to say. We have the conflicting statements of two men, one an officer of the Government and one who is not—

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I beg the Senator's pardon—

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The statement of the officer of the Government was spread upon the public records two months ago, and I do say, with all regard to my good friend, that it was proper and incumbent upon the challenged officers of the steamship company to make the denial before the committee and not to wait until the report was in the Senate before challenging it. That is what I have to say.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg the Senator's pardon. The controversy is not between an officer of the Government and Mr. Schwerin, vice-president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. It is between Mr. Swayne, a confessed criminal, and Mr. Schwerin, the vice-president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. That is where the matter comes now, and waiving aside the question of propriety as to the matter of the time when the denial ought to have been made, I prefer to accept the sworn testimony of a reputable gentleman to the unsworn testimony of a confessed violator of law. With this I pass from that phase of the controversy.

Mr. President, I notice also that Mr. Andrew Furuseth, the walking, talking delegate, who says he represents the seamen of the country, and who sails the briny deep in the city of Washington on a good salary, made the charge that only six of our fighting vessels attached to the Atlantic fleet were fairly well manned; but when asked to give the name of his informant replied, "I would not care about doing that." That is the kind of "testimony" we are invited to accept.

One witness said that the United States consuls neglect their duties and visé almost every certificate presented to them without proper investigation.

I wonder that the committee, some members of whom are very deeply interested in remedying alleged defects in our consular system, did not find out just who these consuls were and report them to the State Department. Possibly it has been done. I hope so.

This witness says that the consular officers in China habitually neglect to take proper precautions to find out whether the Chinamen coming here are entitled to admission or not. But Mr. Dunn, wanting to show his diligence at San Francisco, and the report of it is found on page 320 of the testimony, said:

The vigilance of the officers having discovered and prevented these and other fraudulent practices, the influx of such applicants has been diminished about 75 per cent within the past eighteen months, and the number of applicants for admission of all classes is reduced almost to the legitimate traffic.

So, notwithstanding our consular officers are neglecting their duties, according to the testimony of one witness, Mr. Dunn, this swift witness against the Pacific Mail Steamship Company says that by his diligence and the diligence of other officers of the Government the Chinese traffic has been reduced to its legitimate dimensions. If this be so, and the census reports fully bear out that statement, what earthly need is there of doing anything except to extend the existing law during the life of the treaty with China now in force?

Mr. President, I am satisfied that under existing law the Chinese in this country are subjected to great indignities in this country, and it is proposed to so legislate that the indignities will be multiplied.

I have here a newspaper published in the city of San Francisco. I do not know anything about it. It came to my attention inadvertently. The proprietor is Frederick Marriott. It seems to be a semiliterary paper. It is edited with a good deal of ability, and here is what this San Francisco paper says about the examination of Chinese in San Francisco and their treatment there:

Now that the matter of Chinese exclusion is prominently before Congress it might be well to look into some of the methods employed against the Chinese landing here, and to exploit a few of the abuses that exist in connection with the examinations they must go through before it has been decided whether or not they are to become residents of the United States.

Every Chinaman coming to San Francisco must satisfy the collector of the port that he is qualified to land—that he is a merchant or that he is a bona fide resident of the United States returning from China. If the collector is not satisfied with his representations, the Chinaman is taken before the United States court, there to give reasons why he should not be sent back to China. The manner in which he is deprived of his rights will be a surprise to those unacquainted with the star-chamber methods employed.

When a boat lands on which there are Chinese, it is at once boarded by a deputy of the collector, accompanied by an interpreter. They see the Chinese in advance of anyone else. They proceed to pump each of them, and allow such as they please to land. If a dispute arises over the right of one of them to take up his residence here, he is taken before the United States court. There his evidence either is not taken or if it is receives no attention. The inspector who had the first interview with him on board ship tells, or pretends to tell, just as he pleases, what the Chinaman told him. On this testimony alone the case is decided. The whole executive power of exclusion of Chinese is practically in the hands of a few of those interpreters, for the others do not comprehend the Chinese language.

Suppose a Chinaman says that he is a merchant in Sacramento. That means a junketing trip for the inspector, who goes to Sacramento to satisfy himself that the Chinaman is a merchant there. Perhaps he finds his store, small and in squalid surroundings. His lordship makes up his mind that the Chinaman is not enough of a merchant to count, comes back and makes a report to that effect, and the Mongolian is deported without a chance in the world to make any defense. His fate depends entirely upon what the inspector tells the court. It is easy to see how an inspector might benefit himself, and the chances offered for wholesale fraud and bribery.

Our exclusion law is foolish enough, unjust enough, and injurious enough to the State—without having abuses connected with it. If it will only be let die it will be well for California. The efforts now being made to pass a new law, stronger than the old, seem to be coming to grief. Our representatives have become overzealous, and have made so much noise over their bill as to attract good, healthy opposition. There is a general awakening as to this Chinese-exclusion foolishness—a general realization that we have been laboring under a delusion; and thinking people are laughing at some of the utter absurdities of the exclusion law now in force. By its terms only Chinese merchants are allowed to come to this country. In China are some of the most learned men, some of the most profound scholars in the world. But they are not merchants; consequently we can not receive them.

That is California—

With all our boasted erudition on the subject we know very little of the real Chinese. Our experience has been with coolies. We have no knowledge of the respectable class, as far removed from the cooly class as a thoroughbred racer is removed from a mule. The law is so absurd that doctors, bookkeepers, proprietors of hotels, clerks, ministers, journalists, authors, and professionals are all excluded as wild beasts.

These classes can be used to advantage, and as they represent the brains and intelligence of a nation they are our best missionaries of religion and trade.

Such Chinese should be welcomed here. They are desirable citizens. The coolies are not welcome as citizens, but as laborers. They do not wish to be citizens. They want to work, and we need their services. They do not cut wages, but they do faithful work and can always be depended upon. If the same could be said of the white men who do unskilled labor, who seek employment on the ranches and in the orchards, there would be no need of the coolies.

In conclusion, an investigation should be made of the star-chamber methods referred to in the matter of examining Chinese. They are at utter variance with the principles of right and justice.

I have another San Francisco paper, Mr. President, in my committee room, which is bitterly outspoken against the anti-Chinese propaganda proposed in the pending bill.

The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] yesterday called attention to the small number of Chinese converts to Christianity. He quoted Dr. Edkins as saying that there were not over 1,000 converts as the result of sixteen years' missionary effort. I will just pause to say, as the Senator from California would say, "parenthetically," that I have never yet found anybody who could estimate, either in effort, time, or money, the value of a human soul, and I am not going to take the scales and weigh the advantages or disadvantages of the propaganda in China by American missionaries. But surely the statement just quoted is not so, and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] pointed out that statistics show there have been 100,000 Chinese converted to Christianity in that Empire.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me? I referred to the Protestants.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; the Protestants.

Mr. QUAY. In addition there are three or four hundred thousand Catholics.

Mr. GALLINGER. So, according to the statement just made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, who is an authority on matters of this kind, as we all know, there are about half a million converts to Christianity in the Chinese Empire, and yet the Senator from California glibly says there are only a thousand of them, and it has cost too much per capita to convert them, or something of that kind.

The Senator from California said there are only 1,600 Christian Chinese in this country, and that only 4,000 had adopted the Christian faith from the beginning of their immigration to our shores, some of whom, he said, had become Christians for business purposes. Well, Mr. President, if that be so we can match the Chinaman on that score with American church members, and possibly some American deacons.

At best it is problematical what the final result of missionary efforts in China will be. Omniscience alone knows that, and we must patiently wait for its fruition. Turkey, Persia, and other nations are equally slow to accept our religious teachings, but so long as the great command remains on the Statute Book of God the Christian church has a duty to perform from which it will not shrink.

A distinguished Senator said to me at my desk a few days ago that he had never met a genuine Chinese Christian. Well, Mr. President, on Sunday last I saw three Chinese youths taken into church fellowship in this city. They looked intelligent and happy, and I have confidence that they have accepted Christianity in good faith, and there are numerous such instances throughout the country.

A good woman in Boston sent me, a few weeks ago, a copy of the American Missionary for February, 1902, which I have on my desk. It must have been sent because of mental telepathy, as I had not the least notion of saying a word on this subject at that time. This magazine contains a remarkable article from the pen of Rev. Jee Gam, entitled "Chinese exclusion, from the standpoint of a Christian Chinese." I will ask permission to insert the entire article as a part of my remarks, but will read the concluding paragraphs:

It seems that Dr. Rader, an American clergyman, had put himself pretty strongly in some observations he had made or something he had written against the Chinese. Rev. Jee Gam says:

Mr. Rader says that Chinatown furnishes the best argument against Chinese immigration from the moral standpoint.

I took occasion to make an observation the other day regarding that matter, suggesting that possibly we could match China or Chinatown in the matter of immorality in every city of this country, if we only knew the facts, and I have no doubt that we can.

Why not have courage enough to denounce the wickedness that is found everywhere you turn in San Francisco—its saloons, its dives, its gambling dens, and its houses of prostitution. Look at Tar Flat, its filth, its dives, and its vices!

How about New York City, its Italian town, its filth, its vices, and its morals?

I have seen these places with my own eyes, and they are a hundred times worse than Chinatown in San Francisco. Read "Darkest New York," the author of which is Gen. Ballington Booth; it will verify my statements, and will not only tell you of the Italian town, but of the Polish town, the Irish, the Portuguese, the Hungarian, and the Italian and Jewish town combined. All these settlers came from Europe and other countries, as I have said, at the rate of 1,000 per day. They are pauper laborers. They have lowered your wages, they have lowered your morals, and disgraced your city. Is it not sensible and just that you should exclude them? To simply attack the few poor Chinese is against all reason and against the teachings of Jesus Christ. This unjust exclusion law will greatly injure your commerce. Let me quote what President Jordan says: "As to Chinese exclusion, it is all one sided. I am not in sympathy with the sentiment that would exclude all the Chinese from the country. We should bear in mind that if China is opened to the trade of America, we can not afford to antagonize that great nation by a rigid law of exclusion. We can not expect that the ports of China will be wide open to us if we close all our ports to China."

Again, this unjust exclusion act is against treaty obligations. Dr. John Fryer, professor of oriental languages and literature in the University of California, is pronounced in the declaration that the exclusion act is a gross breach of the treaty obligations to China.

Suppose that in some future day China should become a powerful nation—and I have not the least doubt that she will—and then she should make a law admitting every people under the sun but the Americans. China may be despised now, but I have a steadfast hope that she will soon become one of the great nations on earth; yes, a Christian nation, too. The Land of Sinim will be won for Christ.

China has already begun for progress; Christianity is spreading more rapidly than ever before; the nation is now all astir for reform and progress. The viceroys are overwhelming the throne with repeated memorials advocating the same. They are planning to open institutions of Western learning throughout the length and breadth of the Empire, and they are fast sending students abroad to acquire the best of the great nations. These viceroys also advocate the opening of mines which, according to all indications, are the richest in the world. They will have more commerce, more railways, more telegraph lines, and improvements of every description to make her the equal of her sister nations.

Meanwhile commerce will be most extensively carried on, and if America does not look out and does not keep up the friendly relations she has gained with China since the late war, other nations will undoubtedly take advantage of the exclusion law and use it as the best weapon to prevent America from sharing in the trade with China. So I say that for the sake of commerce alone America ought to be fair with China, for she can not afford to have the present relations hampered and strained by an unjust exclusion law. The Chinese are a great commercial people. They have a great taste for American goods. What a great market she will be for this country!

These are my views upon the subject of Chinese exclusion; and I hope, my friends, that you will agree with me and do all you can as American citizens to sustain the relationship between the peoples of the two countries, and not only to sustain the relationship, but to evangelize China and ultimately bring her to Christ.

The entire article referred to is as follows:

CHINESE EXCLUSION, FROM THE STANDPOINT OF A CHRISTIAN CHINESE.

[By Rev. Jee Gam.]

DEAR FRIEND: The subject you have assigned me is a vast and difficult one. However, I will try to do my best. I thank "Aloha" and the other friends most heartily for the Christian spirit which actuated them in writing the excellent articles which have appeared in the Pacific setting forth the other side of this question. I tell you, they rejoice my heart most greatly.

You are aware of the title of my paper, "Chinese exclusion, from the standpoint of a Christian Chinese;" so, in the course of this article, if you should find that my views differ from yours, you will please remember that they are the ideas of one who looks on the subject from a different point of view. During the last three months the subject "Chinese exclusion" has been the chief topic of discussion everywhere. The daily papers of San Francisco were filled with reports and resolutions from anti-Chinese conventions. Every politician, the San Francisco supervisors, the Congressmen, and even a minister of the gospel, were loud against the poor, despised, and helpless Chinese.

As a Christian I can bear all the abuses from any class of people excepting those from the clergy. When a minister of the gospel joined the cry of an anti-Chinese convention and poured out such unwarranted and uncalled-for denunciation, it is sufficient to say that it hurts the Christian Chinese very much; it hurts the Chinese in general more, and it hurts the cause of Christ most. It is one of the greatest stumbling blocks retarding the advance of Christianity. Years ago similar stumbling blocks were used by the Rev. Mr. Kellogg, a Baptist minister of San Francisco, and it hurt the cause of Christ then a great deal, but it hurt Mr. Kellogg more; for the result showed plainly that God did not approve of his seeking the glory of men; and now to have this agitation renewed by another minister of the meek and lowly Jesus is sad beyond measure. Sad, because no man, especially a minister, can afford to impede the progress of Christianity. It is like Christian England forcing opium into China at the cannon's mouth on the one hand and sending missionaries on the other. "Consistency, thou art a jewel!"

Now, as to excluding the Chinese from this country. I say the true Americans, that is, those who are Americans, have a perfect right to make a law of exclusion, i. e., to enact a law that can be applied to every person on God's earth. So I say, America, be fair and impartial. Give equal justice to all men alike. You can not afford to do otherwise.

I admit that some of the Chinese ought to be excluded, namely, the high-binders, keepers of opium and gambling dens, those who run houses of prostitution, and those who commit felony. As to the total exclusion of Chinese laborers, I do not think it is necessary nor a wise thing for America to do. Just stop and consider a moment. The Chinese have been coming to America during the last fifty years, and how many of them are in the country to-day? Only about 100,000, an average of 2,000 per year. Does America need to be alarmed in the least? Is not this problem easily solved? On the contrary, America needs to be alarmed on the other side of the continent, where pauper laborers enter from Europe and other countries at the rate of 1,000 per day. Now, as to the Chinese. I am sure it would be a great relief and also profitable to hundreds of thousands of people here if a certain limited number were allowed to come, say 5,000 annually. The San Francisco News-Letter says this State alone needs 70,000 more.

But the anti-Chinese agitators would have the people believe that the Chinese are detrimental to the Americans, for they would take the bread out of the mouths of the working people. This is only an excuse. There is plenty of work in California; but the trouble is that thousands of the so-called workmen would not accept work when offered to them. They prefer to be tramps rather than true workmen. And you will find what I say is true by going to the police courts every morning. There the prison dockets are full of this class of men, who cry so loud to have the industrious Chinese excluded from the country. Ask the farmers, the orchardists, the owners of canneries, and the housewives, and they will tell you that they absolutely can not do without the Chinese laborers. And why? Because they are industrious, they are faithful, patient, honest, and steady, and they can be depended upon. When you hire them as cooks, you are not bothered by the nightly visitation of numerous beads, as girl servants have.

I wonder why the employers of Chinese have not met together and prepared a petition to Congress for their relief. Let them use their influence against the passage of the exclusion act.

A lady was asked whether her cook, Jee Lee, was a true Christian. She replied, "If he is not, I know of no other." This is very strong testimony in favor of the Chinese. But let me give another and still stronger example. Jee Lock, one of our Christian young men, has worked more than thirty years in one family. Oftentimes he has been left the sole keeper of the house. At one time his employer and the whole family went off and made a trip around the world. They were gone about a year. When they returned they found everything safe and in perfect order. They said, "It is safe for us to take a trip to Mexico," and they did. They came home and found things all right again. I know of hundreds of such Chinese. Think of their honesty and faithfulness! Think of the mighty and great moral influence they exert!

As farm hands, fruit pickers, and packers the Chinese have proved ten times more profitable to their employers than other hired men. When they are paid off Saturday evening they can be depended upon to be at their posts on Monday morning. On the contrary, the laborers from Europe when paid off speedily go on a spree at the cheap wineries or saloons until every cent they have possessed is spent. Do you find them in their places in the fields where they have worked the Saturday before? No. You usually find them all in jail for drunks. And what then? Why every taxpayer in the country has to pay their board from one to ten days or more. If at any time they should become tramps and be arrested, you and every taxpayer would have to support them from one to six months in your city or county jail.

And so they have filled your jails, your almshouses, your hospitals, and other similar institutions. You would be surprised to find, if you should look into this host of people, how many are indigent and how much you have to give toward their and their families' support. You would cry out: "These people ought to be excluded and not the Chinese."

Then, again, just think of the 1,000 pauper laborers that are being landed at Castle Garden every day in the year from across the Atlantic. And who are they? Are they not the lowest and meanest people from Europe? Are they not of the same class as the socialists, the mafia, the nihilists, and the anarchist who assassinated your beloved President, William McKinley? If you are going to exclude the Chinese, ought not these pauper laborers, the scum from Europe, to be excluded, too? Why should they be allowed to come any more than the Chinese? Why do not your politicians, your Congressmen, your Senators, and your people advocate a law that will exclude them? Even the Japanese, who of late have been coming in in great numbers, work for much cheaper wages than the Chinese; yet not one word against them do we hear. What is the reason? Is it because they have war ships? If so, America ought to go at them all the more; for what is a hero? Not the man who attacks a sickly, disabled, aged person, but one who dares to attack an opponent who is his own equal. That is the kind of a man we love to see and will praise for his bravery. For what is the use of shutting out the Chinese and not the others?

Let me give this illustration: A rich man lives in his mansion. One day he ascends his tower and, happening to look around, discovers a hundred tramps of all nationalities coming toward his magnificent residence. One of those tramps is a Chinese. This rich man hurries down the stairs and closes and bars the door through which the Chinaman intended to enter, and, not content in doing this, he sends out half a dozen guards to drive the Chinese whence he came; but he leaves the other doors open and unguarded and allows the 99 tramps from Europe and Japan to enter and take possession of his home. Will we not say he is a most foolish man; for of what benefit is it to shut out the one and not the other 99? Yet this is just what Americans are doing to-day. Is this the patriotism which they so often talk about? If it is, it must be of a very poor quality.

But we have learned that America is the land of the free and a home for all the oppressed. Furthermore, the people of other nations, including the Chinese, were invited to this country; and the Chinese are here by treaty rights, just as much as any other people, and therefore no rightful discrimination can be put upon them without seriously hurting the good name of America.

Again we have learned, as "Aloha" of the Pacific has said, that "the earth is of the Lord." All people have a right to live upon it. If America is owned by any human beings at all, it is owned by the Indians. If people of all nations are allowed to come to America, why is the Chinese alone denied the same privilege? Some people, especially the politicians, would have you believe that all other immigrants make good citizens except the Chinamen. The following is a list of the charges they invariably use to back their arguments:

1. The Chinese will not become citizens.
2. They do not assimilate with our people.
3. They eat their own food.
4. They do not adopt our dress.
5. They cheapen our wages.
6. They send their money to China.
7. They affect our morals.

In answer to the first charge, viz: "The Chinese will not become citizens." Now, this shows that people simply speak without investigation. Years ago—in the early seventies—a test case was brought in one of the Federal courts in San Francisco, and what do you think the decision was? It was that United States citizenship is only for the white man and the black man, and not for the yellow man. What a ridiculous decision that was! Again, the very exclusion act says that no court is allowed to extend citizenship to the Chinese. In the face of all these prohibitions the Chinese are criticised for not becoming citizens.

In answer to the second charge, viz, "They do not assimilate with our people." At the same time the Chinese are not allowed to assimilate with the American people. The Chinese children were not allowed to attend the public schools until very recently. The Chinese had to go to law to obtain this privilege; but, after all, legislators of California ordered just one separate school for the Chinese children in the entire State.

The third charge is that the Chinese eat their own food. Suppose they do; but they pay heavy duty on the rice they import.

As to the fourth charge, viz, "They do not adopt our style of dress." Upon the Chinese clothing which they import the Chinese also pay a heavy duty. They buy a great deal of American cloth for the manufacture of clothing, this cloth being made up generally into clothes of Chinese cut, and because they happen to be made in Chinese style the people abuse them for wearing Chinese clothing. It is altogether wrong to blame them for their action in this matter. It amounts to this much: If you and I go into a store and we both purchase a bolt of cloth each, you take yours home and make a coat in American style; I take mine home and make a coat in Chinese style. And where is the ground for argument?

Fifth. The Chinese are charged with cheapening wages. In the first place, who cheapened the wages in New York? Did not the pauper laborers from Europe? Certainly they did.

Sixth. The Chinese are charged with sending their money to China. Have they not the right to do with their money as they please? What right has anyone to dictate as to how and where another man should spend his money? The Rev. R. B. Tobey, of Boston, who has had more than twenty years' acquaintance with the Chinese, says that carefully prepared statistics show that proportionately the Chinese send home less money than immigrants from countries other than China.

Seventh. The Chinese are charged with affecting your morals. Is the character of the American people so weak as all that? Are they really in danger? In my estimation you need not fear the least. On the other hand, I think all can acquire some good characteristics from every kind of people, and you perhaps may be able to learn something from the Chinese.

Commenting on Chinese morals, the Rev. William Rader says that the Chinese have signally failed to become a moral American force. I claim that as regards honesty, filial piety, and giving, the Chinaman may serve as an example to a great many Americans. In speaking of Chinese characteristics, President Jordan, of Stanford University, recently said: "A Chinese merchant is one of the most honorable men in the world in business dealings; if he once gives his word he may be depended upon. A Chinese never fails in carrying out contracts."

The practice of filial duty by the Chinese is also a great moral force to Americans. They honor and take the greatest care of their parents as long as they live. It has often been said by hundreds of people that the Chinese keep the fifth commandment more rigidly than any other people on the face of the globe, and that God is blessing them with the promise of the commandment.

Chinese as Christians have exerted a great moral force upon the Americans in giving. Ask the secretary of the Christian Endeavor Union, and she will tell you that a Chinese Christian Endeavor Society in San Francisco has repeatedly outdone every Christian Endeavor Society in California in giving. Ask Mr. John Willis Baer, the general secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, and he will very quickly tell you that the Chinese Congregational Christian Endeavor Society in San Francisco ranked third in the world in giving to missions in 1897, and the same society ranked second in 1898, ranked fifth in 1899, ranked third in 1900, and ranked second in 1901. Does not this fact itself exert a mighty moral force upon the Americans? If not, why?

"Americans ought to look under the hats of immigrants," says Mr. Rader. You have a perfect right to do so; but are you doing your duty and showing your bravery and patriotism by advocating the examination of one and not the others? As to the number of Chinese in America, Mr. Rader says: "It is estimated that the whole number of Chinese professing the Christian faith is about 1,600." Why, the idea! We have more than that in our own denomination.

Mr. Rader was only a little better informed than Lieutenant Wood, who says that he has yet to see the first Chinese Christian in China. The 40,000 Chinese Christians who gave their lives as martyrs during the Boxer outbreak last year will be the best answer to such an unfounded declaration.

The money spent in converting a Chinaman is less than half of what the average church spends in converting an American. Again, Christianizing the Chinese in America is really Christianizing the Chinese in China. Our Chinese converts have been sending the gospel home for more than twenty-five years. Through their efforts missions have been established in the Kwang Tung Province. Thousands of Chinamen are to-day leaving China with the uplifting truths inculcated by Christian people here in the United States. Said the Rev. Dr. Noyes some years ago, one who was for thirty years a missionary in China: "Nearly all the Chinese in the United States come from the districts in the Canton Province. Twenty-five years ago there was not a Christian chapel or school in all that region. Now there are few places in these districts where there is not a mission chapel within a distance the Chinese can easily walk." Giving the number of chapels in which work was carried on by the denominations with which he was connected, Dr. Noyes said: "Every one of these sites was obtained by the help of Christians who have returned from California. Of the 13 native assistants who have labored at these stations, 6 were converted in California, 1 in Australia, and 1 received his first serious impression from a member of the Congregational Chinese Church in California on the steamer crossing the Pacific."

Mr. Rader says: "It is the opinion of Christian workers among the Chinese that the proper place to Christianize the Chinese is not in America, but in their own country."

I would like to know who these workers are. Why doesn't Mr. Rader give us their names? Does this information come from Dr. Pond, superintendent of the Congregational Chinese Mission, or from Dr. Condit, of the Presbyterian Mission, or from Dr. Hammond, of the Methodist Chinese Mission? I am certain that it does not come from them, for our Congregational missions in California alone have had more than 1,800 reported Christianized. I refer you to Dr. Pond's report for 1901.

Mr. Rader says we have failed to Christianize the Chinese. Did Mr. Rader ever try to Christianize the Chinese? If he has not, he is not speaking from experience. Mr. Rader says that other immigrants have brought hither their wives and children, but that the Chinese immigrants have no homes. Right here Mr. Rader forgets that the exclusion act itself denies such wives and children a right to land. The only women who are allowed to enter the country are the wives of merchants, and only their minor children can come with them. If the privilege given to other immigrants were extended to the Chinese, they would have brought their wives and children long ago. And I can say this much, that the Chinese enjoy, cherish, and love their homes just as much as the Americans; in many respects their love for homes is even greater, because they do not believe in divorces and don't have them.

Again, Mr. Rader argues that the immigrants of other nationalities have become pillars of the Republic. The Scotch have given us conscience, the Italians artistic taste, the Frenchmen wit, the Englishmen piety, and the Scandinavians industry. This may be true, but Mr. Rader only mentioned four classes of people out of a hundred nationalities from Europe. But is it not showing partiality to mention only the good of the four nationalities and not the bad of the same? But when he comes to the Chinese he rakes up all the bad and omits the good.

Give the Chinese the same rights and privileges which you extend to other foreigners and see if they are not the equals of all those people who come from Europe and other countries. And if our friend Mr. Rader cares to make further inquiries concerning this matter let him take a glance at the records of Yale and other noted colleges, for he will find in them that the Chinese students who have attended these famous institutions ranked among the highest students of those universities and oftentimes they stood at the head of their classes.

Time will not permit us just now to mention more than one noted student. Mr. Yong Wing took several prizes for English composition at Yale, and upon his graduation many people traveled a thousand miles just to see and hear him. Mr. Rader says that a few years ago the board of supervisors of San Francisco made an investigation when it was shown that 30,000 Chinese lived within a space composed of 8 blocks, 57 women and 59 children living as families; 761 women and 576 children herded together with apparent indiscriminate parental relations and no family classification as far as could be ascertained; 576 prostitutes, 87 children—professional prostitutes and children living together. I want to say that this report is entirely untrue. It is of the same character as the fake plague reports given out by the board of health last year.

Mr. Rader says that Chinatown furnishes the best argument against Chinese immigration from the moral standpoint.

Why not have courage enough to denounce the wickedness that is found everywhere you turn in San Francisco—its saloons, its dives, its gambling dens, and its houses of prostitution? Look at Tar Flat, its filth, its dives, and its vices.

How about New York City, its Italian town, its filth, its vices, and its morals?

I have seen these places with my own eyes, and they are a hundred times worse than Chinatown in San Francisco. Read "Darkest New York," the author of which is Gen. Ballington Booth; it will verify my statements, and will not only tell you of the Italian town, but of the Polish town, the Irish, the Portuguese, the Hungarian, and the Italian and Jewish town combined. All these settlers came from Europe and other countries, as I have said, at the rate of 1,000 per day. They are pauper laborers. They have lowered your wages, they have lowered your morals, and disgraced your cities. Is it not sensible and just that you should exclude them? To simply attack the few, poor Chinese is against all reason and against the teachings of Jesus Christ. This unjust exclusion law will greatly injure your commerce. Let me quote what President Jordan says: "As to Chinese exclusion, it is all one-sided. I am not in sympathy with the sentiment that would exclude all the Chinese from the country. We should bear in mind that if China is opened to the trade of America we can not afford to antagonize that great nation by a rigid law of exclusion. We can not expect that the ports of China will be wide open to us if we close all our ports to China."

Again, this unjust exclusion act is against treaty obligations. Dr. John Fryer, professor of oriental languages and literature in the University of California, is pronounced in the declaration that the exclusion act is a gross breach of the treaty obligations to China.

Suppose that in some future day China should become a powerful nation—and I have not the least doubt that she will—and then she should make a law admitting every people under the sun but the Americans. China may be despised now, but I have a steadfast hope that she will soon become one of the great nations on earth—yes, a Christian nation, too. The "Land of Sinim" will be won for Christ.

China has already begun for progress. Christianity is spreading more rapidly than ever before. The nation is now all astir for reform and progress. The viceroys are overwhelming the throne with repeated memorials advocating the same. They are planning to open institutions of western learning throughout the length and breadth of the Empire, and they are fast sending students abroad to acquire the best of the great nations. These viceroys also advocate the opening of the mines which, according to all indications, are the richest in the world. They will have more commerce, more railways, more telegraph lines, and improvements of every description to make her the equal of her sister nations.

Meanwhile commerce will be most extensively carried on, and if America does not look out and does not keep up the friendly relations she has gained with China since the late war other nations will undoubtedly take advantage of the exclusion law and use it as the best weapon to prevent America from sharing in the trade with China. So, I say, that for the sake of commerce alone America ought to be fair with China, for she can not afford to have the present relations hampered and strained by an unjust exclusion law. The Chinese are a great commercial people; they have a great taste for American goods. What a great market she will be for this country!

These are my views upon the subject of Chinese exclusion, and I hope, my friends, that you will agree with me and do all you can as American citizens to sustain the relationship between the peoples of the two countries, and not only to sustain the relationship, but to evangelize China and ultimately bring her to Christ. (The American Missionary, February, 1902, Vol. LVI, No. 2, p. 99.)

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the immigration to this country from 1890 to 1900 was considerably in excess of 3,000,000 people. Last year 487,918 came from foreign countries. They were literally of all classes and conditions. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] said that for the most part they were desirable. Surely the Senator has not visited Ellis Island or witnessed the motley crowd at Castle Garden. Many of them are ignorant, vicious, and undesirable in every respect, but we admit them, and I say that we ought to have infinitely more stringent laws on the subject of immigration.

It was a great regret to me that the bill on the question of immigration, which you, Mr. President [Mr. LODGE in the chair] introduced, and which was passed through the Senate, failed in another body; and it is equally regrettable to me that having refused to enact that bill into law a certain other bill came to the Senate yesterday from the same body on the subject of Chinese exclusion. And while we allow nearly half a million of emigrants to come into our ports in a single year, we hold up our hands in horror at the 89,000 Chinese now in this country, and while we talk of Christianizing them and extending our trade among them it is proposed to pass this harsh, unnecessary, and cruel statute. Well did a distinguished gentleman in another place say a few days ago:

China was civilized for centuries while we were wandering Huns and Goths in the forests of Europe and wild men on the heather of Scotland and Ireland.

China can teach us much out of her past history and much of her great sciences that were known to her before we were ever heard of. I want intercourse between the two countries. I want that development between the Orient and the rapidly growing West which will tend to the advancement of the world and to the benefit of mankind at large.

Some people, Mr. President, look upon China as a nation of barbarians. They would apply to them the little stanza that has done service in other directions:

The poor benighted Hindoo,
He does the best he kindo;
He sticks to caste from first to last
And for clothes he makes his skindo.

[Laughter.]

But they are not barbarians. They are a great people. The Empire is a sleeping giant, that will some time rouse from her slumbers, and it will be well for the United States to then be her friend. Let us be just in this matter. Our present laws are strict and adequate, and it seems to me that equity and wisdom both demand that Congress shall refuse to enact legislation that is clearly unnecessary, if not absolutely pernicious. The laboring men of this country are fully protected by the existing statute, and their interests will be safeguarded without the passage of a law that seems to me to be unwise in the highest degree.

Mr. President, there were some other matters connected with this question that I thought I might touch upon, but I have already trespassed upon the good nature of the Senate, and will content myself with what has already been said. Possibly later in the debate I may address myself to other phases of the question.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, there is a disposition abroad in the land which is not without its echo in Congress to object to legislation of the character of that embraced in this bill, on the ground that it is illiberal, uncharitable, and unchristian to deny to the Chinaman the same rights, privileges, and advantages in our land and under our institutions that are freely accorded to men of every other nationality. This disposition springs from a false and mistaken sentimentality founded on ignorance of Asiatic characteristics, and a failure to consider the duty which every Government owes to its own people.

The Chinaman is a man and brother, it is true, but with a physical and mental and moral organization so different from ours that he might have come from another planet. His physical organization is the result of four thousand years of struggle for existence under conditions of toil and starvation without a parallel in the world's history. That struggle has made him an animal without nerves. He is capable of enduring the most tremendous exertion, with a minimum of food and rest, under any climatic condition which the world presents. His mental and moral organization is what might be expected from such an environment. His conceptions all relate to his own wants and necessities. His affections embrace only his own immediate family. He is lacking absolutely in patriotism and in conceptions of civic duty. He observes his contracts fairly well because he has learned that he can not escape them, but in business matters generally his chief characteristic is duplicity and deceit, and this characteristic obtains among all classes from the highest to the lowest. He is absolutely devoid of morals as we understand morals. He is a gambler by instinct; cheats and lies as a matter of education; injures and slays his adversary without compunction and without loss of caste among his fellows, and considers female prostitution a virtue. I speak, of course, of the great mass of the lower class in China, and upon the authority of intelligent observers in that country, confirmed by what I myself have seen of that race on the Pacific coast. His only virtues are temperance and sobriety; his highest intellectual faculty, imitation; and his greatest value to the world, an unexcelled capacity for hard manual labor.

There are 450,000,000 of him in China, crowded and cramped, dragging out a cheerless existence under the same hard conditions that have prevailed there from the beginning. He is being pushed out into the world—those parts of it that are accessible to him—by overpopulation, and as its advantages become known to him he is coming out by choice; but wherever he goes and however long he stays, he never becomes anything but a Chinaman. Where his presence is sporadic, he stands out as a singular and unique but no unpleasing unit in the population, but he is never lost in it. Where he congregates in numbers, he transplants China bodily, its habits and customs, its vices and crimes, its outward signs and symbols, its ineradicable racial tendencies. It is possible for him to assimilate others, but for others he is non-assimilable. He is a Chinaman first, last, and all the time.

The Pacific coast lies opposite that of China on the Pacific Ocean. The demand for labor there and the rewards which it obtains make our country an Eldorado for the Chinaman. In a few years the most humble can by manual labor amass what is considered a competency in his own country. At the time the policy of Chinese exclusion was entered on in this country the immigration from there was so large and steady and continuous that but for the adoption of that policy the Asiatics would soon have outnumbered the whites on the Pacific coast. Even since the adoption of that policy and the most rigorous enforcement of stringent laws intended to carry it out, our Chinese population has continued to increase. The Treasury Department estimates that there are 300,000 Chinese laborers in the United States to-day, although there are only about 97,000 registered under existing laws.

Such is their craft and deceit that no law except one of absolute exclusion of all classes will prove effective in entirely excluding the prohibited classes. Throw down the bars and permit the Chinese laborers to come in at will and they will come to our country in a steady and in a steadily augmenting stream. It is not necessary to take the extreme view which some careful and philosophic observers have taken and look upon such an irruption as the beginning of the Asiatic march for the dominion of the world. There is much to cause alarm in the thought of what such an enormous horde, so inured to toil and hardship, might do if trained in arms and lead by a new Attila or Tamerlane. The Christian world may at some time, and at no distant day, be compelled to put forth all the energies of which it is capable to preserve its civilization against the yellow hordes of paganism; but the struggle will not be on this continent in the first instance, nor as the result, primarily, of Chinese immigration to our shores. But the result which would certainly follow unrestricted Chinese immigration to our country are baleful enough to make us pause and hesitate without considering the ultimate struggle between paganism and Christianity.

The labor of our land would be reduced by competition to the Chinese level of reward, to the Chinese level of subsistence and existence, to the Chinese level of faith and morals. The only alternative, and it is one that would certainly be adopted, would be that the intelligent, self-respecting labor of this country would rise in its might and drive the Chinaman into the sea, and if any government undertook to prevent, it would go down in the throes of insurrection and revolution. However much capital may need cheap and docile labor, however much it may chafe under conditions which our civilization and our free institutions and our universal education have built up in the matter of our labor supply and the demands which it makes for a fair share of the joint returns of capital and labor, it can not afford to look in the direction of China for relief. The American laborer will not be pauperized and paganized, and those who try the experiment will suffer equally with those upon whom the experiment is tried.

Moreover, the experiment is as needless as it would be heartless and wicked. The American laborer is the best in the world. He gives in increased efficiency a full return for the larger reward which he demands. The results obtained by him are the wonder of the world, and are being studied by the world. It is to be hoped that this will not be interfered with, that it may go on to its full fruition, so that the world may be brought to realize, not only the dignity of labor, but the material advantages which accrue from elevating and uplifting it.

Mr. President, it is this race, as I have described it, with its minimum of virtues and its maximum of vices, and with its virtues of a character to lower and debase to its own level of vice our free, intelligent, self-respecting citizenship, that our sentimentalists insist on inviting to membership in the great American family. We can not afford to do that, and there is no rule of law, human or divine, no principle of comity or charity or benevolence, which requires us to do so.

Nations, like individuals, have their own lives to lead, and since their lives, like those of individuals, are molded by their environment, they have the unquestioned right of seeking and creating the most favorable environment which their situation renders possible. They are not exempt, so far as they are necessarily brought into contact with other peoples, from the binding force of justice, morality, benevolence, and the application of the religious principles which find acceptance among them, but those principles have only a minor and secondary application to foreigners when nations come to regulate their own domestic life and determine the direction which their national development shall take. As to such matters they are still in a state of nature and need but to follow nature's law, and if that be some times cold and harsh, or appears to be so, it is the law given by the Almighty to all animate life for its advancement and perfection.

In regulating its internal economy a nation has the right and it is its unquestioned duty to proceed on the lines of the homely proverb that "charity begins at home." It does not end there, of course, but there is no room for its exercise abroad so long as it is imperatively required at home. The true sentiment, then, that which is not only true to nature, but to educated morality and benevolence and Christian charity, requires us to legislate now, not for the Chinaman, but for the American, and if in the process the former must go to the wall, then the God of nature, as well as the God of the Bible, give us their sanction and approval and say "amen" to our work. The Chinaman is a man and a brother, it is true, but if his advancement means our retrogression, if in order that he shall rise it be necessary that we shall sink, then let him rise and advance by his own effort and in the environments in which the Almighty left him, and it will be sufficient that we have placed no obstacle in his pathway. No law, either human or divine, natural or revealed, requires us at such a cost to extend to him a helping hand.

This I conceive to be the morality which governs nations in dealing with such questions as this one. It has been applied by us more or less toward the people of all the nations of the earth. The pauper, the cripple, the sick and infirm, even the criminal, are men and brothers, but we do not permit them to land on our shores to become charges on our bounty or to scatter physical and moral infection among our people. Perchance the pauper might prosper, the weak and infirm be healed, the criminal be reformed, but we take no chances in that direction. The American people, in their onward march to a greatness and perfection which no other people has ever attained, are entitled to move forward on a highway as broad and smooth and as free from obstructions as enlightened statesmanship can make it. This is national morality. This is the morality of true and enlightened statesmanship. I hope that it will always be exhibited and followed in the legislation of Congress. I hope and pray especially that it may be followed here to-day in dealing with this Chinese question, which presents a grave peril to the American people. Who is there that would pauperize the intelligent and self-respecting labor of this nation to the Asiatic level? Who is there that would invite the mental, moral, and physical miscegenation which unrestricted Chinese immigration would bring on our people? The degeneracy which would follow is unthinkable to those unfamiliar with the Asiatic races, but is only too apparent to those who have been brought into contact with them.

I remember vividly an excursion which I made through Chinatown in San Francisco a number of years ago. There was gathered there within limits not to exceed a quarter of a mile square, in business buildings given over to the Chinese inhabitants, probably 30,000 Chinamen and a few Chinawomen. They burrowed in the ground like rats. They roosted in the air like crows. They were packed in every available space like sardines. Even at midnight the entire quarter presented a scene of the greatest activity. There was light and noise and confusion everywhere, as if the people never rested. Of course, this was only seeming. I was taken through one five-story building devoted to rest and recuperation. The entry was through an areaway into a cellar. In this areaway and in all the passageways of the cellar, which were never closed against the weather, we stumbled over poor wretches huddled up, sleeping on the ground, while on the sides others were stretched in slumber on bare benches. Each of the five floors of the building was fitted up with tiers of wooden bunks, one on top of the other, reaching from the floor to the ceiling, about 2 feet wide by 6 feet long; and these tiers were packed so close together that there was barely room for locomotion between, and in each one of these bunks was a Chinaman. I should say that there were 500 Chinamen in this one building. The stench was something never to be forgotten.

In the buildings given over to vice, such as gambling, prostitution, opium smoking, and the highbinder societies, there were tunnels in the ground, perforations in the partitions, secret passageways, some leading to the roof, others to the underground tunnels, and others still into adjoining buildings. Entering one of these buildings, after traveling interminable passageways, climbing sometimes up to the roof and then descending down into the cellar, meeting all sorts of obstructions and barriers and overcoming them with cabalistic signs and words, seeing vice and debauchery and immorality in its ugliest and most repulsive forms, all the time accompanied with a powerful and all-prevailing effluvia of dirt and filth and opium smoke, one is turned out into the pure air of heaven with a realization never before experienced of God's goodness in providing that bounty for the use of his creatures.

On looking around, however, to take bearings one is surprised to find everything strange and unfamiliar, and is then informed that he has emerged on another street from that on which he entered and several hundred feet away from the point of entrance. I was told that all the buildings in Chinatown were honeycombed in this way for protection against the officers of the law. I shall not describe all that I saw on this excursion. The sights, sounds, and smells nauseate me to this day when I recall them. The general impression left on one's mind is that of a seething, reeking, heaving mass of vermin, intermixed and intertwined, each striving with all its might to satisfy some animal need or craving, and having nothing in the world in common with anything human except an ugly, debased, and stunted human form.

A similar condition prevails in the city of Portland, Oreg., although, possibly, not so exaggerated, and a similar condition of affairs is growing up in the city of Seattle, in my own State. We will have these seething, swarming sink holes of iniquity in every city in the Union within twenty years if our present system of Chinese exclusion be broken down or materially weakened. If our good women who, annoyed by the servant-girl question, are petitioning us to break down our present laws and let the Chinamen in could see these dens from which their domestic force is recruited as they actually exist, they would as soon think of taking vipers into their bosoms as to admit these moral lepers into their households to contaminate and destroy their pure atmosphere.

Let me refer, in this connection, to some of the testimony from California presented to the Senate Committee on Immigration while that committee was considering the bill now under consideration. This testimony is found on pages 86, 87, and 88 of Senate Report 776, part 2.

Mr. Livernash said:

I have here a table, compiled from the public records of the city and county of San Francisco, for the twenty-one years beginning with 1880.

It shows 1,311 arrests of Chinese persons within that period in San Francisco on charges of felony, and the list of crimes includes arson, abduction, assault with deadly weapon, assault to murder, assault to rob, attempt to bribe, burglary, attempt at burglary, extortion, embezzlement, forgery, grand larceny, kidnaping, libel, murder (more than 100 cases), mayhem, passing counterfeit money, perjury, rape, robbery, receiving stolen goods, smuggling, and threat to kill.

The table further shows that there were 31,161 arrests in the same period of Chinese persons charged with misdemeanors, including petit larceny.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that in San Francisco?

Mr. LIVERNASH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How many Chinese are there?

Mr. LIVERNASH. We have, according to the last census, under 20,000. According to the estimate of the Treasury Department we have between 50,000 and 60,000.

Returning to the matter I was discussing, I shall read from a letter addressed by the chief of police of Sacramento, a place of about 30,000 inhabitants, to Mr. Woods, now a Representative in Congress from California. The chief of police says:

"The total number of Chinese arrested in this city (not including Sacramento County) from January 1, 1891, to January 1, 1901, was 852, as follows:

"Seventy-three for felonies. Of this number 57 were held to answer; 16 were discharged. These 73 arrests were for murder, murderous assaults, burglary, and grand larceny.

"Seven hundred and seventy-nine for misdemeanors—petit larceny, opium smoking, gaming, and violating city ordinances; 624 were convicted; 155 were discharged.

"In this community, as well as in every other place where Chinese abound, the ruin of a great many of our American youths is traceable to a habit peculiarly common among the Chinese, namely, opium smoking. This habit was almost unknown in this State until the Chinese came. A review of the 1,370 convicts at San Quentin prison and of the 771 quartered at Folsom will, I think, bear out my assertion that 40 per cent of the convicts are now such through the opium habit, contracted directly or indirectly through associating with the Chinese."

I quote as follows from a letter received last October by Congressman Woods from the city marshal of Santa Rosa, a California community of about 8,000 inhabitants, in the heart of an exclusively agricultural and horticultural district:

"The number of Chinese arrested in the last ten years in Santa Rosa is 30, which seems ridiculously small. But the Chinese do not offend in a way that you can locate and arrest. They are rather a festering sore, or a rotten apple in a box of good ones. Two-thirds of the young girls who have gone wrong since I have held office have been led astray by Chinese at an age—viz, 9, 10, 11, 12—when no white man would pay any attention to them. The Chinese start in by giving money and candy to them. I do not mean by this all the girls who have gone wrong, but all who are notorious and publicly recognized as unchaste.

"Then, too, it is impossible to estimate the far-reaching effects of opium smoking. The public does not realize what a curse it is becoming. The very highest have fallen victims."

I quote also in this connection some statements from travelers and sojourners in China, who have observed its people and have spoken concerning their mental and moral characteristics:

Lord George Curzon, in his Problems of the Far East: "The board (tsungli yamen) is in reality a board of delay. Its object is to palaver, and glaze, and promise, and do nothing." (P. 253.)

Henry Norman, in his Peoples and Politics of the Far East: "Every Chinese official, with the possible exception of one in a thousand, is a liar, a thief, and a tyrant." (P. 282.)

"Dirt, falsehood, corruption, and cruelty are some of the least objectionable of Chinese vices." (P. 287.)

"Chinese literature inculcates all the virtues; Chinese life exhibits all the vices, Chinese professions—and this is the point where foreign diplomats have so often gone astray—are everything that is desirable; Chinese practices are everything that is most convenient. 'The life and state papers of a Chinese statesman,' wrote Mr. George Wingrove Cooke, 'like the Confessions of Rousseau, abound in the finest sentiments and the foulest deeds. He cuts off 10,000 heads, and cites a passage from Mencius about the sanctity of human life. He pockets the money given him to repair an embankment, and thus inundates a province; and he deplores the land loss to the cultivator of the soil. He makes a treaty which he secretly declares to be only a deception for the moment, and he exclaims against the crime of perjury.'" (Pp. 294, 295.)

Professor Robert K. Douglas, in his Society in China:

"There is no country in the world where practice and profession are more widely separated than in China. The Empire is preeminently one of make-believe. From the Emperor to the meanest of his subjects a system of high-sounding pretension to lofty principles of morality holds sway; while the life of the nation is in direct contradiction to these assumptions. No imperial edict is complete and no official proclamation finds currency without protections in favor of all the virtues. And yet few courts are more devoid of truth and uprightness, and no magistracy is more corrupt than those of the Celestial Empire." (P. 3.)

Rounseville Wildman, in his China's Open Door:

"Perjury is not a crime in China, as it is taken for granted that every man will lie as long as it will benefit him." (P. 264.)

"A Chinaman will lay as clever plans to cheat or fool some particular god as to blind the eyes of a rival firm." (P. 235.)

Dr. Williams, who spent forty-three years in China, in his Middle Kingdom, on pages 894, 895, and 896, speaks of the Chinese people thus:

With a general regard for outward decency they are vile and polluted in a shocking degree; their conversation is full of filthy expressions and their lives of impure acts. They are somewhat restrained in the latter by fences put around the family circle, so that seduction and adultery are comparatively infrequent; the former may even be said to be rare; but brothels and their inmates occur everywhere on land and on water. One danger attending young girls going abroad alone is that they will be stolen for incarceration in these gates of hell. By pictures, songs, and aphrodisiacs they excite their sensuality, and, as the apostle says, "receive in themselves that recompense of their error that is meet."

More ineradicable than the sins of flesh is the falsity of the Chinese and its attendant sin of base ingratitude; their disregard for truth has perhaps done more to lower their character than any other fault. They feel no shame at being detected in a lie (though they have not gone quite so far as not to know when they have lied) nor do they fear any punishment from their gods for it.

A Chinese requires but little motive to falsify, and he is constantly sharpening his wits to cozen his customer—wheedle him by promise and cheat him in goods or work. There is nothing which tries one so much when living among them as their disregard of truth, and renders him so indifferent as to what calamities may befall so mendacious a race; an abiding impression of suspicion toward everybody rests upon the mind which chills the warmest wish for their welfare and thwarts many a plan to benefit them. Their better traits diminish in the distance, and patience is exhausted in its daily proximity and friction with this ancestor of all sins.

Thieving is common, and the illegal exaction of the rulers, as has already been sufficiently pointed out, are most burdensome. * * * Female infanticide in some parts openly confessed, and divested of all disgrace and penalties everywhere; the dreadful prevalence of all the vices charged by the Apostle Paul upon the ancient heathen world; the alarming extent of the use of opium—furnished, too, under the patronage and supplied in purity by the power and skill of Great Britain from India—destroying the production and natural resources of the people; the universal practice of lying and dishonest dealing, the unblushing lewdness of old and young; harsh cruelty toward prisoners by officers and tyranny over slaves by masters—all form a full, unchecked torrent of human depravity, and prove the existence of a kind and degree of moral degradation of which an excessive statement can scarcely be made or an adequate conception hardly be formed.

Mr. Livernash, of the California Chinese commission, in his admirable address before the Senate Committee on Immigration, which I wish every Senator would read, has collected from the authorities on the question of the tremendous capabilities of the Chinese, their latent power, and the effect on the occidental industry of their competition. I can not improve on his industry in collating, nor upon the eloquent force with which he drives home his conclusions, and shall content myself on that branch of the discussion with quoting from his address:

There is no people on the earth capable of surviving free competition with the Chinese. His Excellency Wu Ting-fang was not exaggerating when he wrote that his countrymen can outwork other peoples, whether in polar cold or torrid heat, subsisting the while on a rice diet. He but confirmed the observations of all expert inquirers.

"The truth is," says England's agent, Mr. Bourne, after extensive inquiry in China, "that a man of good physical and intellectual qualities, regarded merely as an economic factor, is turned out cheaper by the Chinese than by any other race. He is deficient in the higher moral qualities, individual trustworthiness, public spirit, sense of duty, and active courage, a group of qualities, perhaps, best represented in our language by the word manliness; but in the humbler moral qualities of patience, mental and physical, and perseverance in labor he is unrivaled."

"No occidental," says Wildman, "can comprehend the full measure of Chinese economy. It is an art and a science that has been perfected through the centuries. * * * Two cents a day is a fair estimate per head of what it costs to feed 300,000,000 of China's 400,000,000. * * * Absence of nerves and ability to suffer is a God-given gift, and makes the Chinese equal to an existence that would blot out European civilization in two generations. One can not but wonder if, in the struggle for the possession of the earth that is now taking place, the white man of 'nerves' may not in the end go down before the yellow man without 'nerves.'"

To the same effect is the testimony of Reinsch and Hearn; and as for Kipling, well, in his singularly terse way of summarizing clear observations, he says of the men of China: "A people without nerves as without digestion, and, if report speaks truly, without morals." And again: "There are three races who can work, but there is only one that can swarm. These people work and spread. They pack close and eat everything, and they can live on nothing." And yet again: "They will overwhelm the world."

Not even in the Far East, where standards of life are primitive and heredity has not made strikingly for nervous development and sensitiveness, can the Chinese people be overcome when they determine to hold ground in competition.

"Better artists and stronger workmen, man for man," says Kipling, speaking of the Chinese in comparison with the Hindu and the Japanese.

And, writing of Singapore, he tells us: "India ended so long ago that I can not even talk about the natives of the place. They are all Chinese, except where they are French, or Dutch, or German. England is, by the unformed, supposed to own the island. The rest belongs to China and the Continent, but chiefly China."

Forty centuries of privation, of fierce competition within China for the most wretched subsistence, have left ineffaceable impressions on the yellow race; have given that race a minimum of nerves, power to work hard with little food and with little sleep, and to rest under the most uncomfortable conditions; have given that race qualities of self-control, servility, fatalism, perseverance, which no Caucasian nation can or ever should approximate and which no Caucasian nation can afford to ignore.

I think I can understand Kipling's point of view when he spoke of Canton as reminding him of those "horrible sponges, full of worms, that grow in warm seas," and, again, as "a big blue sink of a city full of tunnels, all dark, and inhabited by yellow devils, a city that Doré ought to have seen;" and I think he was not hysterical in drawing back with fear on contemplating China's 400,000,000 subjects—fear lest the day should dawn when there would creep out of Asia a yellow tide that would overwhelm the Occident.

I tremble myself when I think what possibilities lie in stirring this terrible people—one-third the population of the globe—into industrial effectiveness, into political greatness, into—well, that is the terrifying problem: Into what?

Who shall say? We may be loosing the whirlwind. We may be tearing down a flood gate now holding back a pent torrent irresistible if set free. Out of the land of the dragon may sweep some modern Kublai Khan, some new Tamerlane—not, perhaps, with fire and sword, but with industry and rice—to destroy our Christian civilization.

The Chinese possess the qualities out of which may come great skill in almost every employment of life; and where they lack, just now, in skill, they throw into the equation their terrible numbers, their dreadful perseverance, their amazing endurance; and when the American workman has reached in competition a level below which he can not go without less of sunshine, less of beef, less of care for the generation to follow him, less of concern for the institutions of his race and his country, the Chinaman has reached only the beginning of his capability to sink, for inch by inch he can go down with his white competitor, until that competitor falls fainting and surrenders, leaving him with the employment for his own and his powers of sinking scarcely touched. In struggle for place the yellow man needs only as equipment a little rice and a little opium. He is not encumbered by the refinements of Christian civility, by sense of civic duty, by family ties.

Why, Senators, it stirs the blood in protest—the thought of hesitation among white men when it is proposed that we guard our own from the touch of horrid competition with the tragic product of China's ages of black mistakes!

On the question of the right, power, and duty of every nation to protect itself against such horrid and debasing conditions as those which unrestricted Chinese immigration would bring on our people, I shall content myself with two quotations.

In 1892 Mr. Wharton, then Assistant Secretary of State, responding to numerous complaints made by the Chinese minister on the subject of our exclusion laws, addressed a letter to that functionary in which our policy and the grounds on which that policy is defensible were so clearly and conclusively stated and maintained that it is only necessary to read it to answer every possible criticism that has been made of the general principle of the present bill.

I read from Mr. Wharton's letter:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 10, 1892.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reception of your two notes of the respective dates of November 7 and November 11, 1892, concerning the recent legislation of the Congress of the United States "in respect to Chinese subjects" in this country.

In the former of these two notes you refer to certain unanswered notes of your predecessor and of yourself as containing a full discussion of the provision of the act of Congress approved October 1, 1888. That statute was brought about by the regrettable failure to complete the treaty signed at Washington March 12, 1888. It does not seem necessary at this late date to discuss the circumstances under which the treaty of 1888 failed, or to conjecture whether, had it been duly perfected, it would have served to avert the difficulties or meet the issues which have since arisen. That the failure of that treaty, through the withholding of the Imperial ratification, exerted a prejudicial influence upon American sentiment thereafter is hardly open to doubt.

Neither does it seem necessary to the present object to enter into a full historical and analytical review of the variant conditions which have existed in the United States and China since the first treaties were signed in regard to the treatment of aliens. It would not be difficult to show that from the outset the position of the foreigner in China has been one of violation and exclusion, his rights being limited under treaties to certain specified objects within the narrow limits of the treaty ports, and extended only at the will of the Chinese Government to residence and travel in the interior. The foreign States, by their compacts with China, have implicitly recognized the inherent right of that Empire to regulate the domicile and business of aliens within its borders by soliciting and obtaining from China the limited privileges expressed by the formal treaties and the expanded privileges growing out of them. Nor would it be difficult to argue with convincing force that the application of this right by China is governed in its manifestations by the inherent immiscibility of the Mongolian and Caucasian races. As are all Europeans to the native Chinese communities, so are the Chinese to the communities of European blood—a people apart, not willing to be engrafted upon the national life, and dwelling under the special license of an artificially created necessity.

Reserving, therefore, all considerations of these aspects of the general question I confine this communication to the precise points you make touching the recent legislation of Congress renewing the acts passed for the execution of the treaty of 1880. Those acts being limited in their effects to a fixed term of years, which, in the judgment of Congress came to an end in May last, it became necessary to reenact them for a further term, with such safeguards as experience should have shown to be needful. While more precisely providing for the exclusion of new-coming Chinese laborers from our shores, in pursuance of a policy in regard to which the negotiations of immediately preceding years had shown the two Governments to be in substantial accord, the new legislation aimed to meet the case of the Chinese subjects actually residing and laboring in the United States by providing the means whereby their right to remain and enjoy the privileges of residence stipulated in the existing treaties should be confirmed to them by an orderly scheme of individual identification and certification. The statute as completely aims to protect the persons and rights of all Chinese persons entitled to residential privileges as it does to prevent their fraudulent enjoyment by those not entitled thereto.

You are pleased to state that the proceedings which led to this legislation itself were not required by any existing emergency that had arisen between the two nations, but in this you overlook the circumstance that the theretofore existing temporary legislation under the old treaties was about to terminate by its own time limitation, as also the fact that the abrupt failure of the negotiations for a fuller international accord on the general subject had not only devolved upon the Congress of the United States the necessity for dealing with the matter by the municipal resorts pertaining to sovereignty, but had moreover aroused an unfortunate belief that the attitude of China was obstructive and the claims of China unreasonable. That this belief is without solid foundation I am happy to assume; that it did exist, and under the circumstances with good show of reason, must be frankly admitted.

Much of the argument in the preceding notes of your legation, to which you refer and which you incorporate in your present notes, rests upon the assumed claim that the status of Chinese subjects with respect to the body politic of the United States is on the same footing as that of all other aliens of whatever nationality. Neither in the light of international reciprocity nor in that of municipal sovereignty can these assumptions hold good. The restrictions upon foreigners in China are special and onerous as to vocation, residence, and travel, and are based on the natural barriers which seem to forbid the assimilation of the foreign element with the native Chinese race.

This condition of immiscibility is likewise as forcibly present in the case of Chinese in the United States as it is generally absent in regard to aliens of the same race and blood as our own. It is the inherent prerogative of sovereignty to take cognizance of such incompatibilities and to provide special conditions for the toleration of the unassimilable element in the national community. China's treatment of foreigners can only be justified on such grounds. Moreover, this sovereign right is freely exercised by the United States in the adoption of restrictive or discriminatory legislation in regard to any classes of alien immigration whenever the exigencies of the public interests demand and to whatever extent may be requisite.

The Supreme Court of the United States has spoken to the same effect and with equal force. In the Chinese-exclusion case, reported in 130 United States, at page 581, Mr. Justice Field, delivering the opinion of the court, uses this language:

To preserve its independence and give security against foreign aggression and encroachment is the highest duty of every nation, and to attain these ends nearly all other considerations are to be subordinated. It matters not in what form such aggression and encroachment come, whether from the foreign nation acting in its national character or from vast hordes of its people crowding in upon us. The Government, possessing the powers which are to be exercised for protection and security, is clothed with authority to determine the occasion on which the power shall be called forth; and its determination, so far as the subjects affected are concerned, are necessarily conclusive upon all its departments and officers. If, therefore, the Government of the United States, through its legislative department, considers the presence of foreigners of a different race in this country, who will not assimilate with us, to be dangerous to its peace and security, their exclusion is not to be stayed because at the time there are no actual hostilities with the nation of which the foreigners are subjects. The existence of war would render the necessity of the proceeding only more obvious and pressing. The same necessity in a less pressing degree may arise when war does not exist, and the same authority which adjudges the necessity in one case must also determine it in the other. * * *

The power of the Government to exclude foreigners from the country whenever, in its judgment, the public interest requires such exclusion has been asserted in repeated instances, and never denied by the executive or legislative departments.

In a communication made in December, 1852, to Mr. A. Dudley Mann, at one time a special agent of the Department of State in Europe, Mr. Everett, then Secretary of State under President Fillmore, writes:

"This Government could never give up the right of excluding foreigners whose presence it might deem a source of danger to the United States. Nor will this Government consider such exclusion of American citizens from Russia necessarily a matter of diplomatic complaint to that country."

In a dispatch to Mr. Fay, our minister to Switzerland, in March, 1856, Mr. Marcy, Secretary of State under President Pierce, writes:

"Every society possesses the undoubted right to determine who shall compose its members, and it is exercised by all nations both in peace and war."

"It may always be questionable whether a resort to this power is warranted by the circumstances, or what department of the Government is empowered to exert it; but there can be no doubt that it is possessed by all nations, and that each may decide for itself when the occasion arises demanding its exercise."

In a communication in September, 1860, to Mr. Washburne, our minister to France, Mr. Fish, Secretary of State under President Grant, uses this language:

"The control of the people within its limits and the right to expel from its territory persons who are dangerous to the peace of the state are too clearly within the essential attributes of sovereignty to be seriously contested. Strangers visiting or sojourning in a foreign country voluntarily submit themselves to the laws and customs, and the municipal laws of France authorizing the expulsion of strangers are not of such recent date, nor has the exercise of the power by the Government of France been so infrequent, that sojourners within her territory can claim surprise when the power is put in force."

Mr. President, I do not think the policy of this bill can be successfully questioned, either from the standpoint of the interests of our own people, or from the standpoint of that comity which we owe to the Government and the people of China. We have a perfect right, without offending against any just demand of China, to enact the bill into law, and we would be recreant to our own people and to the high civilization which has made them what they are if we did not enact it into law. Believing that these facts are generally recognized in both branches of Congress, I pass now to a consideration of some of the features of the bill. Generally speaking, the bill is a compilation and revision of existing laws, and of Treasury regulations made pursuant to law and having the force and effect of law, with some liberalization concerning the excepted classes that may come into our country. In confirmation of this statement I invite Senators to examine the provisions of this bill and the corresponding provisions of existing laws and regulations, printed in parallel columns, and found in Senate Report No. 776, pages 150 to 214, both inclusive.

I have the book here; it is easily accessible to all Senators, and I am satisfied that if they will procure it and examine the parallel columns, showing the present law and the proposed legislation, they will see that there is nothing in the claim that the present bill is any more harsh in its provisions than those under which our country has been proceeding for the last twenty years or ever since the policy of Chinese exclusion was entered upon.

For instance, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] was proceeding this morning with his several complaints as to the peculiar hardships of the bill, I turned to the part of the report to which I have referred and readily saw in the reprint of the present laws or of the present Treasury regulations therein set forth provisions in every respect identical with the things which he complains of as being in the proposed law.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Washington allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Has the Senator carefully examined the provisions of the treaty of 1894 and compared them with the present bill, and does he think there is any conflict between the terms of the treaty of 1894 and this bill? That is the only question about which I worry.

Mr. TURNER. I have examined them with some particularity. I do not find that there is any conflict at all. For instance, the Senator from New Hampshire complained that the bill restricted the right to come to our country to five classes other than laborers, to wit: Officials, teachers, students, merchants, travelers for curiosity or pleasure, and said this was contrary to the letter and spirit of the treaty of 1894, and limited the rights of all others to come who would have the right to come under the treaty, to wit: Merchants, bankers, and others of that class. By turning to page 155 of this report it will be seen that by section 4 of the present bill the right of the excepted classes is confined to officials, teachers, students, merchants, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure. Now, in the parallel columns I find printed article 3 of the convention of 1894 with China, from which I read:

The provisions of this convention shall not affect the right at present enjoyed of Chinese subjects, being officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for curiosity or pleasure.

Exactly the language of this bill.

There was some controversy between our commissioners and the diplomatic functionaries of China as to the particular wording of this section of the treaty, but it was finally boiled down into this shape, and the express mention in the treaty of those classes who are to be permitted to come here, limiting it to officials, travelers for curiosity or pleasure, merchants, students, and teachers, is a treaty recognition of the fact that those only are the classes who are to be permitted to come here.

The principle of construction, expressio unius est exclusio alterius, applies to the construction of treaties as to laws, and when China expressly undertook to provide the particular class of persons who might come here she impliedly acquiesced in the exclusion of all others. And that has been the construction of the courts, the construction of the executive officers of the Government, and the construction which China herself has put upon the treaty.

Mr. CLAY. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I believe the bill provides that a child born of Chinese parents in our insular possessions after the passage of this act shall not come into the United States. I should like to ask the Senator's views in regard to that point.

Mr. TURNER. If the Senator will excuse me at this point, I will get to that a little further on.

Mr. CLAY. Very well.

Mr. TURNER. Here is the language of the act of 1888. The Senator from New Hampshire claims that this is a stringent measure, going much beyond other laws, but the law of 1888 provided:

That Chinese officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for pleasure or curiosity shall be permitted to enter the United States, but in order to entitle themselves to do so they shall first obtain the permission of the Chinese Government or other government of which they may at the time be citizens or subjects.

Here are the opinions of the Attorney-General of the United States on the subject:

The policy of the Government being against the admission of Chinese laborers, treaty provisions making exceptions should not be extended by construction to cases not falling within the plain scope of the language used. (Opinion of Attorney-General, October 14, 1896; 21-424.)

The true theory of the Federal law is not that all Chinese persons may enter this country who are not forbidden, but that only those may enter who are expressly allowed. (Opinion of Attorney-General, July 15, 1893; 22-130.)

So it will be seen that this particular provision, against which the Senator from New Hampshire declaimed as being illiberal, and as going much beyond what was ever provided for by existing law, is identically what was intended by the treaty of 1894, is identically what was provided by the act of 1888; and both the treaty and the former law have been construed by the Treasury Department and by the Attorney-General to mean exactly that which it is made to mean in the present bill.

The same thing may be said as to the criticisms of that Senator as to the definition of "merchants" and "students" and others, and as to the regulations thrown around their entry and their stay in this country. The present bill is nothing but a reenactment of former laws or former regulations relating to said classes, except that it is liberalized as to merchants.

With the exceptions which I shall presently notice, it is a literal fact that this bill is a reenactment of existing law, and the prime necessity for its reenactment is found in the fact that existing law will expire by its own limitation on the 4th day of next May, and it must be reenacted if we are to have Chinese exclusion after that date. The bill is not the work alone of the California Chinese commission, or of the Pacific coast Senators and Representatives, but the officials of the Treasury Department and of the Department of Justice assisted in framing it. Those provisions, which seem most harsh, are taken from the regulations framed by those officials and administered by them for the last ten years, and their testimony is strong and emphatic that those provisions are necessary if we are to have any efficient exclusion of Chinese laborers.

The craft and guile of the Chinese and their contempt for the treaty obligations of their own country have made the fullest and most minute and specific provisions designed to carry into effect existing treaty obligations indispensably necessary.

No rogue e'er felt the halter draw
With good opinion of the law.

And probably no Chinaman, in his attempt to evade our exclusion law, ever run up against these full and specific provisions and regulations, or ever will do so, with good opinion of them. But it is a fact that they have all been of force and have been applied for many years without interrupting our friendly relations with China, and there is no good reason to suppose that their continued application and enforcement in the future will have any other or different result. But however that may be, they are essential to the policy of Chinese exclusion, and since that policy is based on consideration relating to our own internal economy, I apprehend that any unfounded views which China might take of our policy and of our just laws designed to enforce it would not be forceful in governing the action of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives.

There is no disposition on the part of the friends of this bill to offend the Chinese by harsh and unnecessary legislation, or to violate any treaty obligation we have with them. Every single provision of the bill is in affirmation of present treaty provisions or designed to secure their faithful observance. It is impossible to read the present existing treaty and say that, either as to the excluded classes or as to the privileged classes or as to the Chinese already in this country, the bill goes beyond the treaty in any single feature prejudicial to the rights of the Chinese. The friends of the bill challenge the most rigid scrutiny in that respect. In this connection it is proper to say that the present treaty with China, which this bill is in aid of, does not expire until the year 1914. It is assumed by many that it expires in 1904, but this is an error. The treaty may be denounced by either China or the United States at the end of ten years from its promulgation, and in that event it will expire in 1904, but in the absence of such action it continues in force for twenty years, or until 1914.

If the present policy of exclusion be continued by the passage of this bill, it is certain that China will not denounce the present treaty, but will permit it to continue in force until it expires by its own limitation. The sure and certain way to invite a denunciation of that treaty in 1904, and thus bring about a condition of affairs which will compel us to choose between a failure to safeguard our own interests or the necessity of violating treaty obligations which would be revived by the denunciation of the present treaty, will be to defeat this measure and adopt a halfway measure indicating to China that we are disposed to conform our exclusion policy to her views and wishes. If this bill be rightly understood, and it is very easy to misconstrue it unless it be carefully studied, I feel assured that only those will vote against it who are, in truth, opposed to any exclusion of the Chinese without the consent of China, and who would a little rather that China would not, than that she would, consent to exclusion.

One of the new features of this bill is found in its second section, which reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act the entry into the American mainland territory of the United States of Chinese laborers coming from any of the insular territory of the United States shall be absolutely prohibited; and this prohibition shall apply to all Chinese laborers, as well to those who were in such insular territory when the same was acquired by the United States as to those who have come there since, and it shall also apply to those who have been born there since, and to those who may be born there hereafter. And the same prohibition of entry shall apply to Chinese laborers coming to one island of the United States from any other insular territory of the United States, except territory of a group whereof such island is a member. But the privileges of transit hereinafter given to other Chinese persons are hereby given to Chinese laborers in all territory of the United States, subject to the conditions hereinafter expressed.

Some of the friends of this bill are reluctant to support it, deeming the section just read, or, at least, some parts of it, to be unconstitutional, but the only provision in the section which presents any constitutional difficulties to my mind is the one forbidding Chinese born in any of our insular possessions since their acquisition by us to come into what is called "American mainland territory" or to go from one insular territory to another. Children of Chinese parentage born in the Philippines since the acquisition of the latter by us would be citizens of the United States under the decisions of our Supreme Court, that is, provided we have, in fact, acquired the islands and extended our sovereignty over them in the sense that our sovereignty is extended over our other Territorial possessions.

As to all other classes prohibited by section 2, there is no constitutional difficulty in my judgment. They have none of them yet become citizens of the United States, and they may never become so, and until they do become citizens, if they ever do, Congress may constitutionally limit their right to be or remain in any part of the Territories of the United States. We have seen this proposition declared and the reasons for it stated in the Chinese-exclusion case reported in 130 U. S., from which I have heretofore read. No person in the Philippine Islands, I apprehend, has become a citizen of the United States by reason of the mere fact of the cession of those islands to us. Under the principles of international law, natives of the islands would have become citizens by the mere cession of the islands but for the fact that the treaty of cession provided a different rule, as it was competent for it to do. That treaty left the status of the inhabitants to be fixed by the Congress of the United States, and citizenship or no citizenship is a part of the political status of that people, and a part of it which yet remains to be fixed and determined. It would be barbarous, however, to hold those islands and deny to the inhabitants of native blood the rights of citizenship, and I do not apprehend that that will ever be done.

But we are under no obligations, either legal or moral, to take in the Chinese who are there, and I do not apprehend that that will ever be done. So that none of the classes prohibited by section 2 of the bill, unless it be children born in the Philippines since the acquisition of the islands by us, are either now citizens or are likely to become such by the action of Congress. It follows, therefore, that we may constitutionally limit their right of locomotion as the interest or safety of our country may seem to require. This does not involve the question, so much discussed, whether the Constitution of the United States extended to the new Territories immediately on their acquisition by us. The positions that I have taken are not affected by that question. They are correct, if correct at all, even with that instrument in full force in the Philippines, because the Constitution does not undertake to define the political status of the inhabitants who come to us along with newly acquired territory. This status is fixed by international law, with the qualification that the treaty of cession may override the international law, and that the action of Congress, after the acquisition, may override both. Some distinguished lawyers, in discussing this question, have assumed that the application of the Constitution to our new possessions depended on the question of the citizenship of the inhabitants. I do not think there is anything in that position. In a speech delivered in this Chamber on March 13-14, 1900, I said, in discussing that question:

But are the principles of constitutional government which were laid down by our fathers dependent on the citizenship of all or any part of the people of territory covered by our flag? If so, how many native or naturalized Americans must go to such territory before it is covered with the protecting mantle of the Constitution? Would not one be as effective for that purpose as a million? I respectfully submit that the Constitution does not depend for its effect on the peripatetic tendencies of the American people. While it was made primarily for the American people and their posterity, it embraces and covers and protects all people without regard to nationality who are residing temporarily or permanently under the shadow of the American flag. This proposition has been determined so lately and so authoritatively that I need not refer to the cases establishing it. The Senator from Kentucky, like everybody else who maintains his side of this question, persistently confuses political rights, which belong to the citizen alone, with those constitutional safeguards for personal right and equal governmental burdens, which belong, under our Constitution, to everybody within the territorial dominion of the United States. What political rights, if any, the inhabitants of Territories shall enjoy, and what the form of government through which they shall be enjoyed, whether it shall be simple and arbitrary, like that devised originally for Louisiana, or complex and liberal, like that lately adopted for Hawaii, is absolutely within the discretion of Congress.

The decisions on the subject are too many and too positive to permit the proposition to be doubted; and it is in this sense that the Supreme Court has been speaking in every case where it has declared the power of Congress over the Territories to be plenary and unlimited. But on the subject of those governmental burdens which the genius of our institutions require to be equal everywhere, and the withholding of which led to the establishment of our Republic, and on the subject of life, liberty, and property and the full and perfect enjoyment thereof, Congress, in legislating for the Territories, is subject to all the limitations of the Constitution. The decisions on this subject are likewise too many and too positive to permit the proposition to be doubted, save by those who, "having eyes, see not, and having ears, hear not."

Mr. President, I have heard nothing in the full and ample discussion of the subject which we have had in Congress and have seen nothing in the opinions of the court rendered in the insular cases which has induced me to modify the views expressed in the speech from which I have quoted. On the other hand, further consideration and reflection has only tended to confirm my conviction that they are sound and correct.

If I am right thus far, then the only provision of section 2 which can be questioned from a constitutional standpoint is that one limiting the rights of children of Chinese parentage born in our insular possessions since we acquired these possessions. But as to such inhabitants, since their parents can not come here, and they are not likely to come of their own accord until they reach the age of puberty, it will be in the neighborhood of twenty years before the question of their rights can ever become practical and concrete. Before any of them can ever have any interest which will be affected by this section the questions upon which their right will depend will have been determined and settled by our courts, and nothing in this bill will affect them one way or the other. The question to-day is abstract and speculative.

In view of the character of the legislation being put on our statute books every day concerning our insular possessions, to object to this most wholesome and necessary measure because of one abstract feature, small and insignificant in itself, is something like swallowing a camel and straining at a gnat. Besides all this, however clear any of us may be in our views of constitutional law applicable to our new possessions, it must be admitted, in view of the expressions in the decisions of our court of last resort, that the ultimate determination of all these constitutional questions is involved in doubt and obscurity. Let us not, then, foreclose the just interests of our own countrymen in deference to supposed rights of alien blood, which may be found ultimately to have had no existence, and which, if they do exist, will be fully established by our courts long before the rights can ever be asserted. And, finally, I have an abiding faith that no long time is destined to elapse before justice and expediency will be found running in parallel lines in the policy to be pursued by this country toward the Philippine Islands.

When that day comes we will freely accord to the Philippines that liberty and independence which they fairly won from Spain, and which we have thus far so unjustly withheld from them. We will certainly do this if it shall ever be adjudicated by our court of last resort that they are a conduit through which the population of China may filter into the United States; and for this reason I do not think the question of the rights of the Chinese children, of tender years, born in the Philippines, is of any great moment, or at least of sufficient moment to justify legislators in voting against any feature of this most necessary and well-considered bill. In conclusion upon this point I beg leave to read to the Senate from the powerful presentation before the Senate Immigration Committee, made by Mr. Livernash, of the California Chinese commission. I confess that this presentation overcame any scruples I had entertained concerning the features of the bill which I have been discussing, and I hope and believe it will be equally effective with others entertaining the same scruples.

I read from Senate Report No. 776, part 2, pages 80, 81, and 82:

We are not unmindful of the difficulties of the proposal that freedom of locomotion be limited.

We are aware that some gentlemen very sincerely differ with the proponents of the theory that the Congress can constitutionally say to Chinese persons lawfully in the Philippines, "You may remain in the archipelago, but you may not enter the continental dominion of the United States."

We are aware also that some who feel that the Congress can lawfully say this to a Chinese person who has entered the Philippines since the cession of islands to our Government think that the National Legislature can not lawfully say it to a Chinese person who was an inhabitant of the Philippines at the time of the cession, though not a native.

We are yet further aware that some believe the Congress can say this lawfully to Chinese persons who, not being natives of the islands, were therein at the time of the cession or have properly come there since, but can not constitutionally say it to a native of the archipelago.

These difficulties are some of the number arising from the very nature of the attempt to hold the Philippines domestic for some purposes and foreign for others.

However, we are assuming that the majority, at least, in this Congress is proceeding on the theory that the Congress has the full right to fix the status of even the natives of the Philippines, and that, independently of Congressional action, the people of the Philippines have not been incorporated into the body of American citizens; and we are assuming that the minority, while holding that the Constitution in its full vigor follows the flag, and that the Congress, itself a creature of the Constitution, has not the power to withhold from or to legislate into any territory whatsoever under our flag the Federal organic law, or to strain or modify in any particular whatever the basic theory of our Republic as expressed in the Declaration of Independence, nevertheless does not desire to prevent the endangered Pacific States from taking the theory of the majority in its fullness and having it passed upon not by the legislators, but by the judges, of the Republic.

We represent, in pursuant to this line of argument, that it is the duty of Congress—forever pledged, we feel, to a policy of excluding Chinese laborers from competition with our own Caucasians—that it is the duty of the Congress to retain for us all of the debatable ground upon the difficult constitutional questions proposed, questions which are doubtless in the minds of every member of this Congress who has given the subject any thought.

It is not for the Congress of our country to take away from us the chance of having our day in court, and fighting for the protection of the States along the Pacific seaboard. Those States are no more responsible than any other States of this Union for the unhappy conditions out of which came the cession of the Philippine Islands to our country. But those States, more than any other States in all the Union, are entitled, by virtue of their long suffering under Chinese immigration and by their proximity to the Asiatic mainland, to come to the Congress and insistently to demand, with hopefulness, that the Congress shall strain every point within its power in favor of the doing of those things that must be done under the unfortunate conditions in order to give to the people of such States, and in a secondary sense to the people of all the other States, sufficient protection against the evil the exclusion policy was designed to terminate.

Those gentlemen who can dispute with us the constitutional points involved, and who put the subjunctive mood into all their discussion—as, for example, "If the courts hold thus," and "If the courts hold so"—have, as fair Americans, foreclosed themselves from denying to us that which we are here insisting we have a right to be given. Their very subjunctive, proposing that there is doubt as to the constitutional powers of this Government to do the thing needful, is the argument we base ourselves upon when we say to you, "Give us all the doubtful ground and let us hold it forever, if may be, but at least until the judicial arm of the Government deprives us of some or all of it." And if we hear from the judges that we can not, under our system of government, gain that protection constitutionally which our civilization requires, then we will address ourselves as sovereign States and citizens of sovereign States to the large and momentous business of persuading the American people that when the nation brought a quasi-Chinese colony under our flag, against which the Congress was powerless to protect our mainland and our Caucasians, then that nation did a thing which must be reconsidered, and the relations of our mainland to the endangering Asiatic archipelago must be changed.

It is beyond question the duty of the Congress, and certainly of its Senatorial branch with its vote on the Hawaiian annexation question and its ratification of the treaty of Paris and its adoption of the joint resolution I have read, to hold for us every inch of debatable ground.

Another new feature of this bill is that found in the last two clauses of section 39:

And it shall be unlawful for any vessel holding an American register to have or to employ in its crew any Chinese person not entitled to admission to the United States or into the portion of the territory of the United States to which such vessel plies; and any violation of this provision shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $2,000.

But said penalty shall not accrue in the case of any such vessel which shall suffer the loss of a portion of her crew by reason of distress or stress of weather in any foreign jurisdiction or port and shall be compelled thereby to employ Chinese seamen to complete her complement of officers and men: Provided, That to relieve from said penalty in such case it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the appropriate Treasury officer that in such foreign jurisdiction or port no seamen other than Chinese were obtainable, and that every such Chinese seaman was discharged from the service of such vessel immediately upon the arrival thereof at the first port where seamen other than Chinese could be obtained, and that if so discharged at any port under the jurisdiction of the United States no such Chinese seaman was permitted to depart from such vessel, but that each such Chinese seaman was forthwith transported as a passenger on such vessel, and at the expense thereof, to a foreign port, and that no such Chinese seaman did reenter the service of such vessel after such discharge.

These provisions of the bill have been severely assailed on the ground that they put our American vessels plying on the Pacific Ocean at a disadvantage with the vessels of other nations. For mercy sake let us preserve a reasonable consistency. This Chamber has hardly ceased to resound with the demands of ship-subsidy advocates for an American merchant marine manned by Americans who could fight the country's battles, and to get such a marine and to stimulate the employment of native Americans therein, at living American wages, the ship-subsidy bill was passed. That bill is pending in the other House, and will most likely be passed there, as it is an Administration measure, and the Administration has a majority in that House.

It does not seem unfair, in view of the enormous bounties we are about to pay, that the steamship companies be deprived of the right to employ cheap Asiatic labor. It does not seem out of place, if the principle of Chinese exclusion be a sound one, to extend it to the decks of our ships, which in law are as much a part of our territory as any part of our soil. To do so serves the twofold purpose of protecting our sailors from cheap Asiatic competition and of building up for the defense of our country in time of need a loyal, patriotic American naval reserve. No one can question the desirability of doing both of these things, nor can anyone question the absolute necessity of doing the last one, if we are to maintain our naval supremacy in time of war. While some of us in this Chamber were opposed to the ship-subsidy bill, it was not on the ground that a merchant marine manned by Americans was not necessary, but on the ground that the object could better be accomplished in another way. But having undertaken to accomplish it by subsidies, it does seem remarkable that the very men who have been clamoring for subsidies in order that they might pay living American wages to American seamen should now come here and clamor for the right to employ Chinese seamen at Chinese wages. They should either give up their subsidy or give up their Chinamen.

Mr. Evarts, speaking for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company before the Senate Committee on Immigration, complained that this provision would cost his company $200,000 a year. The subsidy which his company will receive under the terms of the subsidy bill that passed this body will amount to double that sum. But if his company did not receive a cent it would have no right to complain. No vessel should be permitted to run under the American flag which is not manned with efficient seamen, and the Chinese are not and never will become efficient and trustworthy in times of stress and peril.

Let me read on this subject from the testimony of Mr. Andrew Furuseth, one of the representatives of the California Chinese Commission, himself a practical sailor and the representative of the Pacific Coast Sailors' Union (Senate Hearing, pp. 247, 248):

As such, we could point to the notorious unreliability of the Chinese and other Asiatics in times of emergency on shipboard.

This characteristic has been demonstrated on numerous occasions—in fact, in every case of wreck or other serious accident. By way of illustration we would cite the case of the collision between the steamers City of Chester and Oceanic in the Golden Gate some years ago. The former vessel, manned by American seamen, sank with great loss of life. The Oceanic (chartered by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company), though little damaged, rendered practically no assistance to the sinking vessel, for the reason that her Chinese crew became terror-stricken and were unable to launch the boats. The American seamen and firemen of the City of Chester had actually to make their way to the Chinese-manned vessel and launch the latter's boats, and by so doing managed to save many lives that would otherwise have been lost through the inefficiency and cowardice of the Chinese. The City of Chester belonged to what we called the good old Perkins boats; that is, the Pacific Coast Steamship Company's line coastwise boats.

Coming down to the recent loss of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's steamer City of Rio de Janeiro in the harbor of San Francisco, it will be remembered that that vessel remained above water for fifteen or twenty minutes after striking, thus affording ample time to get the boats overboard and secure the lives of the passengers. In this case, too, a panic occurred among the Chinese crew, with the result that 127 lives were lost, including the greater number of passengers, many of whom were women and children. Only one boat was launched, and that was captured by the Chinese, in utter disregard of the lives entrusted to their care.

As another instance of the inefficiency of the Chinese, we may refer to the experience of the transport Lenox, which was disabled off the Pacific coast in the last days of July of last year. She was a United States transport, and yet, with all that she carried a Chinese crew. Her Chinese crew refused to go in the boat to the coast to bring assistance.

A volunteer boat's crew consisting of Caucasian seamen, just discharged from the Navy, and other passengers performed the duty which the Chinese crew refused to perform. As reasons for carrying Chinese and other Asiatics it is claimed that "they are cheaper," "give less trouble," and that "they are more amenable to discipline"—under ordinary conditions.

I conclude, then, Mr. President, that the complaint against this section is without just foundation. Justice to our native sailors demands it. The interests of the Government demand it. The rights of passengers on American vessels, whose lives are dependent on the efficiency of the seamen employed, demand it. And, finally, the bounty of our Government to our American vessels justify us in requiring and compelling it.

Mr. President, I shall not spend much time in discussing the commercial aspect of Chinese exclusion. Representatives from some of the commercial bodies of the country appeared before the Senate committee and urged care and prudence in the framing of this bill, on the ground that our commerce with China was increasing, and that it might be injured by injudicious legislation. The committee was not unmindful of this great interest, and did exercise all the care and prudence possible to avoid unnecessarily harsh measures against which China would have a right to protest. But the committee felt it to be a duty to our own people and to our own civilization to make the bill one which would be effective in carrying out the policy of Chinese exclusion.

Since the substantive features of the bill were all in harmony with existing treaty provisions, and the other features were all in aid of the substantive provisions, and all had been enforced for twenty years without material friction between the two countries, it was felt that their reenactment at this time offered no menace to our good relations with China, or to the continued expansion of our trade there. This was felt all the more strongly because statistics established that from 1882, when the policy of Chinese exclusion was entered on, down to the present time, our exports to China had grown from 3,277,000 haikwan taels in 1882 to 22,289,000 haikwan taels in 1899. The exports fell off to 16,724,000 haikwan taels in 1900, owing to the Boxer disturbance in China that year. The growth of both exports and imports was from 11,697,000 haikwan taels in 1888 to 43,975,000 haikwan taels in 1899.

The tael is not a coin, but is a weight of silver, averaging 1½ ounces, and is worth in American gold the value of 1½ ounces of silver. This was 72 cents in 1897. Transforming the tael into American gold, our exports to China increased from $2,359,440 in 1882 to $16,048,080 in 1899. Exports and imports aggregated increased from $8,421,840 in 1888 to $31,662,000 in 1899. Results speak more loudly than theories, and judging by these results the apprehensions which our commercial interests have felt and expressed growing out of the present proposed legislation are without substantial foundation. But if it were otherwise, what conscientious, patriotic citizen is there in this land who would have us falter in the prosecution of our national policy at this time? Dollars and cents are well enough in their way, but a citizenship with morals unperverted and hope unimpaired, happy, healthy, content, and patriotic under the provident care of wise, just, and liberal government so far outweighs the dross of gold and silver that the two considerations ought not to be mentioned in the same breath.

It appears to be thought by some that a short bill, providing for the continuance of present restriction laws during the life of the present treaty with China, is all that is required at this time. The bill framed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and offered by him as a substitute for the present bill proceeds undoubtedly on that theory. But there are a number of reasons why such legislation is inefficient, and, without regard to its efficiency, impolitic.

First. The present laws are scattered through half a dozen different enactments, are difficult for the ordinary practitioner to find, and when found it is sometimes difficult to reconcile all their provisions. The Treasury regulations are still more difficult to find. They are not contained in any general publication. All the provisions of law, and the Treasury regulations having the force and effect of law, ought to be revised, codified, and combined in a single enactment. That is what the present bill does, and the advantages of it are so obvious that I need not undertake to enforce them on the Senate.

Second. The act of 1888, known as the Scott Act, which contains important and necessary provisions, is now being attacked in the Supreme Court of the United States on the ground that it was enacted in contemplation of the ratification of the Chinese treaty of 1888, and since that treaty failed by reason of the failure of China to ratify and proclaim it, it is claimed that the act of Congress based on it and intended to carry out its provisions must fail and be declared of no force. There is much reason to believe that the contention is well founded. Some of our own officials have so maintained. It is manifest, then, that the provisions of the act of 1888, if that act be declared of no force, would not be continued in operation by a mere declaration continuing in force all the provisions of existing law.

Third. The Treasury regulations are likewise being attacked in the Supreme Court, and the ground urged is that there is no specific provision of existing laws authorizing the making of such regulations. While the treaty of China contemplates the making of such regulations, it is urged that the laws have not reposed the power to make and declare them in any particular officer, and hence, in enforcing Chinese exclusion, we can not look for means and methods beyond the terms of the law and the treaty. This contention, if sustained, would have the effect, practically, to break down Chinese exclusion, and it is being urged in a number of cases by Chinamen at the instance and with the assistance of the steamship companies and the transcontinental railway companies. This offers an additional and most conclusive reason for incorporating these Treasury regulations into the body of our statutes.

Fourth. The present exclusion treaty with China does not expire until 1914, but it may be denounced by either Government in 1904, and it is then and thereby terminated. The passage of any law at this time running with the life of the treaty and terminating when it does is an invitation to the Government of China to denounce and thereby terminate the present treaty.

Fifth. The passage of such a law is equivalent to the adoption of a policy unfavorable to Chinese exclusion except by permission of China. It will be so regarded by China and will be so regarded, and justly so, by our own people. It would give rise to agitation and unrest on the Pacific coast. It would disturb the present harmonious relations between capital and labor under which that coast is making such giant strides of progress. It ought not to be adopted, and unless it be the policy of the dominant political party to break down Chinese exclusion it will not be adopted.

Mr. President, this measure is not in the interest of the Pacific coast alone. It is in the interest of the health and the morals and the civilization of the entire country. I include civilization with health and morals because a high civilization in any country is dependent on a high state of health and morals. I include it, moreover, because our civilization, the most splendid in the world and offering most of hope to the world, is built up and maintained and will be continued on the dignity which attaches to and belongs to human labor.

The yellow hordes of China, pressed from within and dazzled by the unexampled opportunities which the rapid development of our virgin resources offer, will in time invade and take possession of every part of our land if given the opportunity. The first wave will break on the Pacific coast, but wave will succeed wave until the entire continent is inundated and overwhelmed. We have had a sufficient experience of the evil on the Pacific coast to make us keenly alive to the multiplied evil which will certainly follow the breaking down of our present exclusion policy. And since we have suffered, and will be the first to suffer further, we feel that we have a claim now and here in this matter to the broad, generous, and humane consideration of our countrymen throughout the entire land, and to that of their Representatives in Congress.

We appeal confidently, then, to the representatives of all sections of the country and of all political parties to stand with us in the enactment of this wise and just and most necessary legislation. We appeal with especial confidence to our friends from the South, who have in their body politic a growing cancer second only in virulence to that which would be fastened on the Pacific coast by a further propulsion to their shores of the pagan hordes of China. The Caucasian and the Mongolian are as far apart as the Caucasian and the Ethiopian. We have had the race problem with us from the beginning as the result of the presence of the Ethiopian. It kept us in turmoil for half a century and came near destroying the integrity of the Republic. It is with us still and is taking new and added and deplorable forms, bringing misgivings and forebodings to the minds of thoughtful men everywhere. How it will end no man can foresee, but one thing is certain, since the black man is nonassimilable and can not reach up to the standard of the Caucasian, nor pull the latter down to the level of the Ethiopian, he will remain a disturbing factor in our nationality so long as he remains one of its constituent elements.

In the name of American progress and American civilization let us avoid adding another such plague spot to the body politic. We may feel kindly toward the Government and the people of China, and may manifest our feeling in many ways besides that of absorbing her toiling millions to the hurt and injury of our own Government and our own people. We have lately manifested our friendly disposition toward China in a most substantial manner, and, if reports be true, she entertains a lively sense of gratitude toward us for our conduct. I hope we will always continue to manifest such a disposition, but it must be on broad lines. There must be no lowering of the American standard out of complaisance to that country or any country. Our standard must be raised rather than lowered. It is high now, but it can be raised still higher. With wisdom to see and courage to act, the height to which we may grow as a nation in affluence and power, in culture and refinement, and the influence for good which we may diffuse as the result of our splendid example is beyond anything that the mind of man has ever conceived. Let us have the wisdom to see and the courage to act now, that this glorious consummation be not hindered or impaired.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11553) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. STEWART, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, and Mr. RAWLINS were appointed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 11535) for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

MASONIC FAIR AND EXPOSITION.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 173) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to issue certain temporary permits was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the joint resolution. The Senate yesterday passed a joint resolution of precisely this nature, which has not yet gone to the House of Representatives.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am not familiar with the subject, and I think perhaps the joint resolution had better be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SPOONER. I suggest that it had better lie on the table for the present.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Or, as is suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, perhaps the joint resolution had better lie upon the table.

Mr. SPOONER. In connection with it, I will suggest that the joint resolution which was passed yesterday, and which has not yet been sent to the other House, be retained by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be withheld from the House of Representatives until some member of the Committee on the District of Columbia is present who is familiar with the subject.

Mr. McMILLAN subsequently said: I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 173) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to issue certain temporary permits, and that it be put upon its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate passed a joint resolution yesterday of exactly the same nature, which is now on the table. If there is no objection the joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be read for information.

Mr. McMILLAN. We passed the same joint resolution yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the joint resolution is in Committee of the Whole, and will be read.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that it be read for information before unanimous consent is given.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read for information.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to permit electric-light wires to be laid in existing conduits and house connections between such conduits and Convention Hall, to be made for the purpose of supplying additional light for the Masonic fair and exposition of 1902: Provided, That all such wires shall be removed on or before May 10, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the votes by which the joint resolution (S. R. 76) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to issue certain temporary permits was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the joint resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON FRAUDULENT ENTRY OF CHINESE LABORERS.

Mr. PATTERSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of an official report made to the Treasury Department by James R. Dunn, covering the development of importing into the United States Chinese laborers in the guise of members of the exempt Chinese classes, the same being a report referred to in the letter of said James R. Dunn to Hon. Boies Penrose, United States Senate, under date of April 8, 1902.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2960) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all possessions and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent.

Mr. ELKINS. I wish to offer an amendment to the pending bill. I ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia offers an amendment to the pending bill, which will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, some days ago, soon after this bill was made the unfinished business, I presented quite a large number of proposed amendments, which were ordered to be printed. I did it at that time for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the Senate sundry provisions of this bill which to me seemed objectionable.

I am heartily in favor of a law which will exclude Chinese laborers as provided in the treaty of 1894 between the United States and China. I shall gladly vote for any substitute bill that may be presented which, in effect, continues in force or reenacts what is known as the Geary law. I shall vote for it because I believe that law has been effective, its purpose has been accomplished, and because it is without objectionable features; and if there have been objectionable features in its administration, they can be easily remedied.

In discussing this bill I propose to do it in a general way, and with the purpose of inquiring why it becomes necessary to adopt a measure 50 pages in length, and to enact into law so many provisions which are now merely the regulations of one of the departments of Government, a department fully able, when a law is declared, to make and remake regulations as circumstances may require.

When the present session of Congress opened, I think it was the general impression among thinking men that the Geary law should simply be reenacted. I notice, in looking over the files, that bills substantially for that purpose were offered by a large number of Senators; for instance, by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], and by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]; and, so far as I now remember, all of those bills were in effect to reenact the Geary law.

I do not find, on examination of the record which has been sent in by the Committee on Immigration, that anyone who is now urging the adoption of the present bill urged it at that time. If I may be permitted to refer to the record, I will call attention to the statement made by one of the commissioners from California, Mr. Livernash, who, it has been said in debate to-day, was the author of this bill; indeed, he testified that such is the fact. He said:

When the California commissioners arrived in Washington we were in favor of simple renewal of existing laws in some such way as under the Lodge bill, but with a few amendments shown by experience since 1893 to be desirable, and with provisions giving protection against the Philippine Chinese. But we did not then know of the five pending cases to which I have referred; and knowledge as to those cases has made us advocates of restatement, of codification, rather than of simple renewal, and has made us regard such re-statement or codification as vital.

Therefore it appears that in its operation, ever since its passage down to the time when these commissioners came to Washington, the law had been absolutely satisfactory to them.

I call attention also to the testimony of another—or the statement, rather, because no testimony, in the strict sense of the word, was taken before our committee—the statement of ex-Mayor James D. Phelan, of San Francisco. He says:

I suppose the Chinese of California have not returned to their native land, but they have scattered themselves throughout the United States. However, so far as California is concerned it is satisfied with the operation of the exclusion law. The Chinese population has fallen off materially.

Referring to the convention from which he and Mr. Livernash took their credentials, or under whose action they were appointed, he says:

This convention unanimously, without a dissenting voice, memorialized Congress, requesting not the reenactment of a particular law, but the reenactment of the exclusion laws whose operation had been so beneficent and satisfactory.

Printed on the same page and subsequent pages of the record is the memorial that was sent to Congress by the convention I have already referred to, in which it is said:

Pursuant to a call officially issued by the city of San Francisco, there assembled in that city on the 21st day of November, 1901, for the purpose of expressing the sentiments of the State of California on the reenactment of Chinese-exclusion laws, a convention composed of State officers, representatives of county supervisors, city councils, trade, labor, commercial, and civic organizations to the number of 3,000, and without dissent it was resolved to memorialize the President and the Congress of the United States as follows, etc.

In stating what the operation of those laws had been the memorial uses this language:

The effects of Chinese exclusion have been most advantageous to the State. The 75,000 Chinese residents of California in 1890 have been reduced, according to the last census, to 45,600; and whereas the white settlement of California by Caucasians had been arrested prior to the adoption of these laws, a healthy growth of the State in population has marked the progress of recent years.

It appears, therefore, Mr. President, that when this session opened nobody desired anything better as a law than that then upon our statute book. The only reason that has been given in debate or in evidence that I am aware of for any amendment to the existing law is that mentioned by Mr. Livernash in the record which I have just read, in which he says that when the commissioners came here he did not know of the five cases pending in the Supreme Court.

It seems to me, therefore, that the Geary law, with one or two slight amendments, would answer every purpose desired to be attained by the most ardent advocates of the exclusion of the Chinese. One of those cases in the Supreme Court involves the validity of the regulations governing the privilege of transit of laborers through this country. It has been claimed that such regulations are invalid, because when made by the Secretary of the Treasury they were based upon a section of the statute of 1888, known as the Scott law. The Scott law was adopted when there was a treaty pending which it was supposed China would very soon ratify. That law in its enacting clause reads:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the date of the exchange of ratifications of the pending treaty between the United States of America and His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of China, signed on the 12th day of March, A. D. 1888, it shall be unlawful for any Chinese person, whether a subject of China or of any other power, to enter the United States, except as hereinafter provided.

It is claimed that act has never been in force and that any regulation made under its authority is an invalid regulation; and that is the one question, as I understand it, upon which that case may turn. For myself, I think the law never went into effect. I do not see how any regulation made under it could have the force of law. Admit, for the sake of the argument, that such is the fact; admit, for the sake of the argument, that the decision of the Supreme Court will be to that effect, then the only thing that is necessary to be done by Congress in reenacting the Geary law is to merely add a clause by way of amendment providing that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have power to make proper regulations governing the admission of those who seek transit through our country. With such an amendment the difficulty is solved.

Then there are certain other cases pending in the Supreme Court, in which, as I understand, it is asserted that the treaty of 1894 contains in itself a plan of procedure, providing how and under what circumstances the Chinese may come into this country, and that such provisions of the treaty are superior in authority to any statute adopted before the ratification of the treaty. If that be true, and if the Supreme Court shall hold that the regulations made under acts which were in force before the ratification of the treaty of 1894 are illegal and without binding authority, it will be because the treaty of 1894 was the last expression of national opinion and authority, and for that reason governs any statute preceding it in date. If, therefore, at this time we reenact the Geary law, such reenactment, coming subsequent to the ratification of the treaty, will be the higher authority, being the last expression of legislative authority. If in any way its provisions differ from those of the treaty, we have taken the responsibility of adopting them, and the law becomes superior in authority to the terms of the treaty.

During the hearing, to which I have already referred, this question arose indirectly. Objection was made by some who appeared before the committee to what was known as the Proctor bill, because it provided for the continuance of the Geary act—I regret that I have not the bill before me, and am unable therefore to give its exact language—in accordance with the existing treaty obligations. One of them, having his attention called to the bill, made this statement:

The Proctor bill would carry forward only so much of the living law and practice as is strictly consistent with the text of the treaty of 1894, whereas as things stand it is assumed that the treaty text may be helped out by the text of the living law and regulations in force at the ratification of the convention.

In other words, it was claimed because we had the law of 1892 upon the statute books when the treaty of 1894 between the United States and China was ratified—and the same was claimed in the debate here the other day—that the provisions of the law of 1892 were in some way read into the treaty of 1894. By what authority I do not know. The objection to the original Proctor bill was that it continued in force the existing laws in accordance with the terms of the treaty, and therefore it would not carry forward the provisions of preexisting law, and for that reason was objectionable.

Therefore, Mr. President, it seems to me that every reason that has been suggested for rewriting the laws has been done away with, because, by a simple amendment, the provision of the Scott law giving the Secretary of the Treasury the right to make regulations concerning those who seek transit through our country can be added as an amendment. If the Geary law is reenacted at this time, in so far as it differs from the provisions of the convention of 1894, it will be paramount in authority to them; and if it becomes necessary to give effect to the Geary law in the Philippines a simple amendment to that effect can also be adopted.

I do not know precisely why a provision should be attached, however, in respect of the Philippines. If a resident of the Philippines is a Chinese subject he clearly can not enter this country under the provisions of existing law. If a Chinaman in the Philippines has become a citizen of the United States, either under the treaty with Spain or under any act of Congress, then, of course, he has the right to enter the country regardless of the law. I do not think I am mistaken about the operation of the Geary law. It is clear that no legislation to prevent Chinese coming from the Philippines to the mainland is necessary.

The real question presented to this body for consideration is this: How can we best protect American labor, a thing we are all anxious to do, and at the same time best protect American commerce? In other words, how can we most successfully protect American citizenship in all of its branches, in all of its conditions, and how best protect American progress and American prosperity?

I have listened with a good deal of interest to what has been said in debate concerning the character of Chinese immigrants. I heard it all in committee. I have no criticism to offer upon anybody who objects to the introduction of that class of people into this nation. Very much of what has been said is true. I do not know but that all of it is true. I know nothing about it. I have not come in contact with this class of people. But admit for the sake of the argument that it is all true. If there is any member of the Senate who opposes either this measure or any other upon the ground that he objects to the policy of Chinese exclusion I do not know who he is. For myself, I stand, as I said before, in favor of excluding the Chinese laborer and making the law strong and effective to that end. Therefore, if a majority of the Senate are of the same opinion, I do not see how the discussion of the moral character of the Chinese can help very much toward the solution of the main question as already stated. If it relates to prostitutes, who have been so much referred to, we have a general law applicable to them, whether they be European or Asiatic.

I do think, however, Mr. President, that the fear which has been expressed of a large influx into this country of Chinese of the prohibited class is greater than the facts warrant. It is but natural that those who have been most troubled by the coming of Chinese laborers should be anxious and should magnify the dangers that confront them. It is perfectly evident that those who have the execution of this law committed to them have become unduly excited, and in the expression of their opinions they oftentimes resort to extravagance of statement in an effort to impress upon their hearers the danger that impends unless the laws are made more stringent than at present.

A fair illustration of this was offered during the proceedings before the Committee on Immigration. The committee room was crowded. A large proportion of the committee were present. The heads of different departments of the Federation of Labor were sitting along the border of the room. There appeared before us the Commissioner-General of Immigration; the law officer of that Bureau, Mr. Campbell; Mr. Dunn, the inspector of Chinese immigration at San Francisco; a United States deputy marshal; a Government interpreter; and with this body of men there were brought in two miserable, downcast-looking Chinamen. I hardly know how to describe their appearance. They stood modestly at one side of the room with their heads dropped. They were interrogated by pretty much everybody, through the interpreter, and the impression left upon the minds of the committee when we were through with the hearing was that they were fair examples of those who were coming into America on every side. They came into America, as I understood, with certificates as merchants, fraudulently obtained in China through a certain house which has been engaged in obtaining fraudulent certificates for Chinese emigrants.

These two Chinamen were entirely without counsel. They never had been inquired of whether they wished counsel, but they were brought into the Capitol of the nation. They were brought into the committee room. They were put upon the rack. They were inquired of in every possible way, through the interpreter, and it went, as a matter of course, in the minds of all of us that everything stated about them was true.

It now appears that one of those men has been in the city of Washington for four years. How long the other one has been here I do not know. I am informed that one has not yet received his trial. His case is awaiting evidence, but the other was brought before the Commissioner, and, on appeal, before Judge Hagner, and on a full hearing before the latter has been discharged upon the ground that his certificate was valid.

If an American citizen had been picked up in that way and not taken before a magistrate, but hauled through the streets of Washington and into the Capitol of the nation and before a promiscuous crowd, and compelled to answer as those men were compelled to answer, I think somebody would have brought a suit for false imprisonment. But no matter about that. I mention the circumstance simply to show how every incident connected with the administration of this law by those who are appointed to administer it is magnified.

I do not know of any evidence that was brought before the committee which tended to show any organized effort on the part of anyone in power to evade or override this law, except that which was mentioned by Mr. Dunn and which has been the subject of a colloquy between the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Indiana. I had intended to say something about the statement, but it has been so fully gone into that it is not necessary for me to do so.

I wish, however, to say by way of explanation that Mr. Schwerin, the general manager of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, was not in Washington, and consequently not in attendance before the committee at the time the statement was made by Mr. Dunn. When the statement was quoted in the Senate two or three days ago he called me from the Chamber and, denying its correctness, stated that it was the first time that his attention had been called to the matter. In view of the inquiry by the Senator from Indiana, why he had not sooner made denial of the fact, I think it is only justice to Mr. Schwerin that I make this statement.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator agrees with me that the counsel for the steamship company was present during the statement.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. He was.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask the Senator's permission to say one word more.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. In what I said I do not wish to be understood as casting any criticism whatever upon the general manager of the company or the company itself. I adverted to the statement which is in the record and submitted the statement for what it was worth. I felt that I had a right to accept the statement as true at the time, for up to that time it had stood unchallenged. But as to whether the general manager or Mr. Dunn is right, of course I have no more information or any better opinion than the Senator himself.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I hope the Senator from Indiana did not think I was offering any criticism of his action.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Oh, not at all.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That was farthest from my mind.

But, Mr. President, the question comes back, after this interruption, to the proposition—what is best for the nation in view of the circumstances disclosed at the hearings before the Committee on Immigration? Under the Geary Act the Chinese in California have been reduced in number from 72,472 in 1890 to 45,753 in the year 1900. In other words, under the operation of this act within ten years the number of Chinese in California has been reduced 40 per cent. What better result can be hoped for under any law that may be enacted? This fact is the basis for the statements made by Mr. Livernash and Mayor Phelan. In it is found the reason of the language used in the memorial from the California Convention to this body, expressing their great satisfaction with the operation of the law. In our effort to exclude Chinese laborers from our country the Chinese Government is in full accord with us. The preamble of the treaty of 1894, as has already been stated, gives expression to China's desire to prohibit the emigration of such laborers.

The operation of existing law has been most satisfactory. I find that during the last seven years there has not only been a decrease in the number of Chinese in California, but there have not been brought into this country such vast numbers of them as the discussion in this case would seem to indicate. Take, for instance, the Chinese laborers in this country holding certificates who have the right to go to China and have the right under the treaty and under the law to return. I find that in the last seven years the number going out from this country has been as follows:

In 1895, 110; in 1896, 936; in 1897, 1,651; in 1898, 2,200; in 1899, 2,554; in 1900, 2,452, and in 1901, 2,735.

During those seven years there have gone out from this country of Chinese laborers, voluntarily, with the right to return, 12,638.

During 1896 only 106 returned; in 1897, 1,039; in 1898, 1,497; in 1899, 1,793; in 1900, 1,977; in 1901, 2,280. In other words, there have returned during the same period only 8,712, or about two-thirds as many as have left our shores.

It has been said in argument that we stand in great danger because of the immense numbers who attempt to go through our country from China to other countries. It is alleged that they pass through into Mexico, and after remaining there a brief period recross the border and come again into the States; that they go into Canada and work their way into the States over the Canadian border. After hearing the statements of the inspectors one would really believe that the Chinese are liable to become as numerous as the frogs were in Egypt at the time of the plague.

I find, however, that the number of those who passed in transit through the United States to other countries in 1894 were 1,169; in 1895, 1,168; in 1896, 1,521; in 1897, 1,819; in 1898, 865; in 1899, 1,012; in 1900, 2,602; in 1901, 1,807. During the eight years the average number coming in and going out of the country annually was only 1,495.

How many of these worked their way back into this country and therefore were here illegally? That can only be shown by the number whom we deported, because if there is an active set of officers in all our nation it is the corps of inspectors who have under their charge the enforcement of these laws. I live on the border, and I know their diligence there, and certainly we can not complain that the officer in San Francisco is not vigilant and thorough. They have raked and scraped this nation of ours in each of these years to find and deport Chinese illegally here; those who did not hold certificates. How many have they found and deported? In 1895 they found 82; in 1896, 120; in 1897, 227; in 1898, 220; in 1899, 192; in 1900, 288, and in 1901, 328, or an average during each year of that time of about 208, who have worked in illegally and were therefore subject to the laws requiring their deportation.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the figures do not indicate a very great danger to this nation under the operation of the Geary law.

Under the Geary Act, as has been suggested by others, we know what we can do. We know the certainty of its operation. Everybody understands it. Under it justice will be speedy. If we adopt the pending measure, delays will occur, the expense will be great, the whole service will be tied up, and a manifest injustice will be perpetrated upon large numbers of those seeking entrance into this country, perhaps legally. If California is satisfied with the operation of the Geary law, as she certainly is, why should we make any change? California and the Pacific coast States are those more interested in this legislation than any of the others, and every one of the gentlemen representing the Pacific coast before our committee expressed his satisfaction with the operation of the present law.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I ask the Senator from Vermont a question?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suppose that among those deported are all who have lost their certificates or can not produce satisfactory certificates?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I suppose so. It must be so, because the burden is placed upon the Chinaman to prove that he has the right to stay.

Mr. President, we came here the first of December. The various bills that I have mentioned for the extension of the Geary Act were introduced. It was considerably later in the session that the bill we are now considering made its appearance. The Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco subsequently, on the 13th day of February, took action which I will read. I apprehend that the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco is like the chamber of commerce of other great cities—made up of men who have brains, who have sound judgment, who have great experience in affairs, who have a reasonable judgment of what will be best for the prosperity of our country and of all classes which constitute our nation.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Page 345. Their action was as follows:

Whereas there are now pending in the National Congress of the United States at Washington certain bills which we believe may be construed to so restrict the entrance of the mercantile class of China into the United States as to be harmful to our mercantile interests; and

Whereas the trade of the port of San Francisco with the Chinese Empire is of great and increasing importance, its value for the year 1890, including Hongkong, being $15,689,458, and for the year 1900, $26,685,438; and

Whereas for the proper conserving and promoting of this exchange of commodities we believe it is of the utmost importance that all facilities of commerce and the courtesies due to a friendly nation be extended particularly to that class of the Chinese Empire which operates, controls, and has in itself the means and power of furthering this trade, which, under favorable conditions and by the assistance of a broad Government policy, is destined to assume vast proportions in the future: Therefore

Resolved, That we do hereby most respectfully and earnestly petition the President of the United States and our Representatives in Congress to use their utmost endeavors to induce Congress to enact legislation so as to grant unrestricted entrance into the United States to all merchants and members of the mercantile class of Chinese, such as salesmen, clerks, buyers, bookkeepers, accountants, managers, storekeepers, bankers, and cashiers.

I find also that the Merchants' Exchange of San Francisco held a meeting February 12 and adopted a memorial which is substantially the same, if not in terms. It begins:

Whereas there are now pending in the National Congress of the United States at Washington certain bills which we believe may be construed to so restrict the entrance of the mercantile class of China into the United States as to be harmful to our mercantile interests—

And then it goes on to state the extent of the trade that the Pacific coast is enjoying with the Empire of China and to express the fear that harm may come if this legislation is adopted, and asks Congress to broaden its legislation so as to allow to come in from China those commercial classes which we very much need to come in contact with if we would dispose of the great surplus of our manufactures and secure our share of the foreign trade.

It is claimed that the pending bill is the existing law, but into this measure there has been written as law the regulations which have been adopted from time to time since 1882 by the Treasury Department for the guidance of their officers and inspectors. It seems to me it is pretty poor policy for Congress to doubt either the ability or the purpose of any one of the great Executive Departments of this Government to execute any law that is committed to any such department to be administered.

I understand that to the Treasury Department is committed substantially the whole duty and responsibility of administering the immigration laws and imposing regulations to carry such laws into effect. If we are to take these regulations, which may perhaps need to be amended to-morrow by new conditions as they present themselves, and make them matters of statutory law, we have, as it seems to me, insulted the head of that Department. We certainly have expressed a distrust of the ability of the Treasury Department to make regulations that will effectively carry into operation the provisions of the law which we may adopt.

But over and beyond that is the further objection to an act in which such regulations are adopted as a part of its provisions that every day may present a new condition regarding the incoming or the outgoing of some member of a class governed by this bill which requires the exercise of the discretionary power vested in the Department, thus calling for changes in existing regulations and the adoption of new ones. As a matter of policy it seems to me to be all wrong.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the bill, in addition to adopting the regulations referred to, confer upon the Secretary of the Treasury power to make other regulations?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It does in several instances.

Mr. SPOONER. A general power?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not recall whether it gives him the general power, but it does in several instances give that power to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, there is another fundamental objection to the pending measure, as it seems to me. I may be wrong about it, as the Senator from Wisconsin sometimes says. This bill attempts to take up the Philippine situation and to deal with it in connection with the mainland situation. If that was to have been done, it seems to me the bill should have gone to the Committee on Foreign Relations instead of the Committee on Immigration. It is a great question with which we have to deal in the Philippines, and yet this bill, presented under the circumstances I have indicated, professes to deal—

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator from Vermont a question?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Why should it not have gone to the Committee on the Philippines, which is the committee in charge of affairs relating to the Philippine Islands?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have shown my ignorance of the different committees here. It should have gone to the Committee on the Philippines. The Senator is entirely right about it.

The Philippines are in close proximity to China. The Chinese have been coming into the Philippines for ages. The commerce between the Philippines and China is very large. I am told that very much of the provisions consumed by the Philippines comes out from China. The conditions in the Philippines are such that it seems to me entirely unwise that we should in this measure attempt to meet them. In this view of this question I am amply sustained by the testimony of Governor Taft given before the Committee on Immigration:

When we went to the Philippines we found in force the exclusion act now in force extended to those islands by a proclamation of General Otis, with the approval of the President. I am not sure whether it was an Executive order or whether it was an order by General Otis.

The chairman inquired:

Is the exclusion there similar to that which applies to the mainland of the United States?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir. There are some exceptions, I believe, which the military governor allowed, but they are so small that it is practically the same as that applying in the United States. We never have disturbed them.

The CHAIRMAN. How long has that act been in operation?

Governor TAFT. I think it is three years.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the existing law?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir.

That being the case, the Chinese are not able at the present time to come into the Philippine Islands any more than they are to come into the United States.

The question arose later about the people of mixed bloods, of whom there are large numbers in the islands. By one of the provisions of this bill they are excluded from coming to the United States, because the term Chinese is defined to include persons who are Chinese by birth or descent, also those of mixed blood. The following question was addressed to Governor Taft by the Chairman:

Are there many half-breeds—Filipino and Chinese?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir; there are a great number of those. If you do not limit it to half-breeds, but extend it to those who have Chinese blood in them, there are a great number.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I mean.

Governor TAFT. There are provinces, like the province of Pampanga, in which there is a visible admixture of Chinese blood, coming down for hundreds of years.

The CHAIRMAN. Are the people of those mixed races classed as Chinese or Filipinos?

Governor TAFT. They are all classed as Filipinos, except the men with the pigtail, who were born in China.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it be your thought that those people should be kept out of the United States as well as the full-blooded Chinese?

Governor TAFT. No, sir. They are Filipinos, pure and simple. They are just as strong in their prejudices against the Chinese as are the Filipinos.

As bearing upon the question whether there should be any letting down of the bars so as to permit further entry of the Chinese into the Philippines, the chairman asked the following question:

In your opinion will there be a sufficient supply of effective labor for the development of the Philippine Islands without admitting the Chinese?

Governor TAFT. That is rather a hard question to answer. I do not think there will be a sufficient supply of skilled labor, because the extent has been tested already, and the amount of it is so small that development in manufacturing, in construction, and among machinists is almost impossible without allowing skilled labor to come in under restrictions which will enable us to cause their removal from the islands after we have secured a sufficient supply of skilled labor from the Filipinos by manual-training schools and by the very presence of the Chinamen.

The governor introduced a memorial to the Congress of the United States from the Chamber of Commerce of Manila, which I shall not stop to read. It will be found on page 492 of the record. In the memorial the following passage occurs:

The present restrictive law does not benefit the Filipinos, nor is it of benefit to anyone. This labor will not enter into competition with American labor, and its entry into the Philippine Islands is imperatively needed.

The governor also quoted from a letter written to him by his fellow-commissioner, General Wright, in which he says:

I take it for granted that among the important topics of discussion between you and the authorities at Washington will be the insular policy as to the exclusion or admission of Chinese. It is a subject which we have discussed frequently and upon which, I believe, we are agreed. I think it well to say, however, in view of the multiplicity of subjects upon which you have to deal, that you may not overlook it, that in my judgment it is extremely important that should it be the policy of the Executive and Congress to continue the exclusion of Chinese from the United States by treaty and legislation as heretofore, it is very important that these laws should not be enforced in their entirety here. The Filipino laborer as he is can not be relied on at this time for steady work. I think it very probable that under American administration, as his horizon broadens and his wants increase, his disposition to work in order to gratify those wants and better his condition will increase proportionately. But that is a work of time and education. It is very doubtful if to-day any large public work could be successfully carried to completion without great delay and increased expenses with Filipino laborers alone. The number of Filipino mechanics and other skilled laborers are extremely few and confined to a small number of trades.

I am sorry to take so much time in reading, but the authority from which I read is so good that I can not resist the temptation to make further extracts from General Wright's letter. He says, speaking of the Chinese:

I do mean, however, to assert that our ports here should not be hermetically sealed against them, and that either Congress should itself provide, or, what would be better, give the government established here the authority to provide, for their admission under proper limitations. These limitations may be made stringent enough to require their removal whenever the necessity for their importation ceases to exist. Persons or corporations requiring the use of either skilled or unskilled laborers might be required to give bond and security for their return to China after a specified time or on demand of the government here.

Governor Taft also introduced before the committee a letter addressed to General Wright from Cameron & McLaughlin, manufacturers' agents, in which they complain of their inability to obtain skilled labor and ask for relief. The governor resumes, and this is his recommendation, and because it is his recommendation I bring it before the Senate:

Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the best way for Congress to meet this problem is to establish its policy with respect to the United States, and then to treat the Philippine Islands, so far as concerns the introduction of Chinese into the United States, as if it were a foreign country, and that then the Commission or the legislative body of the islands be given some power and authority in its discretion to admit skilled labor, with provision for its return within such time as the Commission may determine.

I should like also to have extended to the Commission the power to allow unskilled labor to come in. Personally, in the Commission, I shall always oppose the admission of unskilled labor until time has elapsed sufficient to enable us to know that the Filipino unskilled labor can not be used for the purposes of labor in those islands. I think it can be. I believe it is a question only of tact and organization.

I want to say here that the Governor seemed extremely anxious to do nothing that would serve to arouse to any greater degree than it now exists the dislike of the Filipinos for the Chinese. He says that dislike does not arise from labor competition. He says it arises from the fact that the Chinese are good traders, and the prejudice against them comes because of that fact. In various ways he advances the thought that we should do nothing to convey to the Filipino mind the idea that the American Government intended to impose upon them great numbers of Chinese.

He says:

Nevertheless, it seems to me that we owe our first duty to the Filipinos to do nothing which shall arouse the enmity of the people and induce a belief that we are exploiting the islands or intend to sacrifice them to exploitation by admitting generally Chinese labor. I think if we are trusted with making exceptions to an exclusion law it will be found that we shall be much more conservative than a good many people in the islands desire us to be.

The testimony of Governor Taft is really a brief upon the subject of this proposed legislation, and the tenor of it is to the effect that the provisions regarding Chinese in the Philippines should not remain in this bill, but that the matter should be determined either by an independent act of Congress relating to the Philippines, or that it should be referred to the Commission, as he had already suggested, with authority to exercise a wise discretion in meeting conditions as they may arise. He says:

I do not think the admission of Chinese skilled labor under proper restrictions, so that it can be taken out of the islands when skilled labor is developed among the Filipinos, is going to produce a political effect, such as certainly would be produced by the unlimited admission of coolie labor there and their development into tradesmen.

I should like very much if we could have the authority to experiment somewhat, if nothing else, in the introduction of skilled labor, for its need in the islands is very great. There is no doubt about that. The truth is that the few Chinamen in the islands now, who are skilled laborers, get two or three times the wages which were paid during Spanish times; I do not know but four or five times. The price is going right up, because the pressure for building and all sorts of work which involves skilled labor is growing greater and greater.

Now, Mr. President, it seems to me that the extracts I have read from an interesting chapter in this book serve to indicate that the objection to having Philippine legislation incorporated into this bill is fundamental in its character and that we ought not to insist upon it, but that a more intelligent administration of the Chinese question in the Philippines can be given under the power of the Commission than it is possible for the American Congress to devise.

Mr. President, I do not know how long the Senate will care to hear me to-night. I am not nearly through.

Mr. HOAR. Would the Senator from Vermont like to yield for a motion to go into executive session?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. If that is the desire, I will stop at this point.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, before the motion is put, I should like to give notice to the Senate that I shall to-morrow ask for unanimous consent to fix some date for a final vote upon the Chinese-exclusion bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 10, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 9, 1902.

CONSUL.

Charles V. Herdliska, of the District of Columbia, to be consul of the United States at Callao, Peru, vice William B. Dickey, removed.

RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Frank E. Densmore, of California, to be receiver of public moneys at Independence, Cal., his term having expired. (Reappointment.)

Willis H. Cofield, of Alva, Okla., to be receiver of public moneys at Alva, Okla., vice William J. French, removed.

REGISTERS OF LAND OFFICES.

Stafford W. Austin, of California, to be register of the land office at Independence, Cal., his term having expired. (Reappointment.)

John D. Maxey, of California, to be register of the land office at Stockton, Cal., his term having expired. (Reappointment.)

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Frank D. Roberts, of Missouri, to be collector of internal revenue for the sixth district of Missouri, to succeed F. E. Kellogg, resigned.

PROMOTIONS IN THE MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Asst. Surg. Claude H. Lavinder, of Virginia, to be a passed assistant surgeon in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States.

Asst. Surg. Taliaferro Clark, of Virginia, to be a passed assistant surgeon in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 9, 1902.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION.

Edward Winslow Ames, of Massachusetts, to be secretary of the legation of the United States at Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic.

POSTMASTER.

Edwin Fore, to be postmaster at Pittsburg, in the county of Camp and State of Texas.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 9, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to a personal explanation by the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, the 7th instant, I was necessarily absent from the House. On that day, prior to the calling up of the bill to extend the charters of national banks, and in fact during this Congress, I have been paired with my friend from New Jersey, Mr. FOWLER. I was paired with him on that day, and the RECORD so shows. Upon the call of the roll on the passage of that bill I find by the RECORD that Mr. FOWLER voted "yea." Of course I did not vote. I had been unable to see the gentleman from New Jersey, although I have endeavored to do so, and I desire to make the statement that had I not known that we were paired I should have been present and should have voted against the bill. I am constrained to believe that my friend from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] either did not vote or voted by inadvertence, forgetting that he was paired.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—FOWLER AGAINST THOMAS, THIRD DISTRICT NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. OLMSTED, from Committee on Elections No. 2, presented the report of that committee in the contested-election case of John E. Fowler v. Charles R. Thomas, from the Third Congressional district of North Carolina; which was ordered to be printed and referred to the House Calendar.

OLEOMARGARINE AND OTHER IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9206.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the following bill, which the Clerk will report by its title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee and Mr. BURLESON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

CUBAN RECIPROCITY.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12765) to provide for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the bill H. R. 12765.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12765, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12765) to provide for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. VAN VOORHIS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; to which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1934. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Biloxi, in the State of Mississippi;

S. 3421. An act for the relief of Eleonora G. Goldsborough;

S. 3992. An act granting an increase of pension to David M. McKnight;

S. 899. An act granting an increase of pension to George F. Bowers;

S. 2738. An act granting an increase of pension to James W. Hankins;

S. 694. An act granting a pension to Jane Caton;

S. 4042. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Norton;

S. 2975. An act granting an increase of pension to Levi Hatchett;

S. 4535. An act granting an increase of pension to Lydia M. Granger;

S. 3334. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas E. James;

S. 2409. An act granting a pension to John A. Rotan;

S. 234. An act granting a pension to James Frey; and

S. R. 74. Joint resolution relating to publications of the Geological Survey.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11353) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STEWART, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, and Mr. RAWLINS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 7290. An act granting an increase of pension to Lizzie B. Green;

H. R. 7847. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles S. Wilson;
 H. R. 2613. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas H. H. Gibbs;
 H. R. 12375. An act granting a pension to Amelia A. Russell;
 H. R. 3354. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Young;
 H. R. 1476. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry F. Benson;
 H. R. 3427. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Allen;
 H. R. 11025. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Carlile;
 H. R. 291. An act granting an increase of pension to Christina Heitz;
 H. R. 1485. An act granting an increase of pension to Thompson B. Moore;
 H. R. 4172. An act granting an increase of pension to George R. Chaney;
 H. R. 3260. An act granting a pension to Jacob Golden;
 H. R. 10957. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Stockings;
 H. R. 4053. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry E. De Marse;
 H. R. 7525. An act granting a pension to Marion Barnes;
 H. R. 3876. An act granting an increase of pension to Theophile A. Dauphin;
 H. R. 3884. An act granting an increase of pension to Erastus C. Moderwell;
 H. R. 9378. An act granting a pension to Clara B. Townsend;
 H. R. 10710. An act granting an increase of pension to Frances E. Scott;
 H. R. 9654. An act granting a pension to John S. James;
 H. R. 11916. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew B. Spurling;
 H. R. 1685. An act granting an increase of pension to Augustus E. Hodges;
 H. R. 1709. An act granting an increase of pension to Edwin J. Godfrey;
 H. R. 12395. An act granting a pension to Ruth Bartlett;
 H. R. 6023. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert L. Ackridge;
 H. R. 12490. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Culbreath;
 H. R. 3352. An act granting an increase of pension to Margaret M. Boyd;
 H. R. 7613. An act granting an increase of pension to Evaline Wilson;
 H. R. 4116. An act granting an increase of pension to William Berry; and
 H. R. 4176. An act granting an increase of pension to Nathan W. Snee.

RECIPROCITY WITH CUBA.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Chairman, at length the discussion of the proposed measure has been precipitated into the House. I listened yesterday with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, who opened the debate, and was impressed by his comparison of the present relationship of the island of Cuba to the United States. He characterized it as that of a guardian for a ward. I do not think the illustration very apt. Indeed, I do not think the remedy offered is such as a prudent guardian ought to tender to a ward. I have known guardians to indulge their wards far beyond the rule of appropriate conduct. I have known guardians to do for a ward what they refused to do for their own offspring; and while I honor a guardian for performing his duty, nevertheless I assert that our first duty is to our own child—the offspring of our established policy. The first duty of the American Congress is to the American people.

Much as I dislike to disagree with the Committee on Ways and Means upon the question of our fiscal policy, sharp and pointed and unmistakable as have been the differences between us in this matter, still I desire to record my sincere belief that the committee and its honored chairman have been animated by the highest motives and the utmost sincerity in the course upon which they have finally resolved.

This is the people's forum. Here is constituted the court of public opinion. This is the only place in the national councils where the people may be directly heard without passing through the circuitous pathway prescribed by the Constitution for other governmental agencies.

Every Representative upon this floor bears his commission directly from the people, and he must soon return to give an account of his stewardship.

This is the place where many men of many minds mingle together for the common weal. Those from the East come laden with the responsibility of large and multiplied industrial development. From the West is gathered together the composite energy of all the failures and of all the successes, all the trials and all the hardships of the past, representing the most marvelous development ever seen in any age of the world's progress. From the North we bring rare industrial trophies and illimitable energy which has made for us a proud place in the national economy. From the South you upon the other side bring to us the sweet perfume of peace restored, industry rehabilitated, and happiness returned.

Are we not indeed fortunate in the period and the hour of our public service, and should we not with solemn devotion consecrate ourselves to the public good?

I would not for anything have you believe that we who for two months have been battling for what we believe to be right were animated by any hostility or unfriendliness toward the island of Cuba. Such is far from the truth. We have always aided and sustained her in her struggle for independence. We glory in her approaching sovereignty, and we hope that her Congress may always be loyal to the Cuban people, emphasizing their devotion to the new Republic by stainless private life and honorable public conduct; and while they may bear their share of the world's responsibility for public order and do their part to insure its stability and progress, yet they must not forget that they represent Cuba, and that her future development will be critically watched by all the world.

So, Mr. Chairman, we must not forget that while we may sympathize with Cuba, and are indeed akin to all the world, our first duty is toward our own people, and everything that tends to strengthen and develop our multiplied resources at home and add to the measure of our national strength and independence should be the object of our profoundest solicitude.

I am opposed to this measure because I believe it is calculated to breed strife and dissatisfaction with the other sugar countries of the world, which are thus discriminated against.

I believe it will have a tendency to provoke commercial hostility among the other West India islands and our neighbors in South America.

I am opposed to this measure because, in order to give it effect, it becomes necessary to violate a solemn promise of the Republican party deliberately made in national convention to the American people.

I am opposed to this measure because I believe it will be harmful to the agricultural and industrial classes of the United States, whose great interests have been confided to our care, and because I believe it will be harmful in the extreme to the island of Cuba.

I am opposed to this policy because I believe that the principal beneficiary will be the American Sugar Refining Company, which does not need our sympathy.

I am opposed to this measure because I believe that the people of the island of Cuba will receive no benefit therefrom.

And now that the shackles of servitude have been lifted from this patient island people, after so many years of turmoil and disaster, I wish for her a greater destiny than to become merely the producer of a single product, and that dependent upon the caprice of a single corporation.

The rugged pathway over which our nation has trudged to greatness and power had many natural impediments which were readily overcome by her as the necessities arose; but the flight to industrial supremacy has been made through storm and trial, frequently with pinioned wings, and always and ever with doubt and hesitation carping in our wake.

There was little doubt as to the wisdom of our early tariff policy. Indeed, there was rarely any doubt about it until manufactures were stimulated to such an extent that the South saw in the invasion of skilled and free labor a condition inimical to the permanent institution of slavery. At that time the attitude of the South changed, and they gradually taught themselves to believe that it was better to produce raw material and send it to Europe to be manufactured for the world.

The South never aimed at industrial independence, and has with singular unanimity until within very recent years urged that our tariff laws were both burdensome and unconstitutional. They believed that the duties exacted were added to the cost of the article protected, and it will be strange indeed if it is not reasserted as this debate progresses.

On the other hand, we believe that the tariff operates to enlarge the area of production and ultimately to decrease the cost to the consumer. Who can doubt that the tremendous development of the sugar industry, stimulated as it has been by tariff, bounties, and cartels, multiplying the volume a million fold, has had the effect to give to the consumers of sugar the world over this article of necessity at the minimum of cost?

No development of the world's production of foodstuffs has been more rapid or striking than that of beet sugar. In 1854 the total crop of the world was 182,000 tons. Ten years later it had reached 536,000 tons, and ten years later, 1,219,000 tons, multiplying each decade until, in 1900, it had reached the enormous amount of 5,510,000 tons.

When my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, sitting upon my right, first entered the House of Representatives, sugar made from beets grown upon the farm formed but 13 per cent of the world's total sugar crop, whereas last year it constituted 67 per cent of the total world's sugar. While my distinguished friend [Mr. Grow] has been serving the people of his State with great wisdom and constancy, the sugar-producing area of the world has shifted from the Tropics northward until the farmer of the temperate zone is fast growing to be the captain of this industry.

Our friends upon the other side of the Chamber can not argue that the tariff has been added to the cost, for the average price per pound has been lessened from 5.37 cents in 1871 to 2.49 cents in 1900. I can remember distinctly paying 15 cents a pound for sugar; to-day you get 20 pounds for $1.

Artificially stimulated as it has been, the masses of mankind have reaped the benefit. While the world's population has no more than doubled in sixty years, its consumption of sugar to-day is more than eight times as much as in 1840. And while but a single factory in all the United Kingdom now refines cane sugar, all the others are exclusively occupied in preparing for the market the raw product of the beet farms of Germany, France, Austria, and Russia.

The American Sugar Refining Company refines the cane sugar sold in this market, and controls 90 per cent of the product. The beet-sugar manufacturer takes the beet from the farmer's hands, and when it leaves his factory is refined and ready for the table.

This is a struggle for supremacy between a gigantic and cold-blooded monopoly upon the one hand and the American farmer and sugar manufacturer upon the other. And I make the prediction that the struggle will be long and relentless and costly; and if we will give to the American sugar industry the same measure of protection accorded in all other fields of American enterprise, this sugar trust will lower its haughty head and deal fairly with the people upon whom it must depend.

Withdraw protection from this new and promising industry, discourage and weaken it by encouraging its rival, and when the epitaph is written upon its dismantled ruins, be very sure that your name does not appear among its principal offenders.

We bring you a rebate plan which has in it no threat to American industries. We bring to you a proposition which, if carried to its conclusion, will give a wider and better and far more reaching relief to the Cuban people than the proposition of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] in his speech upon this floor yesterday said he would do nothing that would affect unfavorably any American industry. He said this bill was not calculated to do the beet-sugar industry of our country any harm. But the testimony before his committee, of Mr. Atkins, of Boston, largely interested in the cane-sugar industry in the island of Cuba, is in conflict with the statement of the gentleman from New York.

Indeed, my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], who sits here on my left, said in one of the conferences—and I violate no secret—that if he thought this would harm an American industry it could not receive his support; and I do him the honor to say that I do not believe he would willingly harm a single American industry. But I ask him to reconcile the testimony of Mr. Atkins with the statement he made in conference.

Mr. Atkins says in answer to a question:

"Do you think it desirable for the Government to do anything to encourage the domestic production of sugar?"

"No; I do not."

Reconcile that with your protection principles, if you can. One of the men whose testimony you are guided by as to the necessity for this legislation does not favor American independence of foreign sugar supply. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from New York say that this concession will do the industry no harm. I ask you, gentlemen, my colleagues upon this floor, whom are we to believe? Are we to believe the man who does not believe in the domestic production of sugar, and therefore favors the pending bill, or are we to believe the members of the committee, who say that this action will do no harm? The situation is complex.

It reminds me of a story of two tramps who went to a house to beg something to eat. As they neared the premises a dog came fiercely out of the back door and up toward the two tramps, and one said to the other: "The dog won't hurt you, Jim; go to the door and ask for something to eat. The dog won't hurt you; don't you see he is wagging his tail." "Yes," said Jim, more discerning than his pal, "I see he is wagging his tail, but I also notice he's showing his teeth and snarling; I do not know which end to believe." [Laughter.] So, Mr. Chairman, when gentlemen largely interested in the production of cane sugar in Cuba, our rival in the sugar markets of the world, tell us that they do not believe in any protection at all, and when the gentleman from New York yesterday admitted that 50 per cent reduction would not be too much to give to the island as a trade basis, and when I pressed the question upon him, admitted that free trade in raw sugar would be even more satisfactory than the present bill, may I hope to be pardoned if we look upon the whole plan with suspicion?

Mr. PAYNE. I think the gentleman from Michigan ought to distinguish which gentleman from New York.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I do not mean the gentleman who is now addressing me, but your colleague, Mr. McCLELLAN.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, that's it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I said a moment ago that we were not hostile to the island of Cuba. We believe in helping that island. We glory in its approaching independence. Our sympathy for Cuba takes a practical turn. Under your policy you simply afford a reduction of tariff to the few owners and exporters of sugar, while our policy would turn back to the government of the island of Cuba 20 or 25 per cent of the full revenue collected, relieve all the people of that island from the burdens of taxation, and assist it in its initial movement as an independent government. Our confidence in Cuba is greater than yours. The gentleman from New York yesterday in debate, turning upon me, asserted that when he made the speech in 1897 to which I called the attention of the House, he did it before the Spanish-American war. But every time there is a war must our fiscal policy be readjusted? The gentleman again turned upon me seemingly and charged myself and others here with the responsibility for bringing on that war.

Well, now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to avoid any responsibility for my action either preceding or during the Spanish war. But I say to the gentleman from New York that you may search my record in the Fifty-fourth and each succeeding Congress up to the present time in vain to find a single suggestion from me which warrants you in making such a statement. I never uttered a sentence upon this floor in favor of war with Spain; I never uttered a sentence upon this floor in the whole Cuban controversy except to advocate according belligerent rights to Cuba and to Spain, as we had the right to do under international law. So that my record upon that subject is as clear as the gentleman's.

I went to the White House as one of a committee of this House, informally chosen, to see the President, and there are men about me to-day who know what I said to President McKinley when he asked how I stood on that matter. I said to the President that while Michigan believed an end should be put to that war, while we believed in carrying out the principles laid down in the St. Louis platform in giving independence to the island of Cuba, yet I was one who wanted him to know that I would not urge him to go one inch farther or one minute faster than he thought it wise and prudent to go. Gentlemen sitting about me will bear out that statement. While others went further, I was conservative.

But, be that as it may, I have no desire to evade the responsibilities of the Spanish-American war. I believe that we have rid this hemisphere of a most disturbing affliction. I have no apology to make for it here or any place else. We believe in the future of the island of Cuba. We believe that it possesses unrivaled possibilities. We are willing and anxious to do something for it, but I ask you, sir, if it is wise for us to change our policy merely to meet a temporary exigency of a foreign state? If you start out on a proposition of that kind, you will instantly involve your country in jealousy with other West India islands and South American republics; you will instantly involve yourself with other great European sugar-producing countries, and possibly violate the most-favored-nation clause of treaties by favoring this one sugar-producing country of the Western Hemisphere. For one, I do not propose to engage in any such undertaking. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, much was said yesterday about the utterance of President McKinley at Buffalo. I defy the gentleman from New York or any member of the Ways and Means Committee to point out a single sentence of William McKinley in his Buffalo speech which gives you any warrant whatever for the measure now before the House of Representatives. I will tell you what he said in that memorable and God-inspired utterance, which will live forever as his parting message to the American people.

By sensible trade arrangements which will not interrupt our home production we should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor.

Will this "interrupt our home production?" Every sugar interest in the State of Michigan says it will. Will this interfere with industry and labor here? Ask the farmers and laborers in the sugar fields of Michigan and California.

I contend, sir, that reciprocity treaties should be so framed as not to interfere with American industry, and I stand on the speech of President McKinley; I stand upon the national platform of the Republican party; and that platform in 1900 said:

We favor the associated policy of reciprocity, so directed as to open our markets on favorable terms for what we do not ourselves produce.

We produce sugar; we will produce more sugar if you will but give us the encouragement you promised [turning to Mr. PAYNE].

The Republican party has always kept and redeemed its promises. Our greatest statesmen saw a few years ago that upward of a hundred million dollars was being annually sent out of our country to purchase sugar. They had confidence and faith in American capacity to produce this article. The Agricultural Department of the Government sent experts all over the world to study the secret chemistry of the soil. Seed was distributed to whomsoever would experiment with it. Our national faith was pledged to give it a fair and honest trial. The Republican platform of 1896 boldly said:

We condemn the present Administration for not keeping faith with the sugar producers of this country. The Republican party favors such protection as will lead to the production on American soil of all the sugar which the American people use, and for which they pay other countries more than $100,000,000 annually.

In the Republican campaign text-book of 1900, issued by the national committee, quoted from by every speaker in the land, there appears the following:

No subject interests the farmers of the United States more than that of the possibility of their being able to supply the hundred million dollars' worth of sugar which our people consume annually, and some facts which have recently been presented show that they are fully justified in their ambition.

The farmers of the country have been encouraged by the Republican party in their ambition to produce the sugar of the country. It was a distinct promise to the farmer that he need not fear that the Republican party would permit the cheap labor and cheap sugar of any tropical territory to be brought in in a manner which would destroy the infant industry of beet-sugar production which the farmers of the United States have, under the fostering care of the Republican party, been building up during the last few years.

The lamented Mr. Dingley, with whom we had the honor to serve, said with his unerring wisdom in the discussion of the tariff act which bears his name:

Nothing can be done to so successfully clip the wings of the sugar trust as to develop our beet-sugar industry, and at the same time confer immense benefit on our farmers and all our people.

While the distinguished chairman of the Committee upon Ways and Means in the present Congress, while that bill was under discussion, advocated establishing a beet-sugar factory in every Congressional district in the United States, assuring us in his own well-chosen language:

We will not disturb our tariff in the next quarter of a century.

And the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] in the same debate said:

There is not a rate of duty, not a principle of tariff taxation, that has not been protested against by the sugar trust and fought to the bitter end before the Ways and Means Committee. We propose that instead of sending $125,000,000 a year to the foreign countries of the world, most of which goes to pay labor in the production of sugar, we will make it possible for every pound of sugar that we want to be produced in the United States of America. The Republican party comes and offers to the agriculturist of this country this magnificent boon. We will protect the industries of the country in all directions from further demoralization; and we ask you to turn aside hundreds of thousands of acres of the splendid lands of all these States from the production of corn and oats and wheat and potatoes and cotton to be put into an already overstocked market, to the production of sugar, and give to the farmers upon the farming lands of this country a better market with less competition than they now have.

Mr. Chairman, the great States of Michigan and Wisconsin, California and New York, Colorado, Utah, Oregon and Montana took these distinguished statesmen at their word; had faith in the promise of our party declaration. Upward of twelve and a half million dollars has been invested in the sugar industries of Michigan. More than 20,000 farmers heard the bugle blast of the gentleman from Ohio, and are to-day under contract cultivating the sugar beet. At the time you spoke, sir, there was not a sugar factory in the whole State of Michigan. Now there are ten in successful operation. And if you will but recall this measure and give the assistance to Cuba which we all desire to give in another and simpler way, not involving a change of the policy of our Government, ten new factories will be completed this year.

I know it is claimed that this cut of 20 per cent will do our present factories no harm; but, Mr. Chairman, when the Dingley law was passed and you invited us to engage in this business you did not say that you would even agitate a change in the tariff, much less reduce it by 20 per cent.

But I do not need to refresh the gentleman's recollection by turning to the utterances of anyone but himself. In the testimony before the Committee on Ways and Means Mr. Carey, an expert sugar man, was asked by General GROSVENOR:

Is it possible, in your judgment, to make a concession to Cuban sugar that will benefit the Cuban people and still not injure the production in the United States of cane and beet sugar?

And the answer of Mr. Carey was:

I do not think anything about it; I know that it is not.

And Mr. GROSVENOR replied:

Nobody could help knowing that who knew enough to put two and two together.

[Applause.]

I ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he has suddenly changed from his attitude of hostility, which that remark disclosed, to one of general approval of the subject under consideration?

The fact that it will do harm must be admitted when you realize that it will benefit our rivals. Men who have engaged in this industry are frightened and alarmed. Banks and financial institutions are disturbed by the agitation of a reduction and by the call for a further and a larger cut. Loans are difficult to obtain, securities have been impaired, danger lurks in the principle you would have us adopt to-day.

Is it not the height of political wisdom to make our country independent of foreign sugar supply? Fifty years ago the consumption of sugar per capita was but 22 pounds. Last year it was 68 pounds per capita. The growth of our country, the increase and multiplied uses to which sugar will be put will some day, and not far distant, equal an annual expenditure of $200,000,000. What a tremendous drain that will be upon the resources of the country. How absolutely inexcusable if our policy should result in the destruction or the permanent impairment of this industry.

If we were in ignorance of what could be accomplished by a consistent and American course, there might be some excuse for doubt and hesitation and even a change of policy. But within the lifetime of every man upon this floor domestic industry has been stimulated and our country made independent of a European supply.

How recently the late President, then Congressman, McKinley was jeered upon this floor because he dared to advance the theory that a tariff of 2.2 cents a pound upon tin plate would stimulate its manufacture here. At the time he made the statement there was not a pound of tin plate being produced in the United States, although there was and had been for years a revenue tariff on tin plate of a cent a pound. What a din of incomprehensible noises filled the air after the enactment of this measure! Misrepresentation seemed to be the principal avocation in every community. Housewives laid in a supply of tin dishes in order to take advantage of the price before the bill went into effect.

We were expending in Wales $20,000,000 every year for tin. There are men upon the other side of this Chamber to-day who did not believe that tin plate would ever be manufactured in the United States as the result of the McKinley law.

Prior to its enactment we imported 650,000,000 pounds annually from Europe. The first year of the law we made in America 13,000,000 pounds of tin plate, the third year 139,000,000 pounds, the fifth year 304,000,000 pounds, and in 1900 there was manufactured in the United States 1,000,000,000 pounds of tin plate.

[Applause.]

We no longer send our money abroad for the employment of the laborers of Wales. Twenty-three thousand American citizens now labor daily in the tin mills of our own country, while upwards of $15,000,000 is annually paid to them in wages.

Are you proud of your prediction? Do you enjoy the distinction which you have attained as a political prophet? This vast army of laborers in the tin mills of America are the patrons of the carpenter and the bricklayer and the mechanic and the farmer of our own country, stimulating every community in which they labor.

My distinguished friend from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] and myself had the pleasure, in the last campaign, to personally inspect a modern tin-plate mill near my own home, and I can not tell you the joy I felt when I realized for the first time how effective had been the policy of the noble and lamented McKinley.

[Applause.]

You will be as proud, my protectionist friends, over the sugar industry of the United States, and the benefits will be a thousand times more far-reaching if you will but give it the same full measure of protection as was given to the tin industry of our country.

I am opposed to this policy urged by the committee, because I deem it the height of unwisdom to change the economic policy of our country, where a large and growing industry is affected. Cuba does not need our sympathy. She may well profit by our wisdom and our example. She needs to be encouraged in the principles of Government best calculated to her largest development.

I think if we encourage her to become merely the producer of sugar we will do her infinitely more harm than good. You may ask what I would recommend. Possibly there is no wisdom in the suggestion, but, Mr. Chairman, if I had my way I would propose to the first congress of Cuba that she follow the wisdom of the early fathers of the American Republic and put about her rich possessions a protective tariff which would develop the multiplied resources of the territory and stimulate the people into the diversified avenues of commerce and industry. [Applause.]

Let her drink from the fountain of political wisdom, where we found our most cooling and refreshing drafts.

Cuba is rich in resources, specially favored by climate, with harbors unsurpassed. I think too much of her to consign her to the permanent fate of cane-sugar production, which makes her labor semislave, and will keep the standard of her citizenship very low.

She has virgin forests with a rich and rare variety of woods. She has iron and copper undeveloped and unexplored. The mountainous end of eastern Cuba is most highly favored and will produce lemons equal to the Mediterranean shore between Marseilles and Genoa, and is one of the finest regions for coffee culture in the world, particularly between Santiago and Guantanamo and from Cape Maysi to Baracoa, on the northern side.

I long to see Cuba rich and prosperous. I paid my first visit to the island when the reciprocity of Mr. Blaine was at its height. I know the condition of her people then and never shall forget as long as I live the thrill of satisfaction I felt when I saw American flour piled upon the wharves at Habana, Matanzas, and other ports. I thought then that reciprocity with Cuba was most desirable, and I think so now, whenever it can be accomplished without injury to the domestic industry of the United States, but I do not believe that any exigency exists in the affairs of Cuba which warrant this radical departure from the policy of our Government, so long established, and I do not believe that the late President McKinley in his last utterance, so full of wisdom, ever intended that the reciprocity which he approved was to be other than in perfect harmony with our protective policy. He always stood solidly upon the Republican platform, which in 1900 declared:

We favor the associated policy of reciprocity so directed as to open our markets on favorable terms for what we do not ourselves produce, in return for free foreign markets.

I have said that I did not believe the condition of Cuba was such as to call for this sacrifice of domestic industry. According to the evidence before the Committee upon Ways and Means, all the labor of Cuba is employed at higher wages than are paid the farm hands of Michigan and Minnesota. According to the report of the War Department just made, the export trade of Cuba, which in 1899 amounted to $37,435,296, in nine months of 1901 amounted to $52,861,672, an increase of over 40 per cent.

While Cuban exports have increased, her imports have decreased, indicating a very healthy condition of affairs, and in nine months of the last year she shows a net balance of exports over imports of $4,244,858.

Truly there is no indication of distress in these figures. The agitation must have found its origin away from the island of Cuba. What kind of distress think you would cause the sugar product of Cuba to increase from 300,000 tons in 1899 to 615,000 tons in 1900, and to over 800,000 tons in 1901, without any modification of our tariff laws?

It is said the Cuban people would be benefited by a reduced tariff duty upon sugar. I can not bring myself to believe this is a true statement. Governor Wood says that 450,000 tons of raw sugar are now stored in the warehouses of Cuba. At $70 a ton the value of this sugar would be $31,500,000.

Whom do you suppose owns it?

Take 20 per cent off the duty and in my opinion the sugar trust will pocket $2,916,000 in the twinkling of an eye. Reduce the duty 50 per cent, as some tariff reformers, like the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN], urge us to do, and the owners of this sugar would pocket $7,290,000. Take the duty all off, as the free traders of our country would have us do, and the owners of this stored sugar would pocket $14,580,000.

Much sympathy has been worked up for what is styled the "poor Cuban," but, Mr. Chairman, the "poor Cuban" is employed at as high wages as he will receive if the tariff is lowered.

Who is it that has the greatest motive for advocating this reduction of duty?

I do not consult the possible prejudices of men for my conclusions, but I turn to the last annual statement of Mr. Havemeyer's benevolent aggregation, known as the sugar trust, and I find on December 31 last they reported their assets at $123,551,777, an increase of $12,380,198 over the assets of the preceding year; and turning to the details of the account I find that this increase grows out of the following situation:

"In 1900 the American Sugar Refining Company had on hand $22,488,790 worth of raw sugar unmanufactured, while on December 1 just passed they had on hand $12,248,640 worth of raw sugar unmanufactured, a decrease of $10,240,150. Does this not account for the failure to sell on the part of the Cuban planter described by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]?"

The New York Journal of Commerce, eager as it is for Cuban relief, is frank enough to say that the item of sugar which shows the decrease as above stated, would seem to indicate that the sugar trust has been "carrying a smaller amount of raw sugar than usual at this season—a move that finds explanation in the anticipated reduction of duties on Cuban sugar by Congress."

No wonder that Mr. Pepper, in his letter to the Evening Star, under date of March 13, says the shipments of sugar from the port of Habana amounted in the week then closed to but 6 sacks (1,920 pounds), not enough to keep the sugar refiner busy for one minute.

Are you so blind that you can not see why this gigantic corporation is carrying so little raw sugar and the purpose it has in view? Are you unwilling to believe that the chief beneficiaries of this reduction will be the sugar trust, which the gentleman from Ohio says opposed the sugar tariff to the bitter end when the present schedule of rates was adopted?

Cuba can produce sugar cheaper than any other country in the world. The French Journal of Commerce says the island has a capacity of upward of 5,000,000 tons, more than twice the capacity of the people of the United States to consume.

When competition has been stifled, when the production of beet sugar has received its final deathblow, who, let me ask you, is the master of the trade in this great article of necessary use? The company organized for the purpose of refining the raw cane sugar of the Tropics. Think you they will not recoup the loss which competition and expensive development have made necessary in order to dispose of a promising rival?

The pathway of the sugar trust is strewn with the wrecks of its competitors, and, oh! what a monopoly this company will enjoy when a false public sentiment, based upon a false foundation, enforces further reduction and gives this company the greatest sugar market in all the world for its domination.

I commend to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. PAYNE], who honors me by his presence, the attitude of Congressman McKenna, now a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, who took the same view then that Mr. TAWNEY and Mr. METCALF, of the committee, take in the present Congress. Mr. McKenna, then dissenting from the sugar schedule of the McKinley law, said:

Protection as understood politically is the clear right of all industries or none. The bill (McKinley) in its schedule makes an arbitrary and invidious distinction between the sugar industry and other industries. The Republican House of Representatives should not set this example. Who can say where the contagion will stop? The beet-sugar industry is not only suitable to the circumstances of the country, but of all the range of protected industries not one offers such a brilliant prospect for good. Must an industry be able to supply the home consumption before it is entitled to protection? Protection must be universal, it must be national, or not at all.

Justice McKenna, dissenting from the Committee on Ways and Means, thus stated our position, at a time when there was not a single beet-sugar factory in the entire State of Michigan, if indeed there was one in the United States. We have brought this industry into life by republican doctrine. Do you propose to cripple it at the very threshold of its development?

I do not blame the Democratic party for its hostility to the tariff in the past. You then had reasons for being hostile. You valued slavery then more than manufacturing industry with well-paid free labor. From your view that position was necessary before the war, when much of your wealth was in slaves and free white labor would have caused you trouble; therefore you opposed the imposition of a tariff, calculated to diversify the products of the country and make it all that God intended it to be.

But the South is changing somewhat upon that question, to which I am glad to testify. Still, there are not a sufficient number who can get away from the old prejudices to come out squarely for protection, and we are obliged to force prosperity upon them. We always believed that our country should be independent of the world, that the protective principle would diversify our products, and it has succeeded admirably in so doing. Mr. Chairman, we look for little help from the Democracy. For my part, no alliance has ever been made or attempted with the Democratic party to defeat this measure or to help the position of the minority upon this side. We are protectionists. We believe in the doctrine of protection. In that respect you, my friends, are 20 per cent nearer the Democratic party than we are. [Applause.] We believe in the doctrine of protection. I wish you and your associates would help us repel this assault.

This morning while coming to the Capitol with a distinguished hold-over Democrat of the Cleveland Administration, who occupies one of the most prominent positions in the Government service, he said to me, "How are you coming out in your sugar fight?" I said to him, "I hope we will win. Are you with us?" He said, "No, I am not with you." I said, "Why?" He said, "I am a free trader, and this bill tends in my direction."

We are protectionists. We are not reconcentrados; we are not insurgents; we stand for Republican doctrines; we follow the leadership of that arch protectionist, the lamented McKinley. We take this occasion to say that it is a poor time for you to compromise with the tariff reformers of our country. They have been battering at the walls of protection since hard times have disappeared. They ridiculed off the statute books the great measure of protection advocated by William McKinley. They drove him from his seat in Congress by misrepresentations. Now do not adopt their policy; do not compromise with error. If you do, you will have a public sentiment in the country in favor of tariff revision which you can not stem or stay until agitation has worked havoc with our industries. We would stay it now. We would stay it with your help; but we would stay it, if we can, without your help. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I said a moment ago that you were throttling this industry at the very threshold. I repeat it. Is there a man on this floor to-day who will not admit that a reduction in the tariff will encourage our rival in the sugar industry? Is there a man on this floor who does not know that to pass this law will stimulate Cuba in sugar production? If it will not stimulate that island why are you passing it? And right here I propose to dissent from the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] yesterday that the consumer pays the tax. If the consumer pays the tax, why in heaven's name has not the exporter in Cuba sent his product over here to be consumed? He is holding it because he knows he will be obliged to pay more to get through our custom-house than he will have to pay if your proposition goes into effect.

And I deny the general principle that the consumer pays the tax. That is an old Democratic dogma. It has been worn threadbare in the campaigns of the past. Let me ask you if we to-day put a tariff of a thousand dollars a ton upon steel rails, would the price of steel rails to-morrow be a thousand dollars a ton? Nonsense! Such a price would increase production almost without limit until the price of rails would fall far below the tariff. I deny the proposition that the tariff is added to the cost and has to be paid by the consumer. Why, Mr. Chairman, protection is based upon the principle that it will enlarge the area of production. If we enlarge the area of production and multiply the product the price falls and the consumer is benefited.

Take the article of sugar, for instance. When bounties were placed upon sugar in Europe there was very little sugar produced. In 1840 there was only 1,150,000 tons. In 1900, 8,800,000 tons was produced in the world. I ask you whether the price is higher to-day than it was when we began to protect sugar? Gradually the cost has been reduced. We have increased the volume and we have thereby decreased the price, as we did with tin plate. If somebody in the Fifty-sixth Congress had proposed to take the tariff off tin plate, is there a man on this side of the Chamber who would have voted for it? No; because you have stimulated the tin-plate industry of America to a point where to-day we are supplying all that we consume. [Applause.]

But the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] said yesterday that there was 450,000 tons of raw sugar now stored in the warehouses of Cuba waiting to be exported to this country, and I rose for the purpose of asking him who owned the sugar. He evaded the question. Who does own the sugar? Let me remind him again of the annual report of the American Sugar Refining Company, just made public, which shows the amount of raw sugar on hand to be much less than last year at this time.

Now, tell me, gentlemen of the Ways and Means Committee—I will give you the opportunity if you will rise—tell me whether the American Sugar Refining Company have not purposely avoided buying raw sugar in Cuba to inflame public sentiment in that island and public sentiment in America in favor of a reduction of duty? If that is the case, who will be the beneficiary of their course? Clearly that company. Are you prepared to do this? Are you prepared to thus demonstrate your benevolent interest in the sugar trust, whose principal owner says he knows nothing about ethics, and if it costs money to destroy competition he will make it up later by increasing the price?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman says that he is opposed to this bill, because the benefit would go to the sugar trust. I will ask the gentleman if he will stand with us and reduce the differential duty that the trust gets?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Does the gentleman favor taking the duty off refined sugar of the world?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say that if an amendment is offered that I think is germane—

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Rules and an able parliamentarian. Do you believe that would be germane?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I believe that one can be prepared that will be germane.

And now I ask the gentleman to answer my question.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I will answer the gentleman by asking him this question: Do you believe that an amendment is germane to take the duty off refined sugar of the world?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I believe that an amendment proposing to take off the duty on refined sugar coming from Cuba, or other parts of the world through Cuba, is germane.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. There is not an ounce of refined sugar that comes from Cuba. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If you want to raise the question you can do it in that way.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I will cross that bridge when I get to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman wants to strike at the differential duty, it could be accomplished in that way.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I will not say to the consumer of sugar in America that we are going to do him any good by taking the duty off refined sugar from Cuba when there is no sugar refined on that island. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman stand on the proposition that he will not strike at the duty that the trust gets, when he pretends here that we are legislating for the trust? I will ask the gentleman to answer that question.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Not if I believe it to be germane.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have just stated that a motion to strike the differential off the duty on refined sugar that comes from Cuba, no matter where it is imported from into Cuba, coming from Cuban ports, would be in order.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I do not know a single agent of the American Sugar Refining Company in the world. I do not know whether there is one in the galleries of this House now or not; but if he were in the gallery and heard the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama, he must have an expansive smile upon his face equal to that of the gentleman from Alabama, in his pleasantest mood [laughter and applause on the Republican side], because the gentleman knows that that would not affect the sugar trust at all, and would not avail us anything.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think you can reach the trust in that way.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will you give your indorsement to that proposition?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If it comes from Cuba I certainly should. Will the gentleman vote for that?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I will state to the gentleman from Michigan that there are some Democrats who will vote for it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If I believed it parliamentary, I might do so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think you will have that opportunity.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I shall watch the gentleman's vote with a great deal of interest.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And I will do the same by the gentleman from Michigan. [Laughter.]

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Chairman, my friends of the Ways and Means Committee are exceedingly solicitous about the conditions of the island of Cuba. I know something about the conditions of the island from personal observation. I was there during reciprocity ten years ago. I was upon the great sugar plantations of Cuba when prosperity was at its height.

When I returned I had the proud pleasure of an hour's interview with Mr. Blaine, the author of our reciprocity treaties. I believe in reciprocity to-day, but I believe in the reciprocity that does not involve the surrender of the principle of protection.

I again visited Cuba just after the Maine went down. I know something of the suffering of those people. I saw the reconcentrado in his camp. I saw the farmers herded upon the Los Focos in Habana and fed like animals. I saw in one ward of the city of Habana more than 8,000 orphan children, many with the marks of the machete upon their heads; and I saw people starving to death by the thousands. Fifteen people died in one day in the doorway of the governor of Matanzas. I saw little children in the last stages of starvation, swollen to such proportion that they looked more like animals than human beings. I sympathized with Cuba then, and I am interested in her to-day. I would do for her more than the gentleman from New York offers to do by this bill.

Let us see about her condition. Cuba is in a transition period. She is passing from military rule to independence, and yet she shows an increase in her export trade of 40 per cent this year. Why does she need our sympathy? The balance of trade is in her favor over $4,000,000. She is in healthful condition; there is no distress in the island. Labor is all employed at wages better than are paid to the farm hands of our own country. Their sugar output is at its highest point. Would they have increased this output had they not been in a prosperous condition? What caused the increase? Why, the American planters who have gone in and made their investments, the Havemeyers, the Atkinses, men of enterprise and intelligence who have gone down there for that purpose.

I ask you whether this is inimical to our sugar producer? I ask you if it does not threaten his existence? Cuba is the richest spot in the world. It can produce more sugar than any similar area. She has a capacity so great that the sugar producer of America must give up the moment you strike down the barrier. Only one-tenth of the land of Cuba is under cultivation.

I know it will be urged that the American sugar manufacturer might better take this small cut, which will not affect the price of sugar one way or the other, rather than run the chances of annexation.

But in answer to that argument I desire to say that the question of the annexation of Cuba has no terror for the American sugar manufacturer. You throw around that island the strong arm of our Government, make it a part of our territory, guarantee to it the same stability that is guaranteed to every State in the Union, and the island of Cuba will soon be populated by ten million people. Industry will be diversified and resources developed, instead of being merely the producers of sugar the island will be a hive of multiplied industry, the land that now produces sugar cane at a small profit will at that time produce garden stuffs, cereals, and fruit to supply the tremendous demand of her increased population.

While Cuba may become a competitor in other fields of industry, the standard of her citizenship would be immediately raised; her ambition, hopes, and expectations would be confined only to the limitations of the National Union. [Applause.]

Her people would go into the forests, virgin and illimitable. The labor that annexation would drive to Cuba would force the owners of land to cut it up into small farms, to be used in the production of cereals, vegetables, and fruits, profitable at their own doors.

So, my friends, we are not terrorized by annexation. But we want responsibility to precede bounty.

If you will but encourage the farmers of the West to go on growing beets for the manufacture of sugar, you will do for future generations incalculable good; you will diversify the products of the farm in such a way as to bring the price of agricultural lands to the maximum value.

Mr. Chairman, in the State of Michigan we have 20,000 farmers raising sugar beets. They are under contract; they are getting a fair price. Curtail sugar production in America, put a premium upon the business of their rivals, and you instantly cast a gloom over the beet producers. Michigan has a great interest in this question. Michigan believes in the policy of the Republican party. Michigan was the birthplace of the Republican party and has never withheld her electoral vote from our candidates, and our delegation refuses to stand by the grave of a single unredeemed promise of that party. [Applause.] We believe in keeping promises inviolate.

There are men in this gallery who put their money into the sugar industry of Michigan pleading for protection. There is not a drop of water in the capitalization of the sugar-beet industry of Michigan. Every dollar invested is bona fide. Do not drive them from this industry by inadequate protection.

We can at least keep our party pledges. We can at least do what we promised the country to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BISHOP. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have thirty minutes more.

Mr. LANDIS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BISHOP] asks that his colleague be permitted to proceed for thirty minutes. The gentleman from Indiana amends by asking that the gentleman from Michigan may be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection to the latter request?

There was no objection.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Chairman, if we will keep this protection on, if we will not disturb the sugar industry, it will soon require 3,788,540 acres of farm land to produce the beets which are required for sugar making. It will give to the farmer $98,000,000 a year for the crop, and the invested capital will aggregate, if it does not exceed, $745,000,000. The consumer will very soon get the benefit of it.

Give the same measure of protection to the sugar industry of our country that you did to tin, and you will have a product here so large that we can supply the American market for future generations and keep at home the vast sums of money which we have formerly sent abroad.

But I hear people say that the Platt amendment is in the way of Cuban development. I deny it. I have examined the Platt amendment with great care. There is not a line of it which prevents Cuba from making trade arrangements with any country in the world with whom she ever did a dollar's worth of business.

If I am wrong, I ask some member of the Ways and Means Committee to rise and tell me wherein I err. There is not a line of that law which deprives Cuba of a single market she ever enjoyed before the amendment was passed. Indeed, she is privileged to go into the markets of the world. She is there now. Spain is one of her patrons. What we did say in the Platt amendment was that she should make no treaties which should involve her sovereignty—a vastly different proposition.

Cuba will be free soon, as free as the laws of our country and the Monroe doctrine will permit her to be. But, Mr. Chairman, it is false to say that we are depriving her of any great advantage in the world's market. I deny it. I hurl it back as an untruth. It will not stand the test of verity here nor in any legal forum of our country. It is not true. Our Government has done nothing to limit her rights abroad. But the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LONG] and others will say our national honor is involved. When did we guarantee the prosperity of Cuba? When will our responsibility end? National honor! Read the platform of our party. Read the text-book issued by the Republican campaign committee of 1900 where they distinctly say to the farmer of America that he need not fear that the Republican party would permit the cheap labor and the cheap sugar of any tropical territory to be brought in in a manner which would destroy the infant industry of beet-sugar production in the United States which the farmers of the United States have, under the fostering care of the Republican party, protected and brought into life. [Applause.]

Here your national honor is involved. Guard it well.

We are not insurgents; we are the regular protectionists of our party. We stand upon our platform; we stand upon our principles; we are consistent; we are guided by the past, and look forward to the future with bright hopes and anticipations; we adhere to the party policy.

You are departing from it to give her a little boon for sixteen months, chaining her hand and foot while you feed her gruel from a spoon for a brief period of infancy. Why do you not give her better advice? Suppose that advice had been given to our country in its early history. What think you Washington, Jefferson, and Hamilton would have said? They would have said, "Our possibilities are greater than that." They would have said, as they did say, "Protection will develop and multiply the industries and resources of America." Protection would develop and multiply the industries and resources of Cuba. Do you want her independent? Give her a fair policy. Do you want her to prosper? Do not chain her hands. Do you want her to be truly independent, or are you preparing her for statehood in the Union?

Mr. Chairman, the greatest political wisdom that our country has ever received was gathered from the West India Islands, the birthplace of Alexander Hamilton, who first gave effect and form to the policy of protection; whose wisdom should still rule us, and should be ever present in our deliberations. Give them the advice which Hamilton gave to us and you will make Cuba truly great and truly independent.

I long to see Cuba rich and prosperous; I long to see her independent. I want her proud company in the family of nations. But if you make her a carrier of water and a hewer of wood; if you confine her development to a single industry, you make Cuba a dependent people.

But, Mr. Chairman, I can not bring my argument to a close until I emphasize my entire dissent from the growing tendency of the people, now in the very height of their prosperity, to again attempt the reformation of the tariff.

Our factories are now humming with the rattle of busy looms. Our forges glow with furnace fires. The ports of our commerce stir with the pulses of enlarged trade, and improvements in city, town, and hamlet are adding to the beauty and utility of the land.

Is it not strange indeed that so short a time has elapsed between the abject poverty of our people and the unrivaled prosperity of the present? And yet there are people and journals urging that the time is now ripe for a general revision of the tariff. They hold that the organization of trusts is the natural outgrowth of protected industry. There never was a more fallacious and false statement made by men of wisdom and discernment.

Mr. Havemeyer said before the Industrial Commission that the tariff was the mother of trusts. If that be so, tell me how it happens that free-trade England has more trusts within her Empire than America with all its protection. [Applause on Republican side.]

I do not believe that the gigantic corporations now massing their wealth into single industries need protection for their stockholders. Indeed, I am almost of the opinion that they possibly might be better off without it.

I do not stand in this honored place as the representative of any of these corporations. I stand here to plead for the preservation of the American wage scale in the interest of the happy home of the toiling millions of our laborers.

You strike down the tariff upon iron and steel and the international trust, with headquarters in London, will supply the product of steel and iron to the world.

Which scale of wages think you will be the measure of remuneration given to the labor of that trust?—the American scale or the European scale?

For the preservation of the American scale I stand here to defend the tariff against its false friends. The laborer is the principal beneficiary of our policy. He has no capital except the willingness to labor; that he may use his capital to the best possible advantage, that he may patronize his fellows in other walks of life, that he may educate his children, acquire his own home, humble though it may be, that he may enjoy the comforts, and, indeed, some of the luxuries of life, is the only apology I make for holding unflinchingly to our great protection policy. [Applause.]

I have heard it stated that the leaders in this House and in the Senate desire to enter the coming Congressional campaign with a united party. So do I. You can unite your party for Republican principles; you can unite it for a sound currency; you can unite it for a protective tariff; you can strike it in twain by half-hearted devotion to either principle. [Applause.]

I have no patience with the desire upon the part of the false friends of protection who are constantly parading the volume of our foreign commerce. Much as I value it when it comes without the surrender of our domestic market, still it is as a drop of water in the great ocean when compared to the fabulous market at our own door.

The grand total of our industrial output amounts to over $20,600,000,000 in the year just closed. What proportion of this vast volume of our annual vitalized energy finds expression in the export trade of the United States? Barely $1,400,000,000 worth of the products of agriculture, mining, and manufactures.

While it is well to have foreign trade, we must never neglect for one moment the cultivation and maintenance of our larger and greater and more important domestic market. [Applause.]

The prosperity of all the people of our own country must be the object of our undivided solicitude. It is for this that our battle in this instance has been waged. It is for this that we temporarily part company upon the wisdom of this measure.

Keep the tariff on in the interest not of capital alone, but of labor. I plead for the interest of the laboring man. His capital is the muscle of his strong right arm. He must use his capital on the instant or never use it at all. The merchant who has no customer for his wares can store them upon his shelves. The manufacturer may carry his products for a month or for a year, but the laborer can not store his wares. He must sell his time upon the instant or never sell it at all. All things else in nature, except time, are yielding to the genius of man. Death can no longer silence the voice, for the living tones may be preserved in the phonograph.

The old saying that "the mill will never grind with the water that has passed" must be dropped from the list of aphorisms, for the wonderful progress of electrical science has enabled us to stand by the side of the cataract, gather the power of the falling water, store that power, send it across the ocean, and a year later turn a wheel with the force thus appropriated and preserved. But neither God nor man can stay the course of time. Time stands by the dial of the universe, and as the minutes are ticked off he gives them to those who grasp them; but left unclaimed they pass unused, unfruitful, unyielding into the night of the unreturning past. Because labor is thus helpless it is the first to feel the effect of a reduction of values and the last to get the benefit of an inflation. Lower tariffs will flood this market with imported goods, and down will go the price of labor as falls the mercury on a winter morning.

Mr. Chairman, I protest against a revision of the tariff. I protest against the demoralization of our present business prosperity. I protest against the return to a period of certain depression. Prosperity is now upon every hand. Labor is happy with his task to perform; capital is unrestrained in its quest for new ventures.

Gentlemen upon this side the chamber, you would unite us; we would gladly join you. But I ask you to go to the sacred archives of the Republican party, take out the banner of protection so often carried to success on fields of political controversy, wave it proudly above your heads as the signal to fall in; lead on; lead on; and we will follow you. [Applause.]

The leaders of the ancients used to be so solicitous about their followers that they carried urns upon their shoulders burning with perpetual fire. By day the smoke could be seen and they knew where the leaders were. By night they could see the flame and were kept in the true course. Gentlemen upon this side; leaders, if you please; light up the urn of political wisdom. Illuminate the principles of Hamilton, of Lincoln, and McKinley, and we upon this side will follow you. Lead on! Your destiny shall be our destiny, and united we go to certain victory. [Prolonged and long-continued applause.]

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, for the first time since I became a member of this body I find myself opposed to a large number of Republican Representatives, and to some of the leading members of that party, on a measure of general public concern. Under these circumstances it is proper that I should give to the House the grounds of that opposition.

I know that our situation in relation to Cuba is difficult and perplexing, and I am ready to admit, and admit freely, that as to the measures by which that situation should be met men may differ widely and differ honestly and honorably.

It is well to review briefly the history of this measure as it has developed and is now presented. All of us know the literary campaign which has been made with great vigor and persistence from the beginning of this session. In the month of December and January there was scarcely a day when members did not find in their mail pamphlets and other forms of printed matter setting forth the conditions of distress which it was claimed existed in Cuba, contending that we were under obligations of duty and honor and also of self-interest to do something to relieve these conditions, and pointing out a method by which those obligations could and should be discharged.

There was such a uniformity in the method proposed, namely, by an agreement between our Government and that of Cuba about to be organized and put into operation, of which the principal factor was a reduction in duties on the products of Cuba, of which sugar and tobacco and cigars are the principal ones, coming into the United States and a corresponding reduction by Cuba on our products going there, as to arouse a suspicion in some that there was something more beside humanity and philanthropy and patriotism behind this literary propaganda, and that perhaps it was being carried on by certain selfish and sordid interests; and we did not have far to go to guess which was the chief and foremost of such interests.

This constant and widespread agitation was arousing in the country a sentiment that something must be done for Cuba. The cry was, Do something for Cuba. And there appeared here in Washington representatives of those interests which might be affected by the proposed legislation, some advocating it, others opposing any action.

Recognizing this growing sentiment, and also prompted by certain suggestions contained in the message of the President, and the report of the Secretary of War, the great committee of the House—the Committee on Ways and Means—very properly, as I think, determined to hear from the various conflicting interests, and to gather, as far as possible, from all available and reliable sources the existing facts, so that they might intelligently deal with the questions presented. The result of those hearings is before us in a printed volume of more than 700 pages, which I hope by this time is more or less familiar to the members of the House.

From the facts developed by that investigation these questions arise: First, are the conditions in Cuba such that any concession from us, or agreement between us and them, if gentlemen prefer to put it that way, is needed; second, if such concession or agreement is needed, shall it be made, and third, how shall it be made?

Those claiming that such concession or agreement should be made do so on the ground, first, that it is absolutely necessary; that unless it is made universal bankruptcy and anarchy will before long prevail in Cuba; second, that we are bound in honor and good faith to make it by reason of the relations between us and Cuba which have grown out of the war, and particularly the Platt amendment, and third, that it should be done because of the advantages which will come to the United States by reason of the increased trade and consequent commercial benefit which will result.

I shall not allude to the tobacco industry in Cuba. It seems to be conceded on all hands that this is in a flourishing and prosperous condition and likely to remain so. I shall speak only of the sugar situation, for I look upon this as a sugar question only.

For my part I am not at all satisfied that such an agreement or concession is necessary for the welfare of Cuba. The evidence shows that there is no distress now in Cuba. Everybody is employed, and at higher wages than are paid in the same industry in Louisiana. Note what Colonel Bliss says:

I have not spoken of distress except to deny that any existed, so far as I know. It is a long time since I have seen anyone begging on the streets or anyone who wanted work who was not at work at good wages.

We were told that relief must come by the 1st of February, and certainly by the end of that month, or else universal ruin and bankruptcy would prevail and anarchy would reign; and yet the 1st of April has come and gone and still Cuba is prosperous and her industries are going on; no distress, no bankruptcy, no ruin,

And all of us have read from the correspondent of the Washington Star, an ardent advocate of concession or agreement, that—

Things have been exaggerated, that nobody is starving in Cuba to-day or need starve, nor need anybody starve next year.

The chief distress from which they seem to be suffering is the exaction by the Spanish usurers of from 10 to 25 per cent interest on the money they borrow upon which to do business, and if any benefit should go to anybody save the sugar trust from this measure it would in all probability be principally to these Spanish shysters. The whole argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] was based on the assumption that it costs 2 cents a pound to produce sugar in Cuba, and yet the most reliable testimony, as I think—that of Mr. Saylor—was to the effect that it could be produced at a cost of a cent and a half per pound. This gentleman investigated the conditions there in 1898-9, and he is a man in every way qualified to speak, and his conclusion was that it could be produced at that cost. He was asked if the increased cost of labor since then would not make it more now, and he said he thought not; that while their labor had advanced in wages the improved conditions in the country and their better organization and machinery would make up for that, and that he thought one would about offset the other. The gentleman from New York stated that sugar was to-day worth about 1.81 in Cuba and had been for some time. If that is true, and sugar can be produced there for a cent and a half, the Cuban would now make a profit of 31 cents a hundred pounds—a pretty fair profit. I have no doubt any newly organized beet factory one or two years old would be satisfied with that profit.

Nor am I satisfied that we are bound by any moral obligation growing out of the war or the Platt amendment to make this agreement. We have given to Cuba that for which her people made a heroic struggle and endured untold misery and hardship—liberty and freedom from the Spanish yoke. For this we have spent hundreds of millions and have given thousands of noble lives. We have relieved her of millions of dollars annually in taxes to Spain and from a bonded indebtedness of hundreds of millions which Spain would have put upon her. We have restored order where chaos reigned. We have established government and administered it with an honesty and efficiency which will serve as an example and model and guide to the new republic. We found her the home of disease and death. We will leave her the abiding place of health and pleasure and beauty.

But they say we have deprived her of her markets, destroyed her industries, and, by the Platt amendment, tied her hands so that she can not negotiate and establish favorable commercial agreements. We have done no such thing. We have always been Cuba's best market—practically her only market for sugar—and we are to-day her best market, and her only sugar market. There is scarcely to be found a parallel for her industrial, especially her agricultural, revival since the war. Let anyone examine her sugar production—in 1897 something more than 200,000 tons, this year 850,000 tons. Peace and plenty are on every hand. Let anyone examine the Platt amendment. The benefit is theirs, the burden is ours. There is no control whatever over her commercial treaties and agreements. There is no control over her at all, save that she shall not endanger her independence or contract debts she can not discharge.

It is also claimed that we have promised to establish and maintain a stable government, and that without commercial prosperity this can not be done, and that therefore we must establish and maintain commercial prosperity. We undertook to pacify the island and pledged ourselves when that was completed to leave Cuba and its government to the people of Cuba. By the Platt amendment we reserved the right to intervene to preserve her independence. Nowhere have we agreed to guarantee commercial prosperity or a stable government. We do not make any such guaranty to any State in the Union, and ought not to. Surely we could make none such to a foreign country.

It is also claimed that the relationship of guardian and ward has existed between us, and from that has sprung this moral obligation. As guardians we were bound to a faithful, honest, and diligent administration of the estate. This we have given. As I have shown, we found that estate heavily encumbered and in a condition of utter wreck. We have put it in order and cleared off every incumbrance and are ready to turn it over to the ward a magnificent inheritance. With this we are ready to send him on his way rejoicing.

It would seem, then, that we have in the fullest measure discharged every obligation to Cuba, and that when next month we turn the island over to her people we will exhibit to the world an example of faithfulness and generosity which finds no parallel in recorded history.

But be all this as it may, I for one am willing, if there is any question about it, to do more. Let us admit, for the sake of the argument, that we are in honor bound to relieve her from present embarrassments, if any such exist, and let us admit, for the sake of the argument, that such embarrassments do exist. Let us also admit that we can and will secure advantages in trade which will be of value to the United States. I am not willing to extend that relief and secure these advantages in such a way as to injure or destroy one of our own industries, or to violate the promises we have made to our own people. And this brings me to the proposition now under consideration.

The Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee after the hearings asked for a conference of Republican members of the House and sought advice upon a measure which they had not all agreed upon, but which was the proposition commending itself under all the circumstances to more of the members of the committee than any other proposition. In the fewest words it was this, that we should enter into an agreement with Cuba by which we should grant to Cuba a reduction of 20 per cent in our tariff rates on articles coming from Cuba in consideration of equal concessions to us on articles going from the United States to Cuba, and also upon the condition that they should enact our immigration and exclusion laws. After repeated conferences and long discussion this proposition was found to be unsatisfactory to a majority of the Republicans, and so it has been modified and has taken the shape in which it is now presented. The modification is that the agreement and its operation shall extend only to the 1st of December, 1903.

I was opposed to the original proposition. I am opposed to the modified proposition, and I think I shall be able to show before I conclude that it is worse than the original one.

Let us first consider the original proposition. I was opposed to the proposition. First, because I do not believe it would accomplish the object sought to be accomplished.

If the evidence before the committee on behalf of those favoring tariff reduction is worth anything the amount of reduction proposed is entirely insufficient, and if I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN] correctly on yesterday that was the burden of his argument. With one accord the witnesses testified that nothing less than 50 per cent would do at all, and some of them thought that free sugar alone would be satisfactory. In this view, as to the 50 per cent, General Wood, in his letters and interviews, has concurred, and Mr. Palma, the president-elect of Cuba, in an interview, which has probably been sent to every member of this House, used these words:

It is impossible to improve the bad condition of our principal staple—sugar—by reducing the American duty only one-third. In that way the problem will not be solved at all. The clamor for further reduction will continue. * * * Therefore it is absolutely necessary that the concessions should reach 50 per cent of the actual duties, so as to give the producer a reasonable gain.

Now, if this be true, not only will this reduction fail to relieve Cuba, but it will only serve to continue the agitation and will thus, as I shall show further on, discourage and retard, if it does not entirely arrest, the further development of an important American industry.

But a reduction of duties, whether great or small, will fail of its object, because it will not inure to the benefit of the Cuban planter, but will in all reasonable probability be absorbed in whole or in part by the American sugar refiners, or what is commonly known as the "sugar trust."

Whenever any legislation involving the sugar schedule of our tariff laws is proposed, at once the forbidding and overshadowing form of this colossal combination appears. And it is no mere specter or creature of the imagination conjured up by those who know its power and fear its evil influence, but is a real, substantial, and potential presence. And it must be considered and reckoned with. That the American refiners are practically one body crops out everywhere in the testimony. I call attention to the testimony of Mr. Armstrong, a sugar broker of New York, and who is therefore certainly acquainted with the facts as to this. On page 78 of the hearings he testifies as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not a fact that during the past three years the margin between the raw sugar and refined sugar has been much smaller than during the two or three years preceding? For instance, before 1897 was it not a cent and a quarter, and since 1897 has it not been reduced to fifty-one one-hundredths, say last summer?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is owing to conditions, which I will have to explain to you. Before 1897 there were times when it was 1½, and there were times when it was even more, but probably it averaged about a cent. Something over a year or two years ago there were one or two independent refineries built, and war broke out between the sugar trust and the independent refineries and the trust broke down rates to a very low point for the sake of knocking out those one or two refineries, and when that was accomplished prices advanced again, and when you take the average of all that time you get the fifty-one one-hundredths.

The CHAIRMAN. They have knocked out the independent factories in the last two or three years?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes, sir; they bought them out.

The CHAIRMAN. They bought them all out except Arbuckle?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. There is the National Refining Company, which suffered with the others. I believe now they operate together.

The CHAIRMAN. They all operate together now, so the only regulator of the refined sugar is the beet sugar interests?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes, sir.

But if anyone still doubts this, I also invite his attention to the statement of Mr. Havemeyer before the Industrial Commission in the testimony before the committee.

Again, I call the attention of members to a table on page 578 of the hearings. By this table it is shown that in the year 1901 Cuba sold in the American market 500,409 tons of sugar and in the markets of all other countries but 73 tons. Besides, the testimony shows that by reason of export bounties and the cartels which prevail in the sugar-producing countries of Europe the European sugar producer is able to sell his surplus; that is, what he has left after supplying his own country—and he has his own market preserved to him by absolutely prohibitive duties—below the cost of production, and therefore the Cuban has nowhere to go with his sugar except to America.

Again, I call attention to the testimony of Mr. Atkins at the bottom of page 1 and the top of page 2 of the hearings. He there states that there is in the world to-day more than 1,500,000 tons of sugar over and above the world's consumption. In other words, a supply in excess of the demand of more than 1,500,000 tons.

Now, what do these facts prove? The Cuban has an article to sell of which the world's supply is largely, enormously in excess of the demand. He has but one market—the American market—in which to sell that article. Suppose in that one market there were a dozen buyers, is it necessary to make any argument to show that, within wide limits, those buyers would be able to dictate prices. Could not those buyers say to the Cubans, we will pay so much for your sugar, and if you will not take that, why we can and will go to Germany or France and buy what we need? It surely can need no argument to show that this would be the situation.

But when we go a step further and suppose that in that one market there is practically one buyer, and that one buyer the sugar trust, will members ask themselves the question what the result would be then? Will not this buyer be able to absorb this reduction in duty, and if he can absorb it will he do it? Is this great combination actuated by considerations of benevolence, or morality, or humanity, or philanthropy? If there is any member who is so—I was about to say foolish, but I will say credulous and charitable as to believe that, I again invite his attention to the statement of the head of that combination before the Industrial Commission. And if it is not actuated by these considerations, what consideration is left? There can be but one—its own profit and gain. And how will it reap that profit except by taking to itself the whole or a part of this reduction?

But aside from these general considerations we have the highest authority in this House—none other than the Ways and Means Committee—for stating that the sugar trust will absorb and appropriate to its own profit the reduction in duties. And I have no doubt if the tables were turned and these gentlemen stood with me on this proposition they would be making the same argument I am making. Here is a report made from that committee, a unanimous report of the majority, a Republican majority, composed largely, almost entirely, of the same members who compose it now. This report was made on the 26th of May, 1900, by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], but he is no more to be held responsible for it than are the other members for whom he spoke. It was made upon a resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], providing for the admission free of duty of sugar from Porto Rico and Cuba. I read from that report:

Following that abortive effort comes this resolution, and if this resolution should pass it would place upon the free list the molasses and sugar hereafter to be imported into the United States from Cuba and Porto Rico. The present product of Porto Rico amounts to something like 60,000 tons for this year, and would not be a very considerable sum of money, but when there is included in this proposed addition to the free list of the country the product of Cuba the item becomes an enormous one.

Following is a table of the imports of molasses and sugar dutiable from those two places, and the entire importations from all countries classified in proper order:

Imports of molasses and sugar, dutiable, year ended June 30, 1899.

Articles.	Total, United States.		Cuba and Porto Rico.
	Quantities.	Value.	Quantities.	Value.
Molasses..... gallons..	5,806,256	$789,084	5,077,703	$390,399
Sugar, not above No 16 Dutch standard:
Beet..... pounds..	723,336,352	15,269,307
Cane..... do.....	2,731,868,574	60,714,089	770,346,000	18,907,773
Sugar, above No. 16 Dutch standard..... pounds..	62,745,703	1,692,951	5,427	159
Total..... do.....	3,517,950,689	77,676,437	770,351,427	18,907,932

Cuba and Porto Rico furnished 24.5 per cent of the total importations of cane sugar imported in quantity, and 31.1 per cent in value.

The average rate of duty on cane sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard was equivalent to 74.31 per cent ad valorem, and the total amount of duties collected on such sugar imported from Cuba and Porto Rico in the year ended June 30, 1899, was $14,010,366.11. The average rate of duty on sugar above No. 16 Dutch standard was equivalent to 75.7 per cent ad valorem, and the total amount of duty on such sugar imported from Cuba and Porto Rico in that year was $120.36. $14,010,366.11 ÷ $120.36 = $116,486.47, the value of Mr. Richardson's proposed yearly gift to the sugar trust, calculated on the importations of 1899, which, of course, will steadily increase from year to year.

By this it will be seen that "Cuba and Porto Rico furnished 24.5 per cent of the total importations of cane sugar imported, and 31.1 per cent in value," and that to now place these commodities upon the free list of the country would, if the same amount of sugar and molasses should be imported during the current year beginning July 1, 1900, and running forward, give to the importers of sugar and molasses something like $14,000,000. This would be a free gift from the people of the country, and measures the value of the proposed yearly gift to the sugar trust, calculated on the importations of 1899, which, of course, will steadily increase from year to year.

There is probably no commercial organization or trust with a more thoroughly well-organized and self-defending capacity than is the American Sugar Refining Company, and it must be borne in mind that there is no sugar refined in Cuba, or, if any, only the merest trace or small quantity, and that all cane sugar unrefined that comes from that country, or substantially all of it, is received and refined by the American Sugar Refining Company or, perhaps, one of the kindred organizations, which were stated by the great manager of that company to be "under the same umbrella" with the sugar trust.

In other words, if sugar were allowed to come in free from Cuba, the sugar trust would absorb the whole reduction. Now, if with free sugar from Cuba the sugar trust could take to itself the whole benefit, is it possible to escape the conclusion that they could absorb a 20 per cent reduction?

But there is other evidence of absorption by this combination of at least a part of the benefits which were intended for others.

Here is a table on page 578 of the hearings, prepared by the statistician of the Agricultural Department, which gives the average wholesale prices per pound during the year ending June 30, 1901, the last fiscal year, of sugar free on board at the port of shipment in Germany, Porto Rico, Cuba, and the Hawaiian Islands. These prices are as follows:

Sugar not above No. 16 Dutch standard (raw sugar).

	Cents.
From Germany (beet sugar).....	2.2
From Porto Rico (cane sugar).....	3.4
From Cuba (cane sugar).....	2.4
From Hawaii (cane sugar).....	3.9

I have also here a statement from the Treasury Department showing that the raw sugar imported from Germany during that year was practically all 88° rendement, or 94½° by the polariscope. I have also a statement from the same source showing all the sugar imported from Porto Rico during that year, the different degrees, and the number of pounds of each degree, and the prices. A calculation shows that the average was 92½°, and the average price, as above, 3.4 cents per pound. I have not been able to get a similar statement as to Cuba, but I have been able to get statements which go to show that Cuban sugar has a higher average, a little above 95°. The speech of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LONG] before the Republican conference shows that it averaged in the month of January, 1902, more than 2½° higher than Porto Rican sugar.

I have also a statement from the same source that the average polariscopic test of the sugar imported from Hawaii to San Francisco was 96.7°. This is perhaps too high a general average for Hawaiian sugar, although I am informed that Hawaiian sugar is of very high grade. It is safe to say that it is 96° and a little over. I have also a statement from the same source of the freight rates per hundred pounds, as follows:

	Cents.
From Hamburg to New York.....	8
From Porto Rico to New York.....	12
From Cuba to New York.....	8
From Hawaii to San Francisco.....	15

The hearings show that cane sugar is more valuable to the refiner than beet sugar, and I have made inquiry of the most reliable expert and scientific source in the Government departments as to the difference in that value, so that I may give it fairly and conservatively in the figures I am about to make. I learn there that cane sugar is worth about 10 cents per hundred pounds more to the refiner than beet sugar, degree for degree.

The hearings show conclusively, and nobody here can or will deny it, that the German or Hamburg price fixes the price the world over and that all comparisons should be made on that basis.

Sugar from Germany had to pay here a countervailing duty to offset the export bounties. Sugars from Porto Rico, Cuba, and the Hawaiian Islands had to pay no countervailing duty. Sugar from Hawaii paid no duty. Sugar from Porto Rico paid in 1901 15 per cent of the Dingley rate. Sugar from Germany and Cuba paid the full Dingley rate.

Now, with these facts before us, let us see what was being done in the year 1901 by the American buyer—the sugar trust—as to sugar coming from these countries. If the trust was paying all it ought to have paid to the sugar producers of Porto Rico, Hawaii, and Cuba to put them on a parity with the Hamburg prices, the equations for the different countries ought to have been as follows:

For Porto Rico.—Price at San Juan + freight to New York + duty + greater value to refiner = price at Hamburg + freight to New York + countervailing duty + duty.

For Hawaii.—Price at Honolulu + freight to San Francisco = price at Hamburg + freight to New York + countervailing duty + duty + greater value to refiner.

For Cuba.—Price at Habana + freight to New York + duty = price at Hamburg + freight to New York + countervailing duty + duty + greater value to refiner.

Putting in the figures per hundred pounds, we have the following:

For Porto Rico.—$3.40 + $0.12 + $0.23 + $0.05; total, $3.80 = $2.20 + $0.08 + $0.27 + $1.63; total, $4.18.

For Hawaii.—$3.90 + $0.15; total, $4.05 = $2.20 + $0.08 + $0.27 + $1.63 + $0.25; total, $4.43.

For Cuba.—$2.40 + $0.08 + $1.65; total, $4.13 = $2.20 + $0.08 + $0.27 + $1.63 + $0.15; total, $4.33.

Thus we see that in no case do the two sides of the equation balance as they ought to do when we put in the figures. The difference for Porto Rico is 38 cents per 100 pounds, for Hawaii is 38 cents per 100 pounds, and for Cuba is 20 cents per 100 pounds. In other words, we see that the American buyer, the sugar trust, was paying to the Porto Rican 38 cents per 100 pounds less than he ought to have paid on all of the sugars brought from that island to New York during the fiscal year 1901, to the Hawaiian 38 cents less per 100 pounds on all the sugar brought from those islands to San Francisco during the fiscal year 1901, and to the Cuban 20 cents less per 100 pounds on all the sugar brought from that island to New York during the fiscal year 1901.

Again I call the attention of members to the statement of Mr. Leavitt, on page 250. The German has to pay a countervailing duty to get his sugar in; the Cuban has to pay no countervailing duty. The Cuban sugar should, therefore, have a margin of 27 cents per hundred pounds over German sugar delivered in New York. That statement shows that on that day, January 21, 1902, somebody was taking that margin which ought to have gone to the Cubans and 4 cents besides.

Now, will some member guess who was taking to himself these amounts which ought to have gone to the Porto Rican, the Hawaiian, and the Cuban? Can there be but one answer? If some member will make the calculation he will see that it runs into the millions of dollars.

Thus it will be seen that I have demonstrated, with the exactness of a theorem in Euclid, as far as such a thing is capable of demonstration, that the sugar trust could absorb or take to itself this reduction, and that it has in other cases been doing that very thing, in part at least. I think it entirely probable that the figures do not make it as bad as it actually has been.

But there are other circumstances which it might be well to consider. Why are the representatives of the sugar trust here, and why have they been here from the beginning of the session, if the Cuban is to get the whole benefit of this reduction? In that event, what interest have they in it? And why should they be here? That they are here urging this reduction we are all satisfied. We have the highest authority for believing so, none other than the most distinguished and prominent member of this House. Here is his letter to one of his constituents. He says:

Those contending for Cuba want a reduction of 50 per cent or a clean sweep of duties between us and that country. Contending for this doctrine is, first, the American sugar trust, which is here in the person of its ablest managers.

Again, here is a statement from the last report of the sugar trust, showing that they had on hand on the 31st of December, 1901—last December—more than $10,000,000 worth of raw sugar less than they had on hand the 31st of December, 1900. Why should they thus run down their stock of raw sugar unless it was that they were waiting for this reduction to go into operation? And why should they wait for this reduction unless they expected to profit by it? Surely the trust knows its business. The New York Journal of Commerce, a paper that is strongly advocating reduction, has this to say about it:

The item of sugar, raw, unmanufactured, etc., is given at $12,248,640, a decrease of $10,240,150. From this it would seem that the company has been carrying a smaller amount of raw sugar than usual at this season, a move that finds explanation in the anticipated reduction in duties on Cuban sugar by Congress.

How innocently and strangely they deny their own doctrine, if it is the relief of the Cuban only that they are concerned about.

Let members scan the witnesses who appeared for reduction. Almost without exception the Americans amongst them have some connection, more or less close, with the sugar trust, or some of its members or officers. Is this mere chance? Let any member answer that to himself sincerely and frankly. Ah, gentlemen, the great-hearted, generous American people want to help Cuba, not this combination.

And yet from the foregoing considerations it would seem to be impossible to escape the conclusion that this combination will be the principal beneficiary of reduction. And they know it, whether others do or not.

Now, if this be true, I am ready to state a second ground on which I am opposed to this reduction, and it is a good Republican ground. It is because it will injure and prevent the further development of an American industry—an industry just beginning to show that growth and development which we all hoped and predicted for it in 1897 when we passed the Dingley tariff law.

I have here a statement from the Agricultural Department showing that up to the year 1897 there had been established and put in operation only 6 beet-sugar factories. Since then the number has increased to 42, and 8 are in process of construction, making 50 in all. The product has increased from about 40,000 tons to 185,000 tons the year just closed, and if a sufficient quantity of beets could have been obtained and the factories could have been operated to their full capacity that product would have been very much greater.

Besides, there were during the last year 83 projects for the establishment of beet-sugar factories in various stages of organization and capitalization.

I will put in here a statement, compiled principally from the hearings, pages 571 to 574, giving the figures in reference to this industry.

Beet-sugar factories established and put in operation up to the year 1897, 6. These, together with those established since, make a total of 42.

As to these factories we have the following statement:

Invested capital in factories, equipment, and grounds.....	$30,000,000
Annual amount of beets purchased..... tons.....	1,875,000
Annual cash paid for beets purchased.....	$7,500,000
Annual coal consumed..... tons.....	202,500
Annual cash paid for coal.....	$787,500
Annual lime rock purchased..... tons.....	150,000
Annual cash paid for lime rock.....	$300,000
Annual operating capital employed (per annum).....	$5,000,000

Beet-sugar factories in process of construction, 8. Beet-sugar projects in various stages of organization and capitalization, 83.

REQUIREMENTS.

These 83 factories would require:

Investment.....	$49,000,000
Working capital.....	9,000,000
Beets purchased from farmers.....	14,700,000

REQUIREMENTS FOR HOME CONSUMPTION.

It would require 500 factories having a daily capacity of 500 tons of beets to produce by the time they could be put in operation all the sugar we would consume outside of what we get from the State of Louisiana, the Hawaiian Islands, and Porto Rico.

REQUIREMENTS OF THESE FACTORIES.

Invested capital.....	$250,000,000
Annual amount of beets..... tons.....	18,750,000
Annual cash paid farmers for beets.....	$75,000,000
Annual coal consumed..... tons.....	2,625,000
Annual cash paid for coal.....	$7,875,000
Annual lime rock purchased..... tons.....	1,500,000
Annual cash paid for lime rock.....	$3,000,000
Annual operating capital employed.....	$45,000,000

In addition to this vast sums for coke, mill supplies, labor, transportation, etc.

From all this it can be seen that if the beet-sugar industry should continue to grow and develop as it has done in the past three or four years, since the passage of the Dingley bill, it would in a very few years supply, along with the sugar from Louisiana, Porto Rico, and the Hawaiian Islands, all American territory, the entire demand of the American people.

Now, the product of the American beet-sugar factory is white granulated sugar—that is, sugar of a grade equal to the refined sugar of the trust. It is, therefore, a competitor and rival of the trust, whose business it is to refine raw sugar, and is its only competitor and rival in this country.

If this industry should grow sufficiently to supply the American demand, and the Louisianans, and Porto Ricans, and Hawaiians should refine their own sugar, as they would do but for the overshadowing power of the trust, the sugar trust would have to go out of business. The sugar trust has just begun to realize that the beet-sugar industry, if allowed to continue to progress as it has done in the past two or three years, will put an end to its career of greed and extortion, and is therefore anxious to do, or to see done, anything that will injure it.

The result is that the trust is engaged in an unceasing and relentless warfare against this industry. We can well understand what that warfare means at the present stage of development in the beet-sugar industry when we recollect the almost complete monopoly which the trust has of the American market and the enormous profit it is and has been making. What these profits are anyone can calculate who will remember that we consume about 2,400,000 tons each year and that the trust refines it all with the exception of about 230,000 tons and makes a profit of about one-half a cent a pound. He will find that those profits amount each year to nearly as many million dollars as it would cost to build new the entire plant of the trust. It is these profits which has enabled the trust to water the stock of plants which could all probably be reproduced for $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 and pay each year enormous dividends thereon.

It is these profits which have enabled the sugar trust to go into the territory where the beet-sugar producer finds his market and sell sugar for 3½ cents per pound—that is, at a price which would cause a loss to the trust and also to the beet-sugar man—while at the same time it was selling in other parts of the country for 5½ cents per pound.

It is the unceasing and relentless warfare of the trust that the beet-sugar producer fears and ought to fear. It is in this that his chief danger lies. If, therefore, a reduction in duties on sugar coming from Cuba would add to the already enormous profits of the trust, as I have shown it would, we would by granting that reduction be adding strength to the arm, and placing an additional weapon in the hand, of the trust with which to strike and cripple and crush the beet-sugar factory. Let gentlemen here make a calculation. If the importations from Cuba should be 800,000 tons of 2,000 pounds each, and the evidence seems to indicate that it might reach 850,000, and if the trust should take to itself only one-half of the reduction, we would by this legislation be making them an annual present of $2,696,000.

From what I have said it is impossible to escape the conclusion that the sugar trust can, if it will, absorb the whole of a 20 per cent reduction made to Cuba, and that it will, as it has done in the cases I have stated before, absorb a part of it at least. If it should take to itself one-half of it, we will be making an annual present to that combination of more than two and a half millions. When we take this out, and also that part which might go to absentee Spanish landlords, and to the Spanish usurer, and to those Americans, most of whom are more or less intimately associated with the sugar trust or its officers, and who, instead of investing their money at home in America, are now exploiting Cuba for their own selfish purposes and crying out to the American people in the name of God and humanity, what will be left for the Cuban planter and laborer proper?

Now, if this legislation shall have the effect to stimulate Cuban production by these American commercial soldiers of fortune, these American syndicates which have gone to Cuba to invest their money instead of investing it at home, or if it shall put additional millions into the already bulging pockets of that commercial buccaneer, Mr. Havemeyer, and his trust, or if it shall have both of these effects, what must be the inevitable result to our domestic sugar industry, especially the beet-sugar industry? There can be but one answer.

Will not the power of the trust to go into the territory of the beet-sugar people, and put prices down to a ruinous figure, while they are entirely maintained elsewhere, which they have done with full duty-paid sugar from Cuba, be augmented by many millions? And if this is true, will not those beet-sugar factories already established, in the face of such tremendous difficulties, have those difficulties greatly increased? And will not the chances of profits to them be greatly diminished? Indeed, would not their profits be put practically at the mercy of the sugar trust? It seems to me there can be but one answer to these questions.

But there is a still more important consideration. What will be the effect on the further development of the beet-sugar industry now so promising? Would another company be organized or another factory built? With this reduction already granted, and agitation for still further reduction, would any prudent man put his money into such an enterprise? Would he not be little less than a madman to do so? Would not any man thinking of so investing his money say to himself, "This is but the beginning; I think I will put my money into something else." It seems to me there can be but one answer to these questions. The further development of the industry would be at an end.

Now, if these things be true, I am opposed, in the third place, to this legislation, because it is a clear violation of Republican platforms and principles and of a specific Republican pledge. I do not believe we as Republicans can, in good faith, in honor, support this legislation. Here is an industry—an infant industry, if we have one—not yet upon its feet, just struggling to its knees, just beginning to show signs of a healthy and vigorous growth, just at the period of its development when it needs all the protection and encouragement we have given it, not only as other industries have needed it, but also because of its life-and-death struggle with this great combination—an absolutely domestic industry from the planting of the seed to the marketing of the product—an industry in which farmers as well as manufacturers are interested, and which will be a great boon to the farmers. Gentlemen on this floor who favor this measure say this is no time for tampering with tariff schedules; that at this time of the most phenomenal and unexampled commercial and industrial prosperity that this or any other nation has ever known we can not afford to do that which may even by any possibility tend to weaken or destroy confidence; that even though some of our industries, like steel and glass and many others, have reached a strong and robust manhood, have come to that point when they defy competition with all the world, we must not touch their tariff schedules at this time.

With these gentlemen I agree, and with them I expect to vote.

But how can they reconcile their position with this legislation? How can they single out this little, weak, struggling, not half, not a quarter developed, just beginning to develop industry at which to strike a blow. I can not believe we can in honor take this step. Here is the platform on which we came back into power. Here are the pledges we gave to the people. I read from the tariff plank of our platform:

The ruling and uncompromising principle is the protection—

But this is not all; not only the protection of that part of an industry already existing. Ah, gentlemen, not that alone, but this—and development of American labor and industry.

Mark the word "development." And this:

We condemn the present Administration (the Democratic Administration) for not keeping faith with the sugar producers of this country. The Republican party favors such protection as will lead to the production on American soil of all the sugar which the American people use, and for which they pay other countries more than $100,000,000 annually.

Must we not in good faith, in common honesty, in honor, keep these pledges? Will we be keeping these pledges if we now strike at this industry—at this time, of all times? Look at the industry—beginning with 6 factories in 1897, and now 50 factories already built or in process of construction; more than 80 more in sight; a development just beginning to give evidence of a successful and enduring and complete establishment. Leaving out the question of those already established, should we arrest this development? Ah, gentlemen, there can be but one answer. How well I remember the great debate on the Dingley bill in the spring of 1897. That was my first session. Let me read from some of the great men:

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MORRIS. Well, I would prefer not, but I yield to him.

Mr. THAYER. I notice that the gentleman repeats with a good deal of pride the platforms of the party by which he was nominated and elected. I want to ask him if he is now repudiating the doctrine and policy of the great, peerless leader of the Republican party when he recommended to Congress and proposed a policy toward Cuba in these words:

In the case of Cuba, however, there are weighty reasons of morality and of national interest why the policy should be held to have a peculiar application, and I most earnestly ask your attention to the wisdom, indeed, to the vital need, of providing for a substantial reduction in the tariff duties on Cuban imports into the United States. Cuba has in her constitution affirmed what we desired, that she should stand in international matters in closer and more friendly relations with us than with any other power; and we are bound by every consideration of honor and expediency to pass commercial measures in the interest of her material well-being.

Mr. MORRIS. I will come to that, my dear friend, before I get through.

I was about to read what the great debaters in 1897, members of the Ways and Means Committee then and members now, said. I read:

[Mr. PAYNE, July 19, 1897; RECORD, p. 2749, first session Fifty-fifth Congress.]

What shall be done with the sugar trust? Well, I will tell you what, in my opinion, is the best way of dealing with it. Establish a beet-sugar factory in every Congressional district in the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] Give competition, and lots of it, everywhere. Put the farmers over against the trust by passing this bill, and reduce the price of sugar so that German raw sugar can not be brought in to be refined here. Gentlemen on the other side, come over and help us, while we help the farmers out. [Laughter and applause.] You grangers over there, come and help us. You Populists that go up and down the streets day after day proclaiming your devotion to the interests of the farmers, help us out now when we are trying to help the farmers in this industry that we can establish so successfully. In this way you will do something toward demolishing the trust. You will accomplish more in this way than by mere invective—by running windmills and all that. [Laughter and applause.]

Why should we not produce all of our sugar in this country? Why, it costs us, Mr. Speaker, about one hundred millions. We were looking around for proper subjects for taxation. We knew that sugar would produce an enormous revenue; and besides all that, we knew that an adequate protective tariff would build up the industry in this country, and as it was gradually built up the revenue from that source will be reduced; by and by the revenue will come in more largely from other sources, and when this industry is fully established and revenue from sugar ceases, the reduction will keep pace with the increase. The thing will regulate itself; we will not disturb our tariff in the next quarter of a century. And then—

[Mr. Dingley, March 22, 1897, RECORD, p. 121.]

The duty on sugar has also been increased, both for purposes of revenue and also to encourage the production of sugar in the United States, and thereby give to our farmers a new and much-needed crop. We now pay foreign countries about $84,000,000 for imported sugar, notwithstanding the abnormally low price, and this sum will soon be increased to $100,000,000. The success which has attended the growing of sugar beets and the production of beet sugar in California and Nebraska in the past five years, not to mention the progress in the production of cane sugar in Louisiana, has made the problem of producing our own sugar no longer doubtful; and now that we must have the increased revenue from sugar for the present, a favorable opportunity presents itself to give this boon to our agriculture.

[Mr. GROSVENOR, March 24, 1897, RECORD, p. 240.]

We are going to force upon Louisiana that which she dare not ask for herself. Suppliant at the hands of Congress, with people representing not the claims and the clamors of her own people, we will force upon her the beneficence she dares not hope for or ask for herself. We will give to the sugar producer of Louisiana an opportunity to enlarge his products and turn over some of the splendid lands of that beautiful State to the production of sugar, instead of corn, cotton, and other products of the soil; and so, Mr. Chairman, throughout Nebraska, through Kansas, and all of the States of the Union we propose to offer the same beneficent opportunities.

The Republican party comes and offers to the agriculturists of this country this magnificent boon. We will protect the industries of the country in all directions from further demoralization; and we ask you to turn aside hundreds of thousands of acres of the splendid lands of all of these States from the production of corn, oats, wheat, potatoes, and cotton, to be put into an already overstocked market, to the production of sugar, and give to the farmers upon the farming lands of the country a better market, with less competition than they now have.

[Mr. STEELE, speech on March 25, 1897, Appendix of RECORD, p. 123, first session Fifty-fifth Congress.]

With regard to sugar, I predict that if the tariff fixed by this bill is unchanged for a period of ten years we will at the end of that time be producing not only enough for our home consumption, but as much as we care to export, and at very little additional cost to the consumer. The farmers in the 20 States where the sugar beet can successfully be raised will reap a double benefit from the development of the sugar industry—first, because the sugar beet is a more profitable crop than wheat or corn, and, second, because the land devoted to raising beets will no longer be producing wheat and corn, and the lessened production will increase the price of these products.

This is what these gentlemen said then, and yet five years have not yet gone by, and they propose to begin to make charges. And they propose to begin on the very industry they promised to foster and protect, when relying on their promises and professions it has just got fairly started.

Gentlemen may answer by saying they do not believe these effects will follow. Can you afford, in the light of what I have said, to even take a chance of such effects?

Gentlemen may say this is reciprocity, and to that the Republican party is also pledged.

But this is not Republican reciprocity. Here is the Republican platform:

We favor the associated policy of reciprocity, so directed as to open our markets on favorable terms for what we do not ourselves produce, in return for free foreign markets.

This is not McKinley reciprocity. Here is what he said:

By sensible trade arrangements which will not interrupt our home production we shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus.

This is not Roosevelt reciprocity—may his Administration be crowned with success. Here is what he said, and I call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts who interrupted me a moment ago to it:

And that reciprocity be sought for so far as it can safely be done without injury to our home industries.

Ah, gentlemen, this is not the kind of reciprocity for which Blaine and McKinley and the Republican party have stood.

The measure as modified is worse than the original one. It will satisfy nobody. It will not satisfy the Cubans, if those who have assumed to appear in their behalf before the Ways and Means Committee are to be believed. They have everywhere in the hearings contended that nothing less than 50 per cent would be sufficient. Already Mr. Palma, the President-elect of the Cuban Republic, has repudiated it. You have all seen his interview; I have it here. General Wood says it is entirely inadequate. Does anybody suppose it will satisfy the sugar trust? Instead of making them an annual present of millions for an indefinite period, as was at first proposed, it only makes that present for one year.

The distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LONG], in a speech before the Republican conference, to which I allude because it was published in full in the Washington Post of the next morning, based his argument in favor of concessions to Cuba on the ground that reciprocity with that island would be of great and lasting benefit to the United States. He knows, as does everybody here know, that before this agreement can go into effect certain things must be done. The Cuban government does not take charge until after the middle of May. There will be the usual formalities and the necessary delays of organizing the new government and transferring the island.

Then the Cuban congress must act. They must reform and enact their entire system of revenue and tariff laws so as to be able to make any concessions to us. They must enact our immigration, our exclusion laws, and our contract-labor laws. The Government must then proceed to negotiate the agreement provided for in this measure. And there are those who are now contending that they must also, before reciprocity shall take effect, embody the Platt amendment in a formal treaty with the United States. That treaty will have to be ratified by our Senate, and ratifications will have to be exchanged between the two Governments.

The gentleman from Kansas knows, we all know, that all these things will take time. We all know that it will probably be away along into next fall before all these things can be completed, and if the treaty referred to is to be made and ratified, it will be delayed until after the beginning of the next session of Congress, in December. And yet his committee brings in this bill providing that this agreement shall terminate on the 1st of December, 1903.

What kind of reciprocity will this be? Barely a year to run. Before our merchants and manufacturers could learn the trade of Cuba and begin to gain any advantage from the reciprocal concessions the agreement would be at an end. It is evident to those who are most concerned about reciprocal trade that for that purpose this measure will be wholly inadequate and ineffective. Already they are beginning to ridicule it, as well they may. Already those newspapers which have been almost as wild about this as they were about Porto Rico are beginning to say that the reduction must be increased and the time of its operation extended.

All this but goes to show that the agitation for reduction, instead of being put at rest, will only be increased and intensified. And it is this agitation which hurts. It is this agitation which has arrested and will continue to arrest the development of the beet-sugar industry. Already those who were about to let contracts for the construction of factories have called a halt, and it is safe to say that not another enterprise will be inaugurated until it is seen that this question has been satisfactorily and finally settled. I have here a letter from a gentleman in Michigan, Mr. Watts S. Humphrey, from which I will read an extract:

HUMPHREY & GRANT,
ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELORS AT LAW,
Eddy Building, Saginaw, Mich., February 17, 1902.

HON. PAGE MORRIS,
Representative Chamber, Washington, D. C.

I have what I can earn from my business. I have subscribed for $15,000 worth of stock in a sugar factory that is now being constructed. The contract was let prior to the time of this agitation in Congress. We are compelled to carry out our agreement. We have contracted for over 60,000 tons of beets at the old Michigan prices. We will pay for these beets delivered at the factory 2½ cents per pound for all of the sugar that will come out of them. At 4½ cents for granulated sugar only leaves 2 cents for the cost of production of the sugar by the factory out of the beets and as dividend to the stockholders.

Others who had formed their companies, but were fortunate enough not to have let their contracts when Congress convened, entirely stopped their operations, and before putting their money in will await the actions of Congress on this sugar question. You can see that we are caught, and are compelled to go on. I shall consider that I have been buncoed out of $15,000 by the Republican party if they destroy this investment, and I know if you were placed in my situation you would feel as I do, that there is no excuse upon the part of the Republicans for any such treatment of the people who have invested their money in reliance upon the pledges and promises of this party.

Ah, gentlemen, would not any of us feel that way? Everybody will feel that this is a mere makeshift, a mere pretense of concession and relief, and that the agitation must go on. But for the assurance of the honorable gentlemen who compose this committee that they will not consent to any greater reduction I would be forced to the conclusion that they expected the reduction would be increased and the time extended at the other end of the Capitol, and that it was their hope and intention that it should be.

Under all these circumstances, is it not evident that this measure is un-Republican, unwise, and unpatriotic? And is not that conclusion strengthened when we consider that there is another method by which all that is sought to be accomplished by this measure can be accomplished, and accomplished much more completely and effectively, and without the danger of the evil consequences to which I have referred?

That method was proposed in the Republican conference. In the fewest possible words it is this: That we shall not reduce duties at all; that we shall continue to collect the full rate, and shall then for such length of time as may be necessary pay over to the Cuban government such portion of the amount collected as may be necessary to accomplish the ends sought; and that in consideration thereof we shall receive from Cuba such reciprocal concessions as she may be able to grant. By the method of the bill now before the House we give up a portion of our revenue by a reduction of duties; by this last method we collect the revenue and pay it over.

By this method we are not limited to 20 per cent. We may give whatever per cent may be necessary. We need not stop at the end of one year, but let it remain in operation for three years. During that period reciprocity can have time for effective operation. At the end of that time its value will have been demonstrated and we will be in position to act wisely for the future.

Let me here read the reasons assigned for that method which were given in the conference and published the following day:

1. It will afford relief both to the government and to the people of Cuba.
2. It makes certain that Cuba and her people, and no one else, will be the beneficiaries of our action.
3. By its adoption we keep faith with the people of this country and with the people of Cuba.
4. It does not violate our national party platforms of 1896 and 1900.
5. It does not disturb existing conditions in this country.
6. It does not alter or modify any schedule of the present tariff law.
7. It does not injure or discourage any domestic industry or prevent its further development.
8. It avoids an inopportune agitation of questions affecting industrial conditions of unparalleled prosperity.
9. It would secure reciprocal trade concessions from Cuba and give time to ascertain the value of such trade relations between the two republics under existing conditions.

10. Its reciprocal feature furnishes a consideration which makes the proposed measure of undoubted constitutionality. It is as competent for Congress to purchase trade concessions from foreign countries as to purchase naval or coaling stations.

11. It is sustained by precedent since the establishment of our Government, and particularly by the legislation refunding duties collected on the products of Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands.

12. It affords the means and opportunity for successfully inaugurating and permanently establishing the new government of Cuba during a time which the experience of all nations has shown will be its most critical period.

13. It affords relief until the present adverse trade conditions affecting the price of sugar shall have been improved by the abolishment of European sugar bounties.

14. It discharges every obligation assumed by us under the provisions of the treaty of Paris, the Platt amendment, and by our intervention to secure the independence of Cuba.

At the proper time I shall propose this method by way of an amendment to this bill.

But if the House is determined that there must be a reduction of duties on Cuban sugar, and nothing else, then surely there is something else that we ought to do. Let gentlemen remember that this means a reduction of duties on more than half the raw sugar we import from abroad, and that amount will probably increase from year to year. If we are going to give this advantage to the refiners, the sugar trust, then why should we not also reduce the duty on refined sugar?

Why should we not reduce the protection they now enjoy under the sugar schedule of our tariff law? Why should we not reduce or entirely abolish their differential? Indeed, why should we not, for the time at least, reform and remodel the whole sugar schedule? It is this differential behind which they operate free from foreign interference or competition. This is their intrenchment. Again I call attention to Mr. Havemeyer's statement before the Industrial Commission. I judge from his hysterics at the suggestion that it might affect his trust to some extent.

It is this differential which enables them to control the American market and put prices up or down between wide limits. It is this differential which enables them to carry on their war of extermination against all rivals. The highest experts assert that they have reached that degree of perfection in their organization and machinery that, if they would be satisfied with a reasonable return on the capital actually invested, they would not need this differential at all. Then why should it not be reduced or abolished?

What would its reduction or abolishment accomplish? It would bring them that much nearer to foreign competition. They are anxious for others to have such competition. Why not let them have a little experience of it themselves? It would curtail their power to control prices and slide them up or down at their will. It would in a measure destroy their power to make war upon their rivals and competitors. This alone would be an incalculable advantage to the beet-sugar industry, an advantage which would more than offset the reduction in price of an eighth of a cent a pound on the product of the beet-sugar factory.

It would, as we all know, diminish the cost of refined sugar to the American consumer, or at least prevent its being made exorbitantly high. Nobody contends that the reduction proposed in this bill on Cuban raw sugar will do any such thing. Surely, gentlemen, while we are so much concerned about the people of Cuba we might at least have some regard for our own people.

I have sat here now for going on six years and listened to lamentations from the other side, which would have put to shame the immortal Jeremiah, about the exactions to which the American people are subjected. I have heard from both sides Philipics against these unholy combinations called trusts. I think gentlemen will bear me out when I say that I have joined in none of these. I have known that great combinations were the result of a natural evolution in business, and that great business meant great capital and great combination. And some of these combinations have certainly not been an injury, but a benefit to our trade and our national greatness and power.

But here is a combination whose avowed purpose has been to throttle and crush. Here is one which has levied the most exorbitant exactions. Here is one which would stop healthy development. Here is one which has grown rich and strong under our protection. Here is one not satisfied with that protection, not willing to live and let live. Here it is unblushingly asking for more, and hypocritically calling for it in the name of humanity and philanthropy. Here it is right before us.

Here is your opportunity to strike it, not in anger or in a mere spirit of hostility and reprisal or in blind and indiscriminating rage, but in justice and equity. What are you going to do? It will not do to offer general and sweeping amendments which you know will have no chance to be adopted and ought not to be adopted. It will not do to talk about removal of duties from all trust-made goods or from all those sold abroad cheaper than they are sold at home. It will not do to attempt a general crusade upon all tariff schedules. That is not involved here and has no place here. Such amendments are only offered for political effect. They are not sincere. They are not meant to be adopted.

Do not scatter. Do not bring in such amendments, but strike for that which can be accomplished. Strike at that which is before you.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman stand and not scatter?

Mr. MORRIS. I will not vote for any such amendments. I do not believe in tampering with tariff schedules to-day. At this time of unexampled prosperity I would do nothing which might even tend to destroy confidence.

Mr. CANDLER. Will you stand against the differential?

Mr. MORRIS. Indeed I will; I will offer the amendment and don't you bother about that [applause], because they do not need protection. The best experts say that they are now able to compete with all the world if they would be satisfied with a fair return on what their plant is worth. I do not want them to be able to pay interest on ninety millions of capital when they should be satisfied with the interest on $25,000,000 of capital.

Mr. VANDIVER. Does the gentleman think that the steel trust needs protection?

Mr. MORRIS. I do not know whether it does or not. The proposition here is a sugar proposition, pure and simple. Everybody here knows that, and you may be sure that the people of the United States understand it. You need not think they can be or will be deceived. Here is the sugar trust right before you. Here is your opportunity at least to do justice, to smite what ought to be smitten. Here is a plain and simple proposition that will accomplish that object and benefit our own people. What are you going to do about it? I propose to see, for I shall offer the necessary amendment at the proper time. [Applause.] And I shall call on all those who wish sincerely to accomplish something to show their sincerity now that they have the opportunity.

In conclusion, let me say that I have spoken, as I believe, in the interest of justice to our own people and liberality and good faith to Cuba. I am as willing as any man here to fulfill every obligation to Cuba, and I am willing, as every other American citizen ought to be, to bear my part of the burden. I am not willing by my vote to cast that burden on one interest. The great, generous-hearted American people can not afford to do that, and would not knowingly do it. I have spoken as a Republican, believing in the doctrines of that party, and determined to keep its pledges and preserve its honor. I have spoken as an American, standing for my own country, its labor and its industries, against all the world. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, this, in my opinion, is one of the most vicious measures that have been considered by Congress since we embarked on the fateful policy of expansion, more than three years ago. Indeed, it is the natural outgrowth of that policy, but for which we would not to-day be confronted with this and other grave problems imperatively demanding solution at our hands.

The forcible annexation of Porto Rico and the compulsory sale of the Philippines to us were followed by enactments of the law-making power which occasioned fierce and bitter controversies among the people and litigation before the courts, resulting in a line of judicial decisions new to the legal profession and unsatisfactory to many laymen throughout the country.

But if those acts provoked controversy and wrought confusion they were as nothing when compared with the dissensions which this bill will breed and the mischief it will do. The avowed purpose of its advocates is to assist the Cubans and benefit the Americans at one and the same time, but I maintain that it will do neither.

In the first place, the Cubans are in need of no such help at our hands, nor are we under any such obligations to give aid if they did need it. Much testimony has been taken by the Ways and Means Committee on the subject since the beginning of this Congress. Men engaged in the sugar, tobacco, and cigar industries, both in Cuba and the United States, were here, and gave their opinions for and against the propositions involved. So that no phase of this question was left untouched or unconsidered, and it was clearly shown that the Cubans were and are in a fairly prosperous condition; much better off, indeed, than people in many sections of this country.

The sugar planters and manufacturers, as well as the tobacco growers, were shown to be making money on their investments; at the same time among the laboring classes all those who desire work can find employment at remunerative wages. From $24 to $30 per month are the prices now being paid laborers in the cane fields and the sugar factories on the island of Cuba, while liberal wages are paid to those in other branches of employment. Laborers are scarce, according to the testimony, and the labor problem is one of the greatest, as it is one of the first, with which the Cuban people will have to deal.

So great is the demand for labor and so difficult to procure it there, that the question of the importation of cheaper foreign labor is now being considered by the Cubans, and the fear here is that Chinese labor will be imported into that island to such an extent as to menace the industrial and labor conditions in our own country.

This fear is recognized by the framers of this bill, for one of its provisions has for its object the exclusion of foreign labor and Chinese immigration, just as the same are excluded from this country, and that, too, in face of the fact that Cuba is just starting where we started more than a century ago, and needs labor to till her soil, to work her factories, and to develop her wonderful resources. I am not criticising the measure, however, on that ground.

I am only calling attention to the fact, as I pass on, for the purpose of showing some of the inconsistencies in the position assumed by the advocates of the bill.

Cuba, since the Spanish war, has marketed at fair prices all her chief productions—sugar, tobacco, and cigars—and is doing so now, with the exception of sugar, the price of which has recently fallen so low that the larger planters are holding for better prices. Overproduction—common, however, in other branches of business—is the cause here. But this will soon be remedied by the law of supply and demand, and the price of sugar will again rise to a paying margin.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if all this is true, if labor is fully employed on the island and at remunerative wages, if the products of this labor are all practically being sold at fair prices, then I submit to the House that there is no need of this gift of more than $6,000,000 in the shape of lost revenue to our Government, and the many millions more to the sugar, tobacco, and other industries of the country affected by the measure.

Mr. Chairman, what is the complaint? Why, that all the people in the island are not making money; that they have lost heavily by the ravages of war; that all the tobacco of last year's crop has not been sold, and that the price of sugar has recently fallen below the point where it can be profitably marketed.

But suppose all these things are true. Do they furnish a reason for donations on our part such as this bill seeks to give? There has scarcely been an industry in this country, whether of the farm, the factory, or the mine, the prices of whose products have not for one cause or another been at times depressed, and yet not all of these have come here for help. A few years ago the price of cotton dropped even below the cost of production in many places in the South, but no one thought of asking Congress for aid. Overproduction was the chief cause, but it did not last long. The supply soon adjusted itself to the demand, and prices went up again.

Then, too, disasters from fire and frosts, floods and storms have fallen upon the different sections of the country at one time or another, but seldom have the sufferers asked help of the General Government. A few years ago a disaster as blighting as the ravages of war have been to Cuba befell the people of my State. In a single night more than $25,000,000 of property was destroyed by the frosts of winter, but no aid was asked by the unfortunate sufferers and none was given by the National Government. To themselves alone our people looked for relief; upon their own energies they relied for aid, and from this source alone it came, and to-day Florida is richer than ever before in material wealth and in the self-reliance of her people. So it will be with the Cubans if left to themselves.

But assuming, for the sake of argument, that the Cubans need relief, will this measure secure it to them? I maintain not. The principal benefits, according to the advocates of the bill, are largely to come through the sugar industry. Now, nearly, if not the entire output of that industry in Cuba, is controlled by the sugar trust, which can to a large extent control the prices which the producers will obtain. The production of sugar in that island this year will, it is said, reach about 1,000,000 tons, the surplus of which will be purchased mainly by this trust, and while up to the present time Germany, by reason of being the largest sugar-producing country in the world, has fixed and controlled to a considerable extent the price of that article, the moment this bill becomes a law and the treaty for which it provides has been negotiated conditions will begin to change and the surplus of Cuban sugar will largely regulate prices everywhere.

True, German sugar will continue to exert an influence over prices, but the duty here on European sugar will militate against that article, giving the Cuban sugar a clear field in our markets. The output may and doubtless will increase from year to year, but will never get from under the control of the sugar trust, which will continue to regulate the price there. We know something of the power of these trusts. They are organized for the purpose of securing the greatest profit at the minimum of cost. To that end, of course, all their energies and means are directed, and by the simple means of refraining from purchasing for a time the trust can depress prices, or by buying can raise them. But in any event the sugar trust will become the beneficiary of our generous policy, and not the Cuban people.

Nor is the cigar industry in any better shape. Two large syndicates, one of them English, control 90 per cent of all the cigar manufacturing business in Cuba. This English syndicate, a foreign institution, controls 60 per cent of the entire Cuban output.

And these are the people, Mr. Chairman, for whom we are to legislate, in so far as the main productions of the island are concerned. To trusts and syndicates who are abundantly able to take care of themselves, we reduce our revenues upward of six millions of dollars and impoverish our own people many tens of millions more without lowering the price to the consumers of imported goods a particle.

But, sir, we are told that the Cuban people are demanding these concessions. That I deny. The masses of the Cubans—those who maintained the struggle against Spain from 1895 to 1898, who faced fire and sword that they might be free, and for whom we declared and waged war against their oppressors—care nothing about reciprocity. Indeed, they are scarcely willing to accept anything at the hands of this Government. They did not want us to go to war for them, because they feared the consequences of American domination. They have chafed under our occupation of the island. They believe we have given them a stone instead of bread, only an exchange of masters instead of liberty, and their feeling against us has to some extent become embittered by these considerations.

As tending to prove what I say, I will read an extract from a letter which I received a few months ago from a person residing in Cuba, who speaks and understands thoroughly the Spanish language, is well acquainted with the Cuban people, and in a position to know what he is talking about, together with a clipping from La Lucha of December 9 last, a newspaper published in Habana, and one which for a long time maintained a kindly feeling for this Government.

After the address and some other matters not necessary to read, the writer proceeds as follows:

I inclose an editorial translated from La Lucha of the 9th instant. The cavalry forces referred to therein are rural guard. This paper last week advised Maso's supporters to string up a few people to lamp-posts if they were not given representation on the electoral board.

This article is a fair sample of the sentiment that is often expressed in the newspapers with respect to our Government. La Lucha is the only paper that has ever expressed any gratitude for what the United States has done for this island, except the papers supporting Palma, which, during the last few days, have had words of kindness for us, and it is easily seen that they are prompted by the efforts of the Administration to secure tariff concessions for the island.

Now follows the clipping from the newspaper, which I ask the indulgence of the committee to read:

[Clipped from La Lucha of December 9.]

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY.

La Nación publishes the following under the title, "Revolutionary Judases:"

"The illicit combination between the intervening authorities, the intervened authorities, and the bureaucrats depending on the one and on the other is now beginning to bear its evil fruit among the Cuban people. Indeed, nothing else could have happened, as the insolence of these people united together to bring about the triumph of the candidature of Señor Estrada Palma borders on the most insulting provocation which any country was ever called upon to suffer.

"It seems as if the idea were to cause a protest, born of dignity, to burst forth with implacable ferocity, or that those who have the right on their side and are now the victims of the insults and frauds and other forms of the electoral pillage should bend the knee, like vile cowards, to the will of the Yankee governors and their Cuban lackeys."

The puppets of the American policy are dreaming when they think such things. Sooner will we all play the last card, whatever may be the result which our action may cause to this unhappy land, lowered by the depravity of some of its miserable sons; sooner will we undertake a civil war with all its tremendous consequences; sooner will we renounce the ridiculous republic which is offered to us; sooner will we appeal to the means which despair has to offer than tolerate being delivered, tied hand and foot, at the feet of the foreign despot by a handful of traitors who should have been hanged long ago.

It is time that the comedy ceased. It is necessary to tear the mask from the face of the general of the revolution, who has sold himself to the intervenores. It is necessary that we stand up and resist the storm in which an attempt is being made to involve us. In short, it is necessary that we rebel against the scoundrels who have made their country a storehouse for plunder and its flag an infected rag. Happen what may, anything is preferable to resignedly consenting to the crime which is being carried out in the palace of the Plaza de Armas and in the palaces of the civil governors and in which the Judases are bucking on their swords to plunge the country in an abyss without the least pang of remorse.

And if what is sought is that the battle should commence, we who have not provoked it accept the challenge extended to us, and there will be plenty of time to commence the fight.

The die is cast. Either with the traitors who are supporting Estrada Palma by means of the power they enjoy, or with the loyalists who are around Señor Maso. Enough has been had of miserable farces.

We have had an atmosphere of hate thrust upon us. And we are ready. The intervention was able to hold us back to avoid compromising the destinies of the laughable republic about to be set up, but neither the intervention nor anything else can prevent us from saving the little honor left us.

The shame of Cuba is a small matter to those who live by Cuba, as they put her to public auction; but it matters a great deal to those who will die for Cuba if there is no other way open.

What scene will be beheld shortly in our country? A thousand times cursed are those who contemplate them protected by the arm of the Yankee.

Blessed those who resist them.

I have read these extracts, Mr. Chairman, for no other purpose than to show that the Cuban people are not likely to be asking gifts at our hands. No doubt the sugar and cigar factories there, as well as a few other interests, would like to see this bill passed. But as before stated, the masses of the people in my judgment are not demanding reciprocity between this country and Cuba, and certainly not the brand that is provided for in this measure.

I have said and I repeat that this measure will not benefit the American people nor profit those in Cuba to any great extent; nor is it a desirable piece of legislation looked at from any standpoint from which you may choose to view it. If we look at it from the point of view of the tobacco grower, the cigar manufacturer, the sugar producer, or the grower of citrus and other semitropical fruits, we will see injury to some and ultimate destruction to others of these great industries.

If we examine it from the standpoint of commerce—of business to be done with the Cubans—there is little to commend it to our favorable consideration. While if we observe it from the standpoint of tariff reform, it is a delusion and a snare. It violates Democratic principles; nor is it wholly in accord with Republican doctrines as I have read and heard them expounded. It is unsound in theory, unwise in policy, and will be found pernicious in practice.

Of course I do not suppose that a 20 per cent reduction will destroy all the industries I have just mentioned, but it will injure them all, and if carried further, as is intended by many, will eventually wipe the sugar, cigar, and tobacco industries of this country out of existence. At least that is the opinion and the testimony of those best competent to judge.

But it is said by the advocates of the bill, when they lose sight for the moment, as they do occasionally, of the sentimental side of this matter of Cuban reciprocity, that it will increase our trade with Cuba. But admitting this to be true, the increase will be insignificant as compared with the mischief that will be done to the industries which come within the range of its influence, to say nothing of the loss of six or seven millions of revenue.

The majority report, as well as the so-called minority report made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN], takes rather a roseate view of the advantages that will accrue to us by the passage of this bill. But many do not share these views with him. I, for one, do not, as it is my opinion that no such results as he predicts will follow, and I shall not be surprised when the first of December of next year rolls around to find that no good has come to trade between this country and Cuba from the measure now under consideration.

Of the $66,572,802 in value which Cuba imported during the year 1901, the United States furnished her with only $28,017,820 worth, and it is though, by passing the bill we are now considering that this amount can be increased very largely.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this expectation is based upon the idea that by reducing the Cuban tariff upon certain articles which may go from this country into that these importations will be increased. But the duty on imports into Cuba from our country has not been sufficiently high to prevent these $28,000,000 worth of our products going into Cuba, embracing nearly every article transported by us to the most favored countries of the world, thus showing that the present tariff stands but little in the way of our trade with the Cuban people.

The truth of the matter is that the inhabitants of tropical countries are not heavy importers of the products of more northerly climes; hence we can not expect to ever do any great amount of business with our colonial possessions situated in the Tropics, or with Cuba, even under the most favorable trade regulations.

I know that some of the advocates of this measure point with sorrow to the supposed decadence of our trade with Cuba, while others more optimistic look with exultant pride at the large shipment of our productions into that island during the past three years, and prophesy great things for the future. But, Mr. Chairman, these importations were not the result of normal conditions, but rather the consequence of necessities created by the ravages of war and the sudden increase of business stimulated by the presence of a large number of our soldiers there, and it is but natural that when the necessities created by these abnormal conditions have been met and the conditions themselves have changed, that our trade with Cuba should fall off and assume its normal state whether the tariff be high or low.

But suppose, sir, that our exports to that island should be doubled, the aggregate then would hardly be a drop in the bucket as compared with the vast amount of our exports to the larger countries of the world. Last year we exported $1,487,764,991 worth of the products of this country—nearly thirty times more than would be our commerce with Cuba if the wildest dreams of the most radical of the reciprocity advocates are realized, a commerce hardly sufficient to justify us in inflicting the loss upon the sugar and tobacco growers which this bill would entail upon them.

Mr. Chairman, why not try reciprocity with some of the European countries—with France and Germany, for instance? Our exports to Europe for 1901 amounted to $1,136,504,605, of which $191,780,427 went to Germany and $78,714,935 to France. These countries present an opportunity for the exploitation of the reciprocity idea not to be found in Cuba or, as to that matter, in any of the tropical countries.

The combined population of these two countries—France and Germany—is about 90,000,000, as against 1,500,000 in Cuba. The soil is not as productive as that of Cuba and their people consume more per capita of the products we have to sell than the native Cuban population. The soil of Cuba is perhaps the most fertile in the world. Everything produced in tropical countries can be grown there in great abundance, and, as a rule, at a minimum of cost. Whatever is necessary to sustain life can be grown except breadstuffs, and this the Cubans will buy of us whether they have reciprocity with the United States or not.

But, Mr. Chairman, this bill not only provides for a 20 per cent reduction on imports from Cuba into this country, but also a similar reduction upon goods carried by this country into that. Now, the Cuban government when established will depend for its support largely upon import duties; and if we should furnish all the imports, as the majority report suggests we will do, where will the Cubans get sufficient revenue to support their government? They will necessarily be compelled to levy either a direct tax upon property or excise duties of some kind, something no country as weak as Cuba can stand. So it would appear, Mr. Chairman, that while we would give to them with one hand we rob them with the other.

Then, sir, why should there be any need for reciprocal trade arrangements between this country and the island of Cuba? Europe, with her hundreds and millions of population which must be fed and clothed presents, in my opinion, a much more inviting field for reciprocity. Let us try it there, where something may be done for and not against the farmer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I regret to see some of my friends on this side of the House take the position they are assuming on this question. I, of course, know that their motives are of the best, but I think their judgment is at fault. The gentleman from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN], in his report, which he styles "the views of the minority" (and in this, I think, he is right, because very few, I imagine, share all his views), says, in substance, that the provisions of the bill are in direct line with Democratic doctrine, and seems to think it his duty to strike at the tariff tax wherever and whenever opportunity offers.

This idea, carried to its ultimate result, would overthrow the doctrine of tariff taxation even for revenue. Since when has this proposition been a tenet of Democratic faith? Certainly, no such doctrine has ever found a place in a Democratic national platform. In fact, it has ever been one of the cardinal principles of that party that the raising of revenue should be the prime object of tariff taxation, and that this tax should be so levied as to fall, if possible, more heavily upon the luxuries than upon the necessities of life.

Then, too, the Democratic party has claimed to guard and has sought to guard the interests of the agricultural classes wherever it has been possible to do so. Yet the chief burdens created by this bill fall most heavily upon the agricultural classes. True, the cigar industry bears a part of the burden, and tobacco, sugar, and semitropical fruits are also hurt. All these products, except raw sugar, are luxuries and can well afford the high rate of taxation.

While sugar being a product of the farm should, to say the least, not be discriminated against in favor of the refined sugar—a product of the trust which still retains a part of its differential in spite of efforts to remove this discriminating tax. And now the spectacle is presented of an effort to reduce the taxes on farm products and luxuries, while those of the steel, sugar, and other trusts are left untouched. Certainly this can not be in accord with the principles or teachings of that party which has always boasted, and justly so, too, of its friendliness to labor in all its branches.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are approaching in this bill the great question of reciprocity from the wrong standpoint. Before we can deal with it properly and so as to do the greatest good to the greatest number, with as little harm as possible, we should have a general revision of the tariff, so that all rates and schedules may be readjusted and reciprocal trade relations arranged with reference to these readjusted schedules. Then, the prime object of raising revenue being attained, the burden of taxes may be regulated so that no discrimination against American farmers and American labor will be created, and so that luxuries and not the necessities shall bear the greatest burden in the support of the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, no one would go further than I to help the Cubans if they needed help and desired it at our hands. We have made sacrifices for them in the past, and I would be willing to do it in the future; but what they desire and need most is to be left alone to govern themselves as they may think best. The strong arm of our Government will ever be over them to protect, if need be, but never, I hope, to govern or oppress. They are, in my judgment, capable of self-government. Let them try the experiment.

We helped them to drive the Spaniard away at the cost of many hundreds of millions of treasure and thousands of precious lives. We have assisted them for the past several years in maintaining order on the island. We have given them a lesson in sanitation which, if utilized, will root out and finally destroy the yellow-fever scourge there. Then, if our occupation of that island has been helpful and we have placed them in a condition to set up a stable form of government, which may in time even be satisfactory to them, and if from now on we carry out our promises to Cuba and her people, we will have done well by them indeed.

But, after all, is it not about time that we were beginning to look after the interests and the necessities of our own people at home and less after those beyond the seas? Let us, then, begin to look more to our own homes, to our own people and their interests, than to those of foreign lands and distant climes. Our continental domain is vast, our people progressive, enterprising, and homogeneous; our resources boundless and varied, the development of which has scarcely yet begun; our Government the best the world has ever seen; our destiny the grandest and our future the brightest of all the nations of the earth if we but curb our greed for territorial aggrandizement. So, let us then, as representatives of the people, withdraw our gaze from across the seas and direct our attention and energies to the upbuilding of our own country, to the end that her people may be prosperous and their condition improved. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the measure under consideration proposes a reciprocal agreement with Cuba to continue in force until the 1st day of December, 1903, whereby the products of Cuba, principally sugar and tobacco, are to enter our markets upon the payment of 20 per cent less than the duties imposed on like articles from other countries, and our products and manufactures are to enter Cuba with at least a like reduction of duty.

The consideration of this measure involves a recognition of the relations we sustain toward Cuba; as were the question presented simply one of a reciprocal agreement with a foreign country for the purpose of securing trade advantages, the situation would be greatly simplified. We shall stand before the world when the Cuban Government shall have been fully organized as her sponsor and protector, and the Cuban people are justified in maintaining that the Platt amendment, qualifying, as it does, their complete independence, places us under at least a moral obligation to give their interests some consideration.

I do not think there can be any question in the mind of any honest investigator relative to the critical industrial condition impending in Cuba as a result of the present low price of sugar—her principal product. It seems to me that the testimony is conclusive that sugar can not be produced there on the average for less than 2 cents per pound, and one does not need to be much of a mathematician to appreciate the fact that with sugar selling at from two to three tenths of a cent per pound less than that sum, the planter and sugar raiser is suffering a very considerable loss, and that therefore whatever present conditions are it will be but a short time until the planters and producers of sugar are in sore financial straits, and the labor of the islands either out of employment or forced to accept a considerably reduced wage.

Some gentlemen dismiss the consideration of this phase of the situation with the flippant suggestion that we are not responsible for the present depression of the sugar market, nor for the results which may follow in Cuba as the effect of that depression. But I submit that, having assumed the rôle of the liberator, guardian, and godfather to Cuba, we can not within a day or a week or a month after her government is established throw off all responsibility with regard to her, either in fairness to Cuba or in justice to ourselves, particularly in view of the fact that in turning her loose to walk alone among the nations of the earth we are keeping a very substantial leading string upon her in the Platt amendment. But our obligations to Cuba by reason of the peculiar relation we sustain to her is but one and in my mind not the controlling factor in this situation. Free Cuba, to be successful, must be prosperous. Depressed industrial conditions, low wages, lack of employment, means trouble for the new government, possibly serious trouble. Serious trouble means intervention, and intervention, in my opinion, would necessitate annexation.

I have attempted to approach this subject from the broad standpoint of sound public policy as I understand it. Whatever bias I have in the matter comes from a lively interest in the growing beet-sugar industry of the nation—an industry which has made wonderful progress in the last few years, and which, in my opinion, is destined to have a still more remarkable development in the years to come. As a friend of the beet-sugar industry, as a wellwisher of the cane-sugar industry of the country, as one desirous of putting off as long as possible the inevitable day of Cuban annexation, with its fatal competition under free-trade relations with a number of American industries, I feel it my duty to support any reasonable measure calculated, as I believe the measure now before us is, to aid in maintaining at least a reasonable degree of prosperity in Cuba, in order that the new government may be inaugurated and established without the immediate embarrassment of depressed industrial conditions, which would inevitably create discontent, disorder, and either a demand for annexation on the part of the Cuban people or the necessity of it as the result of an enforced intervention by us.

The necessity or the advisability of some action on our part to relieve the threatened industrial crisis in Cuba, owing to the low price of sugar, being admitted, the question arises, can we provide an adequate remedy without injury to any American industry or hardship to any class of American citizens? If we can not, then whatever our obligation to Cuba may be, our first duty is to our own citizens and their interests are entitled to our first consideration. But, Mr. Chairman, it is fortunate both for the United States and her people, and for Cuba as well, that the proposed legislation, while affording reasonable relief, can by no possibility disastrously affect the industries or the welfare of our own citizens.

Even were the proposed reduction of 20 per cent in favor of Cuba on our sugar tariff to affect the market price of sugar to the American consumer by that amount, and thus to that extent reduce the protection now offered to the beet-sugar producers, I believe the legislation would be justifiable in view of the benefits we would derive from it, and the fact that in my opinion the beet-sugar producer would still have adequate protection. But no one believes that the agreement proposed will in any wise affect the protection afforded the beet-sugar producer by our sugar tariff, for the price of sugar to the consumer will be fixed then as now by the cost of that portion of our imports of sugar which is bought in the open markets of the world and which pays our full tariff duties.

It seems to me that the argument which has been advanced that the reduction of duty on Cuban sugar will not go to the Cuban planter is scarcely worthy of serious consideration. Surely the Cuban planter will not be simple enough to accept a lower price for his product than is paid at the same time and place for a similar article. It is the first time that I ever heard of the possibility of there being two prices for the same article at the same time and in the same market.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS] in his remarks a few moments ago quoted from quite a startling array of figures in the attempt to prove that the planters of Hawaii have not been receiving a price for their sugar to which they are entitled by reason of free entry into our markets. I do not pretend to question the accuracy of the gentleman's figures, but I spent a month in Hawaii three years ago, during which time I made some study of the sugar industry there, largely because, being interested in the growth of the beet-sugar industry in this country, I was anxious to learn whether that industry could survive in free competition with cane sugar grown under as favorable conditions as existed in Hawaii.

Among other inquiries I made of the Hawaiian planters was in regard to the price they received for their product. I had heard a good deal of the all-powerful sugar trust, and was anxious to know whether that organization had been able to rob the American planter of any of the benefits derived from free access to our markets.

The planters with whom I talked informed me that they had an agreement whereby they sold their sugar to the agents of the American refineries at a price equivalent to the New York price of sugar on the day their sugar landed in San Francisco, less the difference in freight rates. I ask the attention of my friend from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS] to this as the testimony of Hawaiian planters themselves three years ago. The gentleman has contended that the Hawaiian planter is not getting the full benefit of the relief from the payment of the American duty, whereas Hawaiian planters said to me—and a number of them made the same statement—that they had an agreement whereby they were paid for their sugar, on the day it landed in San Francisco, the price of the same quality of sugar, duty paid, on the same day in the markets of New York, less an agreed adjustment of freights. So they received absolutely all that their sugar was worth and all of the benefit of the remission of tariff duty.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is another side to this question. This is by no means a one-sided arrangement which we are entering into, but a reciprocal agreement under which, in my opinion, we will eventually be large gainers in the matter of trade. Cuba, even in her present undeveloped condition, just emerging from a long continued and devastating war, with but a small proportion of her land under cultivation, has a trade of $38,000,000 per annum which now goes to other countries than ours. We can not hope or expect to get all of this trade under the reciprocity agreement proposed, but I believe we are assured of securing a large portion of it, and as Cuba increases in population, and the purchasing power of her citizens increases, as it will rapidly, there can be no doubt but what our trade with her will very largely increase in consequence of the trade advantages we are to gain under the provisions of this measure.

It is inevitable, in my opinion, that Cuba should some time become a part of the United States. As I have stated before, my hope is that this union will be long delayed. I believe it is best for the people of the United States and for the people of Cuba that it should be. We are neither prepared for free competition with her sugar, tobacco, and other products, nor would it be well to invite at this time the settlement of the numerous political and social questions the annexation of Cuba would bring.

My eloquent friend who addressed the committee a short time ago, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH], said that from the standpoint of the beet-sugar producer he had no fear of the effect of Cuban annexation. Whatever the probabilities of that event may be, there is no doubt whatever in my mind that the annexation of Cuba, with Cuban sugar free, means the death of the beet-sugar industry of the United States.

It has been said that the cost of the production of sugar in Cuba is 2 cents a pound. I believe that is about the cost in all tropical countries. It has been contended by the gentlemen who say they represent the beet-sugar people on this floor that sugar can be produced in Cuba for less than 2 cents a pound. That may be possible. The testimony before the Committee on Ways and Means was that it cost 4 cents a pound to produce beet sugar. One gentleman alone of all those before the committee, I believe, said that beet sugar might ultimately be produced in the United States for  $3\frac{1}{4}$  cents a pound.

Let us say that in the future, by improved processes—by the reduction of the wages of American labor, if you will, which heaven forbid—the cost of beet sugar in the United States may be brought to 3 cents a pound, or  $\frac{1}{4}$  cent lower than the lowest estimate. Then, supposing the cost of the production of cane sugar shall not go below 2 cents a pound, there is still an advantage to the cane-sugar producers of Cuba of a cent a pound. This would be \$20 a ton, and allowing four tons to the acre, it would be an advantage of \$80 an acre. As the average production in Cuba is considerably above that the advantage is greater. In Hawaii they produce as high as 12 tons of sugar on one acre of land; and if they had the advantage of only 1 cent a pound over the beet-sugar producer, it would be 12 times \$20 an acre or \$240 an acre of clear profit to the Hawaiian sugar planter, above the cost of producing sugar from beets in the United States.

Is there any possibility or probability that an acre will ever be sown to sugar beets anywhere in America after the day when Cuba shall become a part of this Union? In my opinion such a union means inevitably the destruction of the beet-sugar industry in this country and of the cane-sugar industry as well, unless in that day we provide for those industries by high bounty.

Remember that Cuba has never produced sugar under the most improved methods; that Hawaii produces more sugar to the acre and produces it more cheaply, except where she irrigates, than Cuba has ever done; that when they shall give up the slovenly methods of perennial crops in Cuba, which is not a cheap method of raising sugar, but an expensive one; when they shall come to the Hawaiian system of planting every other crop they will produce sugar even more cheaply than they do now, and when that time comes does anyone imagine that the beet-sugar industry of America shall survive unless protected by a bounty?

So, as a friend of the beet-sugar industry, I am anxious to put off as long as possible the day when Cuba shall ask to become part of the Union, or when we shall be compelled to take her in order to prevent continual uprisings there.

I believe the surest way to postpone annexation is to insure Cuba industrial tranquillity, which, I believe, this measure will tend to do. It is best both for us and for the Cubans, in my opinion, that for a time they address themselves as an independent people to the task of working out the problems of self-government.

Inasmuch, however, as Cuban annexation is one of the certainties of the future, it is of vast importance to us that when Cuba shall come into the Union she shall present no more serious social and racial problems than those presented by her present population; that there shall not be added to these the difficulties and complications of dealing with a large population of cooly laborers, and therefore that feature of this legislation which provides for her adoption of our Chinese exclusion and immigration laws is of vast importance—of such importance that, in my opinion, we would be largely justified in this legislation by the promise it holds out of excluding from Cuba undesirable classes of immigrants, if there were no other considerations involved.

The measure before us is in complete harmony with the Republican policy of reciprocity in that it promises us large returns in increased trade without menace or danger to any American industry. It keeps faith with the Cubans, who have reason to expect from us advantageous trade relations in exchange for like benefits in our trade with them. In brief, it might properly be called a bill for the purpose of keeping faith with Cuba; of insuring industrial prosperity and political tranquillity there, with a view of postponing annexation and free trade with her in sugar and tobacco; of adding largely to the trade and commerce of the United States, and for the exclusion from a contiguous territory, which some day will become a part of the United States, of persons who would be harmful and unfair competitors with our people while Cuba remains an independent republic and undesirable citizens when she becomes a part of the American Union.

I believe the legislation is wise, that it will be beneficial to Cuba and her people, and to the Government and people of the United States as well. No class of men should more heartily support it than those especially interested in the beet and cane sugar industries of the United States, for it disposes, in my opinion, for a long time to come, of the most serious menace with which they have or will be threatened—that of Cuban annexation. Above all else, it is in keeping with the high aims and purposes of the American people in all their dealings with Cuba, and completes and rounds out undertakings and legislation in her behalf which will ever reflect credit and glory on the Republic and, in the fullness of time, work to our material advantage as well. [Applause.]

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, addressing myself to the pending measure, I desire to call the attention of the House to one peculiar fact connected with this bill, and that is that the Ways and Means Committee have reported a bill for our consideration that meets with the unqualified approval of no person in all these United States; a bill that is not the embodiment of the wishes and desires or convictions of any member of the Ways and Means Committee, which is not the embodiment of the views of any Democrat upon this side of the Chamber, of any Republican on the other side, and is not in response to the demands of those who speak for Cuba and ask at the hands of Congress relief for the Cuban people. So that in voting upon this measure upon its final passage, if it be unamended, as I prophesy that it will be, every man will be called upon either to swallow a bill which is not in accordance with his judgment or to reject it because in his judgment it is unwise and indefensible.

Now, it is not for me to say to the Democratic members of this House that no Democrat can vote for this measure. It would ill become any proponent of this bill to say that all Democrats must vote for this bill if they are Democrats. I trust the time will never come in this country when Democrats are bound as Democrats to support a bill as a Democratic proposition which after weeks of deliberation, dissension, and divisions among the Republican members of this House is reported as a Republican measure. To do so, many Republicans had to surrender their judgment, compromise their differences, and yield to party discipline that the bill might be reported to the House without the aid of Democratic votes.

Therefore if it is charged, as it has been unjustly charged, that those of us upon this side of the Chamber who oppose the bill are following the lead of members who are interested in beet sugar or in cane sugar and that we desire protection for those industries, I will not retort by saying that you are trying to protect the protected monopolies of this country, which by this bill obtain 20 per cent protection in Cuba in addition to the protection which they enjoy at home. If I had to make choice, however, between the Democracy of Louisiana and the Republicanism of Pennsylvania, arrayed upon opposite sides on this bill, I would have no cause to hesitate. The Louisiana Democrats simply insist that Cuban competition will destroy the value of Louisiana sugar plantations; that this bill will not benefit Cuban producers or American consumers, but will enrich the "sugar trust."

I am willing, for my part, to cast my vote with the Democrats of Louisiana and members representing the agricultural interests of this country [applause] in the West engaged in raising beets and attempting to compete with the "sugar trust" in refining sugar, and say to my brother Democrats, without reflecting upon them, if you prefer the Democracy of Mr. PAYNE of New York, and of Mr. DALZELL of Pennsylvania, "the high priest of protection" [laughter], and to follow the Republican majority reporting this bill, you are at liberty to make your choice and I will make mine.

Now, let me ask, why is this bill here? In my judgment it is here because the American Sugar Refining Company, commonly called the "sugar trust," has found west of the Mississippi River a competitor in the beet-sugar producers, who are also the beet-sugar refiners.

In the testimony given before the Ways and Means Committee it was shown that Willet and Grey in October, 1901, before the present agitation had begun, said that the cause of the trouble between the American Sugar Refining Company and the beet refineries was that the American beet-sugar men would not confine themselves alone to the business of raising raw sugar, but insisted upon getting into the business of refining sugar. Willet and Grey are recognized as the sugar trust's organ. Now, in pursuit of the plan to control the sugar markets of the United States the sugar trust went out West and into the Missouri Valley and made a reduction of 2 cents a pound on refined sugar after the beet-sugar men had made contracts for future delivery based upon the market price.

The beet sugar refineries instead of meeting that price and sacrificing their property simply offered to fill their orders with American Sugar Refining sugar at the market price, and the American Sugar Refining Company had to raise the price and leave that field unoccupied, as it could not afford to stand the loss which it had planned to inflict upon the beet-sugar refineries and thus force its only competitor to the wall.

Now, the next thing, Mr. Havemeyer, the head of the great "sugar trust," gave out an interview in which he declared—and I have that also from the testimony before the Ways and Means Committee—"that Congress ought to put raw sugar upon the free list." Notice, he wants raw sugar, not refined, to come in free. Why? Because if the "sugar trust," which is practically the sole buyer of raw sugar in this country and refiner of cane sugar, can get raw sugar upon the free list from Cuba, or raw sugar at a reduced price from Cuba and leave the duty or differential upon refined sugar, it will not be compelled to reduce its exactions upon the American consumer, but it can take the action of Congress as a club to compel the Louisiana cane-sugar producers and the beet-sugar producers of this country to sell their products at a reduced price and force the beet-sugar men to stop refining sugar.

Then the "sugar trust" would be in undisputed control of this market and the Cuban market. Thus began a campaign to manufacture a belief that Cuba urgently needed relief. By enlisting all the newspapers they could, sending out circulars through their agents, Willet and Grey, and other devices, they sought to impose upon the people of this country the idea that there was great distress in Cuba that must be relieved, trusting to our generosity and humanity to go to the rescue at any cost.

Next, the Secretary of War, who is not only a great soldier, ranking the Lieutenant-General of the Army, but is also a great lawyer, submits a very scholarly report to Congress in which he tells us our duty and describes conditions in Cuba. And yet, when the Ways and Means Committee meet to discuss what shall be done, it develops that that gentleman and soldier knows nothing about it himself except such reports as have been given to him ex parte from other sources.

And then comes another gentleman, who is a most admirable soldier and, I understand, a splendid doctor, General Wood, who sends out a circular letter for our consideration about economic conditions in Cuba, attempting to show that it costs at least 2 cents per pound to make raw sugar in Cuba and that at present prices bankruptcy must come. Yet, when confronted by some of General Wood's statements, one of the main witnesses before the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. Atkins, of Boston, merchant, sugar planter, trust refining magnate, and the owner of large plantations in Cuba, said:

While General Wood is a most estimable gentleman, and I would take his opinion on all military matters without question and as pertaining to the government of Cuba, I should prefer my own opinion in regard to the production of cane.

Thus General Wood was repudiated as an expert in such matters by the very gentlemen who appeared here in the interest of this measure. It was shown also that General Wood had made a mistake of nearly $1 per sack in the price of raw sugar, estimating it that much too low. General Wood did not appear himself, but sent Colonel Bliss, collector of the port of Havana, as his representative before the committee. Colonel Bliss, when asked about the cost of production of sugar, said in substance:

I expected you gentlemen had found that out for yourselves. I am not an expert on that business.

Thus, when you come to the agencies that have created this sentiment, it resolves itself down to the American "sugar trust," to misinformed newspapers, to the Secretary of War, who had no information on the subject except that communicated to him by General Wood; to General Wood, who had no information on the subject as an expert; to the President, who relied upon General Wood, and American speculators owning plantations in Cuba and also closely allied with the "sugar trust."

Now, that was still insufficient to secure favorable action, and the "sugar trust" joined forces with the manufacturing and industrial trusts of this country, with the understanding that Cuba should have forced upon her a preferential duty of 20 per cent in favor of American industries seeking a market there. Then the industrial trusts of this country got behind the movement, and with this combination of philanthropists, with this great aggregation of unselfish talent behind it, we have the remarkable spectacle of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee presenting this bill, which he himself originally opposed, and—a sight to make angels weep—almost shedding tears over the distresses of the poor Cuban.

Now, Mr. Chairman and fellow-members, you may convince me some day that the moon is made of green cheese, that a black crow can become white, but you will never convince me that a Republican majority in Congress or elsewhere will advocate a bill purely and alone upon the ground of sympathy for some country in which they have no interest other than that of humanity.

If we are going to pass this bill from the standpoint of distress in Cuba, before we give up $8,000,000 of our revenue without any reduction to the American consumer, there ought to be a sufficient showing, first, that distress exists there and, second, that the measure will relieve it.

Now, as to the question of the distress in Cuba. I admit that they have a condition down there such as confronted the people of the South after the civil war. They have their plantations mortgaged for perhaps twice—that is the testimony—of their value. These plantations are owned not by Cubans but by Spaniards and by American speculators who have gone there since the war with Spain to exploit that country.

I know that there is one gentleman, a Republican, a personal friend of mine, Mr. Hawley, then a member of Congress, who told me when this era of expansion set in that the acquisition of the Philippine Islands and the annexation of Cuba would destroy the value of every plantation in the State of Louisiana, where he then had farms, and destroy the value of every plantation engaged in the business of raising beets. Then he was radically against such a policy. Now, since the war with Spain he has gone down to Cuba and, with Mr. Havemeyer and other American sugar-refining magnates, he is at the head of a syndicate that has a 75,000-acre farm or plantation or hacienda, or whatever you call it, and has either sold out in Louisiana or else his plantations are thrown upon the market.

Now we want to relieve him, and we want to relieve those gentlemen who own plantations; and yet Mr. Hawley stated in his testimony, and he ought to know, that Louisiana sugar can not be produced for less than 3½ cents, and that any price less than that would make the Louisiana plantations of no value, and he was a witness advocating reciprocity.

Now, this reduction of 20 per cent on raw sugar will make the tariff 1.34 cents a pound. If, as the experts from the Agricultural Department say, sugar can be produced in Cuba from 1.25 cents to 1.75 cents or 1.50 cents per pound on an average, or as the Austrian or French experts say, for 1½ cents to 1¼ cents, then, according to Mr. Hawley's own statement, this bill will let in raw sugar at a price that will give relief to Spanish owners of sugar plantations, that will give relief to Mr. Havemeyer and associates, but it will be a tariff that will make every plantation in Louisiana an undesirable investment.

Now, my friends, I am ready to put the Democracy of Louisiana to any Democratic test; I am ready to put the beet-sugar raisers of this country to any Democratic test. When you are ready to take off from the "Dingley tariff" some part or all of its exactions upon the American consumer, I will go to the Democrats in Louisiana, I will go to the Democrats from the West, and say, "You must stand your pro rata of the reduction upon tariff duties until it is reduced to a revenue basis; and if you do not submit to it, you had best join the Republican party;" but I will never go to the Democrats of Louisiana, or the Democrats from the beet-sugar raising States, and say to them, "There is one thing only upon the whole tariff list—sugar—that by reason of the differential in favor of refined sugar, reducing the tariff on raw sugar will give no benefit to the consumer, and yet, not for the purpose of reducing taxation to consumers here, not to relieve Cuba, but to satisfy the rapacity of the 'sugar trust' and the overprotected industries of this country desiring to get a preferential rate of duty in Cuba, without abating any of their exactions upon the American people; you must surrender and submit to such a proposition for fear it might appear we had voted against a reduction of the tariff."

We ought never to make such a demand upon our fellow-Democrats who represent the farmers of Louisiana and the beet sugar raisers of the West. Now, then, as to the distress. Every witness before the committee—if I misstate the proposition I invite correction—every witness stated that there is no distress in Cuba at present. Colonel Bliss, the collector of the port of Habana, who was sent here as the Government representative, testified that there was no suffering in Cuba, and that all labor was employed; that the wages for agricultural labor was from $21 to $30 per month.

Every witness testified that every man that wants to work in Cuba can get work at wages not less than $21 to $30 per month. All the witnesses testified that the price for labor in Cuba exceeds the wages paid in the South for agricultural labor, and every gentleman here who comes from that section knows that is true. But they say that it is not the distress now, but it is the distress that will come for which we must provide relief. Why, they are paying from 12 to 18 per cent in Cuba for money, and yet they are holding on to their whole crop of sugar. Down in my country, when cotton got to 4½ cents a pound, and they can not raise it for less than 6 cents, the Federal Government did not come to our aid.

Out in Kansas, when they burned corn for fuel and they were mortgaged up to their eyes, the Federal Government never came to their relief. What did we do? Simply passed a national bankruptcy law, that people who had their property mortgaged for twice what it was worth might liquidate and start out even again. Yet they say we must pass this bill in order to relieve Cuba. It will not help Cuban laborers nor the little farmer that has already sold his crop, because he worked on the shares. It can only help, if anyone, those people who have piled up the sugar down there, able to hold it and pay 12 to 18 per cent to foreign banks and carry on farms that are mortgaged to twice their value—and the gentlemen who have gone down there in Cuba expecting to make more money than the present price of sugar will permit.

Now, it is a significant fact that in almost every instance the men who have bought sugar plantations in Cuba since the Spanish war are also connected directly or indirectly with the American sugar trust. It is also worthy of mention that since this bill has been agitated the price of "sugar trust" stock advances as the prospect brightens for its passage. Now, then, suppose distress does or will exist there because of the very low price of sugar everywhere; are we under any such obligations to the Cubans as requires us to make good to them the loss upon a crop which everybody concedes is over produced in the world to the extent of a million or more tons? The witnesses all tell us that the present low price of sugar is due to the fact that there is a million or more tons on the market more than the world can consume; that all Cuban sugar comes here, and the "sugar trust" is practically the only purchaser for it.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] yesterday, when my colleague from Texas [Mr. RANDELL] asked him:

As you state that the price of sugar will not be reduced to the consumer here, and the reduction in our revenue will be between $5,000,000 and $7,000,000 on sugar, if there is no competition in this country in reference to the purchaser of raw sugar, how does the Cuban hope to get an increase in price? Why can not the purchaser put it in his pocket?—

made this answer:

The sugar trust has got to have the sugar as much as the planter has got to sell it. If they do not buy it of them, they must go to Germany—and if they go to Germany they must pay more for it—or they must take this sugar. Each one is independent of the other.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the explanation of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] does not explain. The trust can go to Hamburg or to Cuba as it chooses. The Cuban planter can not go to Hamburg, because over there, after paying half his sugar is worth to get it there, he will find a surplus of more than a million tons in excess of the world's demand for sugar. That he can not go there is evidenced by the fact that he can not go there now, but must come here and sell to the trust the entire Cuban product and pay the present tariff rates. On the other hand, if we reduce the tariff on the Cuban sugar coming here 20 per cent, and the trust does not care to give the Cubans the benefit of it, it will simply say, "I do not care to buy your sugar."

The gentleman from New York says that "the trust has got to have it," when the proof shows that the product of sugar in Cuba is about 800,000 tons, while the world's surplus is more than a million tons. The trust can thus refuse to buy from the Cubans and fill from this surplus supply all its demands for American consumption until the Cuban gets ready to sell to the trust at the price the trust is willing to pay. If the Cuban is able to hold out against the trust, he is certainly not in such a distressed condition as to need relief from us. So, Mr. Chairman, while his answer might have been satisfactory to the gentleman from New York, I do not think my colleague was very much enlightened thereby. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, they say there is distress in Cuba and it is our duty to relieve it. I have attempted to show that distress does not exist there, and if it did, I deny that it is our duty to relieve it. It was well said by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS] that "we have expended $250,000,000 in giving the Cubans their liberty." We relieved them of about $300,000,000 indebtedness to Spain. We have also established splendid sanitary conditions in Habana. I know that to be the fact because I have visited that city since General Wood began his splendidly inaugurated system. It occurred to me while I was there that General Wood was putting sanitation, like any other good doctor, ahead of everything else; he was investigating that and applying his ability thereto as his first consideration. He had the penitentiary there cleaner than this hall. He had all the old Spanish barracks cleaned out and had converted them into schools. He has done a splendid work, and I have no criticism to make of him.

But, say some, we are under obligations to give Cuba trade concessions because we forced the Platt amendment upon her, and she can not thereby make commercial treaties with any country other than this. That claim is not worthy attention. The only provision in regard to treaties in the "Platt amendment" is "that Cuba shall not enter into any treaty with any foreign power which will impair her independence." One need not be a lawyer to understand that this provision has no application to commercial treaties. No Democrat will contend that a commercial treaty, which is always made to further freer trade relations, is in any sense the impairment of the independence of either contracting party.

But, Mr. Chairman, if there was distress in Cuba, and we were under obligations to relieve it, in my judgment the pending bill would not relieve the distress or discharge the obligations. All the witnesses testified before the Committee on Ways and Means that the reduction provided in this bill from the tariff on Cuban sugar would not save the sugar planters. President Roosevelt is on record as saying so; Governor-General Wood says so; Colonel Bliss says so; president-elect of the Cuban Republic, Mr. Palma, says so. They are the friends of reciprocity with Cuba. We who oppose the bill deny that it will benefit the Cuban planters, but claim that the "sugar trust" will pocket the reduction. Colonel Bliss, the friend of reduction, only estimated that 30 per cent of the reduction would go to Cuban planters.

What will become of the other $5,000,000 of our revenues which we are asked to vote away, even if the trust does not pocket the entire concession, as we claim? There is no gentleman on this side of the Chamber who will deny that it is in the power of the "sugar trust" to put all this concession into their pockets. They say if the trust does so that we will throw the responsibility on the trust; we will go before the American people and denounce the trust. I would like to know whom you would get to trust you if your legislation in Congress is such as to enable the trust to pocket $6,000,000 to $8,000,000 unless generously inclined to divide with the Cubans? It is not necessary to do this to convince the American people that the trust is a public enemy—something that everybody who is not in a trust now admits.

Besides, Mr. Chairman, this bill is unfair to Cuba at this time. If we want to be honest with the Cubans, if we think it right to give them some concessions and that concessions are necessary to relieve distress, we should simply reduce the tariff upon Cuban goods coming in here. Their tariff now upon our goods is less than one-third of the rates we charge them. We have a military government down there under General Wood. We had him fix these low rates of duty upon our goods going there. We have a Congress here. Why not simply lower our rates upon her goods coming here, without driving a conscienceless bargain, such as this? There is nobody authorized to represent the Cubans. I asked the gentleman from New York yesterday who was authorized to represent the Cubans or to agree for them. He said no one, so far as he knew. Now, in May the Cubans will have a government of their own choosing; that is, speaking theoretically—

Mr. CLARK. Ironically.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Yes; ironically, as the gentleman from Missouri says, because it so happens that the American authorities in Cuba, no doubt under instructions from the Republican Administration here, forced Cuba to elect a man for president of the new republic that had not set his foot upon her soil for twenty-five years. He is said to be with the trust himself. Still Cuba will have her own government in May. If we were not absolutely hypocritical in our professions, if relief for Cuba was our object, we would at this time lower our duties upon Cuban products temporarily, and wait until authorized representatives of Cuba could treat with us as to future trade relations. But that would not satisfy the "steel trust," the "beef trust," and all the other "trusts."

The "steel trust" and the "beef trust," the latter of which has within the last few days fixed the price of beef at such a figure as will cost the American consumers $100,000,000 per annum, have said, "Before you shall relieve Cuba you must make them give us the trade that we may be able to get there, not at the 20 per cent reduction, but with a tariff of 20 per cent in our favor as against all the nations of the earth." The tariff in Cuba against them is only 5 per cent now. They want 20 per cent preferential there, and are willing to trade off the sugar interests here to get it, although the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZIEL] is reported to have said "he would die in the last ditch" before he would consent to a reduction of our duty on steel.

I yesterday questioned the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] as to whether it was not the fact that if the Cubans were unable to grant or did not grant all the concessions that the bill asks—that if they refused to exempt a single article out of the thousands which we send them from the demanded reduction, or to pass our immigration laws, whether then this bill would not fall to the ground, and relief be refused Cuba. And the gentleman answered, "Yes."

I say, then, that it is unfair and hypocritical for gentlemen to come here and under the guise of humanity make a plea for "distressed Cuba," and at the same time say, "We have put a military government over you; we have elected a president for you who has not been in your country for a quarter of a century; you are on the verge of ruin, yet if you do not consent to this hard bargain, if you do not agree to it, you can starve and go into bankruptcy, or go to a warmer place than Cuba."

Mr. KLEBERG. And it is also proposed to require them to keep out the immigrants that we do not want there.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Yes. As suggested by my colleague [Mr. KLEBERG], we propose to force upon them our immigration laws without regard to whether it is to their interest to have such laws or not. We propose to put into the hands of the President of the United States legislative, judicial, and executive powers that he may present to the Cuban people a bill that is more onerous in its conditions than was the Platt amendment, against which every gentleman on this side of the Chamber voted.

I can not favor such cant and hypocrisy. If the Republican majority in this House desire to pass this bill, let them be honest with themselves and the country. Let them say bluntly and unblushingly that before they turn Cuba loose they will take advantage of her distressed condition to impose upon her a further renunciation of her rights of sovereignty, in order that the trusts of this country that have fattened upon the American people may grow richer and more powerful by devouring the substance of the Cubans, whose friends you pretend to be.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman from Texas speaks of our enforcing this obligation upon the Cuban people as if it were in line with the Platt proposition. Is it not true that it is proposed only to authorize an agreement to be made which the Cubans may, if they choose, assent to, in case they deem it beneficial to their interest to do so?

Mr. BALL of Texas. That is true; but I will ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he believes that the condition of distress which has here been spoken of exists to-day in Cuba?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think it does not at this time.

Mr. BALL of Texas. All right. Now, if there is no distress down there at this time, if the Cubans are not yet in the possession of the right of self-government, if nobody authorized to speak for them has asked for the passage of this bill, the American Congress has no right, in order that these American trusts may rob those people, to demand at the hands of the Cubans at this time assent to this proposition. On the other hand, if it is true that there is distress in that country at the present time, it is hypocritical and cowardly for us to demand that in their distressed condition they shall make these concessions for the benefit of American industries which need no protection there.

Mr. Chairman, with Republican dissensions and differences I have no concern. I am glad to see gentlemen on the other side showing a lack of harmony upon this matter. I trust that in the providence of an all-wise Creator the result will be the wiping of a sufficient number of them out of the successful lists at the coming elections to give us a chance to look at the books and to put a check upon unrestrained Republican legislation.

It makes no difference to me that the Republican party, in looking over the field of American industry, when they framed their last national platform found only one industry to be made the subject of a specific promise—only one which it thought required special nurture—and that was the beet and cane sugar interests of this country, an industry that admittedly can not compete with the favorable climatic and other conditions in Cuba.

So the Republican convention solemnly promised those people that when they invested their money in this industry the Republican policy would not take any part of their protection away. It matters not to me that the gentleman from New York said that this protection would not be disturbed for twenty-five years. I think it is perfectly consistent for the Republican majority at its own pleasure—I do not criticise them for it—to break any promise on earth that they have made in case a different action will redound to their advantage.

The Republican party would be inconsistent to be consistent. [Laughter.] I care not what Republican protectionists may do in this matter. "Gentlemen upon this side of the Chamber who vote for a Republican Administration measure should not charge the opponents of the bill with protection proclivities. Certainly, my objections to the bill are not from a desire to "protect" anybody. I am against this bill as a Democrat, and shall point out some of the many reasons why, in my judgment, it contravenes Democratic theories, touching the use of the taxing power of the Government. It is not my purpose to assail Democrats who insist upon voting for this bill.

I know that it does not commend itself to any Democrat here, and yet many Democrats will vote for it. No doubt the objections which are so potent with me are not so vital with them. Perhaps this is due to inability to agree either with my premises or conclusions. If they could see it as I do, they would conclude that there is not a line of Democratic thought in the bill from caption to finish. It is Republican in essence and substance and not in form only. It will bring no reduction in taxation to consumers here. It will result in a loss of revenue of from six to eight millions of dollars.

The "sugar trust" will be the chief if not the only beneficiary of the revenue we surrender. Under it we begin a system by which the taxing power of the Government, under the guise of reciprocity, is converted into an instrument of barter and trade with other countries, which followed up would prevent any such thing as tariff reform and engage us in a war of reprisals and retaliation with other countries. It gives double protection to the great trusts of the country. It forces Cuba to abandon a revenue-tariff system and adopt a protective-tariff system for the benefit of protected industries here.

CONSUMERS WILL NOT BE BENEFITED.

Now, as to the first proposition. All the witnesses before the Ways and Means Committee, for and against the bill, as well as the "sugar trust," which is urging it, concedes that this measure will not reduce the price to our consumers, and with this every Democratic member of the Ways and Means Committee and every Republican member of that committee is agreed. As a Democrat, I undertake to say that there can be no reduction of tariff in a Democratic sense that does not take off a part of the tax upon consumers. This proposition is therefore a mere juggling with tariff schedules and not a reduction of taxation.

I have endeavored in the course of my remarks to demonstrate that this condition is brought about by maintaining a differential or higher duty upon refined sugar than upon raw sugar coming here, this differential in favor of the "sugar trust" prohibiting the importation of refined sugar here and giving the trust control of our market.

I object to it, for the second reason, because it takes away, without reducing the price to the consumer, six to eight millions of dollars of revenue from the Federal Treasury and, in my judgment, puts it into the pockets of the sugar trust. I do not think that any Democrat desires to do that.

Now, this is why I say it will go to the sugar trusts: In the first place there is, as I understand it, 10,000,000 tons of sugar raised in the world. We constitute one-fifteenth of the population and we consume about one-quarter of the sugar raised in the world, or about two and a half million tons, I believe. We raise of that, from cane and from beets in this country, not counting Hawaii and Porto Rico, about 300,000 tons. Taking in the production of Hawaii and Porto Rico it makes about a third of our consumption. The balance is derived equally from Cuba and from foreign markets, as I understand it.

Now, there is a million tons of sugar on the market in the world more than there is demand for consumption. When this bill becomes a law it reduces the duty upon raw sugar 20 per cent and retains the differential in favor of the "sugar trust." That differential is also reduced 20 per cent, but it will still be one-tenth of a cent a pound, which means upon the Cuban sugar $1,600,000 per annum at present rates. Now, no one can refine sugar in Cuba when he can ship the raw material over here at the same price and get $1,600,000 more for it.

Consequently there can be no reduction to the consumer except by grace of the trust, and if gentlemen on this side of the Chamber are willing to give away $8,000,000 on a bare chance that it will reach distressed Cubans in case distress should occur, which does not now exist, and trust the American Sugar Refining Company to distribute it, they certainly have faith to beat the band and faith sufficient to warrant them in being very hopeful for the hereafter. [Laughter.] So far as I am concerned, I decline to take $8,000,000 of revenue out of the Federal Treasury and start it on its way to anticipate distress in Cuba and trust the American sugar trust to distribute it. [Applause.]

Now, as to the policy of reciprocity. Once this so-called reciprocity is entered upon, what becomes of your tariff schedules adjusted from the American standpoint for revenue only? Why, they tell me that Thomas Jefferson believed in reciprocity. There have been more crimes committed in the name of Thomas Jefferson than there have been in the name of liberty. Men who never vote a Democratic ticket quote Thomas Jefferson. Men who do not subscribe to anything that Jefferson ever taught or believed quote Thomas Jefferson in order to sustain their arguments.

I undertake to say that Mr. Jefferson through his whole life believed in and looked forward to and hoped for a happy and prosperous agricultural and pastoral people. Mr. Jefferson taught that commerce should be the handmaiden of agriculture. He never taught that agriculture should be the slave and handmaiden of commerce. If any gentleman will show me where Thomas Jefferson ever proposed by reciprocal duties to swap off the American agricultural interests at any time in order to give great corporations and trusts that are robbing our people here and want to rob the Cubans abroad entry into foreign markets, then I will agree to resign my seat in Congress, and I have no present desire to do that. [Laughter.]

The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN] quoted Mr. Jefferson to show that he favored reciprocity. The gentleman from New York calls upon Mr. Jefferson when it suits his purpose. If he were called upon to follow Jefferson in advocating the free coinage of gold and silver, even at the commercial ratio, he would say that conditions had changed since Mr. Jefferson's time. Since Mr. Jefferson's time we have utterly changed our tariff system. We had no Dingley tariff then. We sought only to get a market for agricultural products under a policy of free trade, or the freest possible trade. If Mr. Jefferson had views as to reciprocity then, conditions were utterly different from those now existing. They differed certainly as night from day from the reciprocity ideas in this bill.

In Mr. Jefferson's day our tariff duties were not restrictive of free commerce with all nations, while foreign restrictions upon our trade and upon our vessels were numerous and vexatious. His only idea was by friendly arrangements with the nations, where such restriction existed, to secure, by friendly arrangements, their repeal, and as a last resort, in case of failure, by countervailing duties here, which he greatly deprecated, to compel other governments to treat us with the same liberality we treated them. Mr. Jefferson said:

Free commerce and navigation are not to be given in exchange for restrictions and vexations.

In the report from which the gentleman from New York quoted on yesterday, sent to the House of Representatives on December 16, 1793, Mr. Jefferson, then Secretary of State, advocated free trade with all nations or with any nation that would accede thereto. Let me read therefrom:

Would even a single nation begin with the United States this system of free commerce, it would be advisable to begin it with that nation, since it is one by one only that it can be extended to all.

Further on, from the same document quoted by the gentleman from New York, I read:

Our commerce is certainly of a character to entitle it to favor in most countries. The commodities we offer are either necessities of life or materials for manufacture or convenient subjects of revenue, and we take in exchange either manufactures, when they have received the last finish of art and industry, or mere luxuries.

How different the application of Mr. Jefferson's views from the views of the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN] embodied in this bill. Our tariff laws here were not then restrictive. Mr. Jefferson sought a market for agricultural products going abroad by giving free trade to finished products coming here.

Thus he sought to confer a benefit upon the producers and consumers of this country alike. This bill proposes leaving the high-protective tariff, by which consumers and taxpayers are subjected to monopoly and trust robbery at home, untouched and give these monopolies and trusts additional advantages by bringing the products of Cuba, agricultural and horticultural, in competition here with our agricultural interests in such a way as to inflict a loss upon our producers without reduction of taxation to consumers and to further enrich the "sugar trust." Think of Thomas Jefferson standing for such a policy!

Why, Mr. Jefferson was trying to open a market for the farmers of this country, not for the trusts. No man ought to call upon the name of Thomas Jefferson and intimate that he would have gone down to a helpless country, tied hand and foot, with our military governor still there, and say to them, "You are starving; you are distressed; you have nothing but sugar; we will give you 20 per cent reduction that will not help our consumers, but go to the trusts, but unless you give 20 per cent preferential duty on everything manufactured in this country, which the trusts are selling abroad for less than they are selling at home, you may starve and your distress go unrelieved." Think of Thomas Jefferson proposing a thing like that!

Now, reciprocity treaties, when entered upon, mean the surrender of the constitutional prerogative of this House to originate revenue bills. They mean treaties negotiated by the Senate fixing all tariff schedules. Over in the Senate, at the other end of the Capitol, they have already brought in a report saying that they have authority—and I believe they have—to negotiate tariff treaties without reference to the wishes or convictions of the House of Representatives. Once done, just as in the oleomargarine and the butter fight, upon which my friends from Minnesota and myself are so wide apart, it is a question of the most powerful industry getting the most votes to cripple another.

When we once enter upon this programme and mode of adjusting tariff schedules, the result will be that you will start a competition in this country of the great and powerful interests seeking to gain entree into foreign markets by making a sacrifice of the weaker vessels. What does that mean? Who are always the most powerful? Will organized capital, in the shape of consolidation along modern lines, led by those the President of the United States calls "captains of industry," be the ones that will go to the wall; or will it be the agricultural and horticultural interests of this country that will be sacrificed for trade concession for overprotected monopolies?

What do you think about it? Other countries will have their own peculiar interests to consult. There will be certain classes of goods that they wish to get in here without regard to our interests, and there will be a conflict of interests at home and abroad. Instead of adhering to the true doctrine of Mr. Jefferson, "Peace, amity, and commerce with all nations, entangling alliances with none," making tariffs here that all could afford to come and do business under upon equal terms, treating them fairly and honestly and giving them the same privileges, we will have retaliatory measures, reprisals, conflicts of greedy and selfish interests, that will make it impossible to form a scientific, properly adjusted schedule for revenue for "the support of the Government honestly and economically administered."

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Now, another thing, Mr. Chairman. While I do not believe in the formation of tariff schedules by reciprocity treaties, I am not alone in my opinions. The doctrine of reciprocity was inaugurated once before in this country and failed, and we are not without Democratic declaration upon that point. After Mr. Blaine had negotiated his celebrated reciprocity treaties the Democratic party met in convention, in 1892, and made the best tariff plank, in my judgment, ever written in the history of the Democratic party. It was short, simple, and easily understood. It declared what I believe then and now indorse, "that the Government is without constitutional power to lay and collect taxes except for the support of the Government, honestly and economically administered." That was and is good Democracy; but they did not stop there. The Blaine treaties had then been negotiated, and here is what they said about that kind of treaties:

Trade interchange on the basis of reciprocal advantages to the countries participating is a time-honored doctrine of the Democratic faith, but we denounce the sham reciprocity which juggles with the people's desire for enlarged foreign markets and freer exchange by pretending to establish closer trade relations for a country whose articles of export are almost exclusively agricultural products with other countries that are also agricultural, while erecting a custom-house barrier of prohibitive tariff taxes against the richest, and the countries of the world that stand ready to take our entire surplus of products, and to exchange therefor commodities which are necessities and comforts of life among our own people.

What does this bill propose? Precisely the same character of treaty that Mr. Blaine negotiated in the behalf of those same interests. That is, the concessions we give are purely to agricultural products, a menace to the agricultural interests here, while the concessions they give us are to the overprotected interests of this country, who, not content with robbing us, desire to go down to Cuba and rob them to the tune of 20 per cent more than they are now robbing them. So that, as was so tersely and well stated by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, General DICK, whose astuteness as a campaign manager is well known, "If you adopt this policy it means free trade for the farmers and protection for the trusts."

I am sure that no Democrat desires to enter upon such a policy. There is another objection. The bill gives double protection. Can that be Democratic? I can prove this proposition absolutely beyond question. It is not contended that the present prohibitive rates of the Dingley bill, which prevent competition with American industrial interests here, will be affected so far as our producers and consumers are concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to know something about that, for it is about time to adjourn.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I do not care to go on to-morrow, and I will conclude my remarks in about fifteen minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I will not object to fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may continue for fifteen minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BALL of Texas. The American consumer will not be benefited by this bill. How about the trusts? I have already shown that the "sugar trust" is protected here by a differential in their favor which gives them the control of our market by naming the price of raw sugar to the producer and refined sugar to the consumer, and that under this bill the differential is still retained enabling the "sugar trust" to buy its raw sugar cheaper without the necessity of reducing the price of refined sugar to the consumer. It can not be denied also that the present high tariff rates effectually prevent foreign competition from forcing a reduction of the price of articles manufactured by the trusts, which control the industrial interests of this country. They are therefore left unrestrained to garner enormous profits at the expense of our people. That is protection number one.

Now for the double protection. By this bill we do not demand of Cuba that she shall reduce her tariffs upon our goods seeking a market there. We simply exact at her hands that she must charge all other countries with which she deals 20 per cent higher duties than she charges us. Therefore American manufacturers who are now getting into Cuba upon equal terms with all the world will, when this bill becomes a law, be able to tax Cuba 20 per cent more than her consumers are now paying. In other words, we protect them here against foreign competition and force Cuba to protect them there against all competition.

Now, does not this give the "trusts" double protection?

But, Mr. Chairman and fellow-members, there is one proposition, which is the last I shall make, which ought to condemn this measure in Democratic hearts and Democratic minds—a proposition that makes the bill absolutely indefensible from a Democratic standpoint. This measure forces Cuba to abandon her system of tariff for revenue only and adopt a protective-tariff system. What Democrat will defend such a proposition? Nay, more; it forces Cuba to adopt a protective system against her own interests and not for her protection, but for the protection of our industries seeking a market there. We do not say to Cuba, "Reduce your duties upon our goods and let your consumers get the benefit thereof," but "Make your duties as you will, provided they be 20 per cent greater upon the goods of other countries than upon our goods."

Let me demonstrate that Cuba is now upon a revenue basis. In the first place, her tariffs have been fixed by our own agents, and adjusted for no other purpose than to supply revenues to run our military government there. All concessions that could be made in our favor have already been made. According to Colonel Bliss, our collector at Habana, Cuba's tariff rates now average an ad valorem duty of 21½ per cent. We furnish Cuba all her flour, 75 per cent of her mules, 95 per cent of her hogs, 99 per cent of her corn, 89 per cent of her bran and fodder, 98 per cent of her oats, 90 per cent of her hay, all her canned, fresh, salt, and pickled beef, nearly all her bacon, ham, pork, lard, oleo-margarine, condensed milk, wood, lumber, shingles, and furniture.

In addition to these products we also send to Cuba, of her total imports, brick, 90 per cent; railway and street cars, 99½ per cent; coal, 99 per cent; steel and steel rails, 88 per cent; agricultural machinery, 98 per cent; sewing machines, 90 per cent; engines, locomotives, and boilers, 82 per cent; sugar machinery, 93 per cent; all other machinery, 88 per cent. We are therefore not suffering to get the products of our mines, farms, forests, and pastures into Cuba. It is true she takes by far the larger part of her cotton goods from foreign lands, but that is not due to our inability to get into her market. Cuban rates upon cotton goods is but 23½ per cent. We get into China in competition with the world without a discriminating duty in our favor and without the advantage of near-by transportation. The reason we do not get into Cuba our cotton goods is that our patterns and styles are not adapted to their tastes and our merchants do not give long-time accommodations. Other countries have studied their wants; we must do the same.

But I have digressed somewhat from the proposition that Cuba is now upon a revenue basis so far as her tariff rates are concerned. I will say in passing that our agricultural products, sugar machinery, and structural iron are now practically upon the free list, the rate upon the latter being only 5 per cent ad valorem duty. It developed before the Ways and Means Committee that the revenues derived from the present tariff were hardly sufficient to support the government, and that the Cubans were disinclined to resort to other forms of taxation. Under the Platt amendment Cuba can not contract debts in excess of her revenues. Therefore, to give us the preferential duty of 20 per cent demanded by this bill, she must do it not by lowering her duty upon our goods, but by raising her duties upon foreign goods, thereby necessarily increasing their cost to Cuban consumers.

In proof of my statement that it would be necessary, in complying with this bill, to have Cuba change her revenue system to a protective system, I quote from the testimony of Colonel Bliss before the Ways and Means Committee:

In order to secure this trade it would be necessary to inaugurate a new system of tariff for Cuba, under which the minimum duty would be equal to the duty charged now, while the maximum would be, perhaps, about 33½ per cent higher. In some cases it need not be that high, while in others it would have to be higher.

Commenting upon this statement, the chairman of the committee [Mr. PAYNE] said:

Sufficiently advanced, in other words, to give the trade to the United States?

To which Colonel Bliss replied:

Yes, sir.

Some gentlemen insist that Cuba might reduce her tariffs upon our goods and not raise them upon other foreign goods and still have revenues sufficient for her purposes. This upon the theory that a reduction of duty might increase importations and cause a corresponding increase of revenue. While this might be true, and would be true if Cuba had a protective system now, it is not true that you can increase revenues by lowering duties upon importations already admitted upon a revenue basis.

But, Mr. Chairman, even if we concede that the Cubans would reduce their tariff upon our goods going there under this bill and not raise her duties upon importations from other countries, my proposition is still true; because if Cuba can afford to lower her duties upon our products and increase her revenues, it is also true that she could lower her duties upon other foreign importations and increase her revenue thereby and give her consumers the benefit of competition. Gentlemen who contend otherwise are begging the question and standing out against a common-sense proposition. The whole purpose of the bill is to say to Cuba, "You must give American industries protection to the extent of 20 per cent against foreign competition."

Now, where is the Democrat who can consistently say that protection is all wrong for American industries at our expense and all right in Cuba at her expense for the benefit of interests not her own? It is high handed and indefensible for us to go to helpless Cubans, under the pretense of giving them relief and giving them liberty, and say to them, you must make a perpetual treaty that you will at all times give the industrial interests of this country the advantage of 20 per cent, and 20 per cent protection, regardless of what your interests may be and regardless of what the cost to the consumers in Cuba may be.

If there is a Democrat that will get up here and announce that that proposition is not absolutely indefensible, that it is not grossly immoral, outrageously unjust, undemocratic in substance, in form, and in everything that goes to make up Democratic faith and Democratic doctrine, I want to hear him. It makes no difference what gentlemen's views may be as to whether this relief will go to Cuba or whether relief ought to go to Cuba, they ought not to violate Democratic doctrine in order to advance selfish special interests.

Members are here condemning Louisiana sugar men and beet-sugar men for voting in their interest, as they say, regardless of Democracy, and yet they propose to vote for a bill that forces Cubans to protect American industries for all time to come to the extent of 20 per cent against all foreign competition. How dare they criticise Louisiana Democrats and beet-sugar men for saying it is wrong to make an exception against them in a manner that does not inure to the benefit of the American consumer under the pretense of tariff reduction or getting reciprocal trade relations?

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to attempt to influence any Democrat on this floor. I care not how the Republicans vote, but when Democrats tell me that in order to prevent criticism at home, for fear somebody will say that I voted against tariff reduction, and to avoid the necessity of an explanation, I should vote for this un-Republican and un-Democratic measure, this hybrid which comes here under the tongue of disrepute, repudiated by the Cubans themselves (because their absentee President says that less than 33½ per cent will do Cuba no good, and General Wood tells you that 20 per cent reduction will do Cuba no good), I answer that I will not accept such advice.

So far as I am concerned, when I get home they will not ask me for an explanation. The only explanation that was ever asked of a Democrat down in the Democratic stronghold of Texas is, How comes so many Democrats to vote with the Republicans? [Laughter.] We always have to explain that when we do. [Laughter.] No Democrat was ever asked, when the Populist party was about to take Texas away from the Democracy, why Democrats voted against Republican measures. The question was always, Why do so many Democrats vote with Republicans in Congress and help them get through their measures? [Laughter.]

This is an Administration measure; this is a trust measure; this is an un-Democratic measure. I do not care about its violation of Republican-platform pledges—it does not come here under the banner of Democracy. There is no Democratic standpoint from which you can defend it, and if I have to make an explanation when I go home, I am going to cast a vote here that I can explain when I reach there.

I will not cast a vote that the only explanation I could give would be that I was afraid that somebody might think I voted against tariff reduction, when, if any man asked me if it was for tariff reduction, I would be obliged to tell him no.

I expect to vote, as I have in the past, according to my convictions, with sincerity and perfect fidelity to my sense of duty and allegiance to Democracy, conceding to every gentleman here on this side of the Chamber, if he sees fit to differ with me, the right to do so. I intend always to cast my vote regardless of what somebody at home may be thinking, and without keeping my ear to the ground to hear the rumbling of popular opinion.

I intend to so vote that I can go home and say to my people: This bill was not approved by anybody; that it came in here as a compromise Republican Administration measure as the handiwork of Republicans whipped into line by patronage and promises of various kinds and under pressure from improper influences. I do not want to be obliged to admit that we got into the Republican band wagon for fear somebody would think we were all gone wrong on tariff reform.

I will tell them I believed the measure was brought in to help out the Republican Administration, to help out the Republican leaders from an unpleasant dilemma; that it was Democratic in no degree or in any respect; that it gave double protection to the trusts; that it put $8,000,000 into the pockets of the sugar trust and took it out of the Federal Treasury without any benefit to the American consumer; that it is sham reciprocity; that we were holding up the Cubans while they were helpless and forcing them to accept conditions more onerous than the Platt amendment.

I will tell them these were my honest, conscientious convictions, and they will say to me what they have always said heretofore—that "We want you to vote your convictions, even if you make a mistake sometimes, because we don't want a Representative that is afraid to vote against Republican principles for fear he will incur criticism at home." [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SHERMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12765) to provide for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. R. 74. Joint resolution relating to publications of the Geological Survey—to the Committee of Printing.

S. 234. An act granting an increase of pension to James Frey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 694. An act granting a pension to Jane Caton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

S. 899. An act granting an increase of pension to George F. Bowers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

S. 1934. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Biloxi, in the State of Mississippi—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds;

S. 2409. An act granting an increase of pension to John A. Rotan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2738. An act granting an increase of pension to James W. Hankins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2975. An act granting an increase of pension to Levi Hatchett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3334. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas E. James—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3421. An act for the relief of Eleonora G. Goldsborough—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 3992. An act granting an increase of pension to David M. McKnight—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4042. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Norton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Herman Graef against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Surgeon-General of the Army and recommending the retirement of that officer with the rank of major-general—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to the inquiry of the House, a report in relation to improvements in the Missouri River near St. Joseph—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, recommending certain amendments in the fortifications appropriation bill—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MOODY of Oregon, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2632) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the Clearwater Valley Railway Company a right of way through the Nez Perces Indian land in Idaho," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1515); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10299) authorizing the Santa Fe Pacific Railway Company to sell or lease its railroad property and franchises, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1518); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GRIFFITH, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3800) to grant certain lands to the State of Idaho, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1519); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BURTON, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. 56) providing for a modification in the adopted project for the improvement of Everett Harbor, Washington, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1520); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PROTECTION OF NATIVE RACES AGAINST INTOXICANTS.

Mr. PLATT of New York. From the Committee on Printing I report a resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate. That there be printed, in pamphlet form, 10,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 200, entitled "Protection of native races against intoxicants," being a compilation of treaties and laws for the protection of native races against intoxicants, with extracts from messages of Presidents and ex-Presidents and justices of the Supreme Court, for distribution by the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire what are the native races. Are we foreign races, and are we not to be protected against intoxicants?

Mr. PLATT of New York. We are not included in this publication, and the resolution does not apply to the Philippines, either.

Mr. HOAR. I do not object to the Senator's resolution, of course; but it strikes me that the title is a little curiously worded. I have great respect for the movement for protection against intoxicants. However, as I understand the title, we are not native races, but some classes of foreigners are.

Mr. PLATT of New York. We leave that for the Senator to decide after he reads the document. There are only $85 involved in the printing.

Mr. HOAR. If we can be protected against intoxicants for $85, I will not object. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ABBIE GEORGE.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, about three weeks ago a bill granting an increase of pension to Abbie George passed the Senate and likewise passed the House of Representatives. It seems that there was a mistake in the service of the soldier. It was given as Company F, Twenty-sixth New York Infantry, instead of Company F, Twenty-sixth New York Volunteer Cavalry. It was one of those little mistakes that will occur sometimes. The President was requested by a concurrent resolution to return the bill to the Senate, and it was returned. I now report a new bill, which was introduced on the 5th instant by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], with the soldier's service corrected, and I ask unanimous consent that it be put upon its passage. It is Senate bill 4969.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 4969) granting an increase of pension to Abbie George was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Abbie George, widow of Rufus L. George, late of Company F, Twenty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 5125) granting an increase of pension to William H. Cummings; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5146) granting an increase of pension to John G. Snook; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DEBOE introduced a bill (S. 5147) granting an increase of pension to Madison Sullivan; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5148) granting a pension to John W. Kinney; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5149) for the relief of William R. Ballard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 5150) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Taylor; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GAMBLE introduced a bill (S. 5151) to extend the benefits of the act of June 27, 1890, to the members of the company of Indian scouts under command of Brig. Gen. Alfred Sully in 1864 and 1865; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GAMBLE. To accompany the bill, I present a memorandum to it, which I move be printed as a document and referred, together with the bill, to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DUBOIS introduced a bill (S. 5152) granting an increase of pension to Marcellus M. M. Martin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 5153) granting an increase of pension to Eri W. Pinkham; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

Mr. DEPEW. I submit an amendment to the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators of the United States by popular vote instead of by the legislatures, and I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. DEPEW to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 41) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators of the United States, namely:

The qualifications of citizens entitled to vote for United States Senators and Representatives in Congress shall be uniform in all the States, and Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation and to provide for the registration of citizens entitled to vote, the conduct of such elections, and the certification of the result.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I will briefly state my reasons for proposing this amendment to the pending resolution amending the Constitution of the United States by providing for the election of United States Senators by popular vote instead of by the legislatures of the several States. The adoption of this amendment to the Constitution revolutionizes our scheme of government as it was devised by the framers of the Constitution and as it has existed and worked admirably for one hundred and fifteen years. The idea of the founders of the Republic was a popular assemblage elected by the people and then a Senate in which all the States, large and small, should have equal representation. The Senate was to be a body in which the sovereignty of each State had its representation in the nature of an independent republic, and the sovereignty of the State necessarily must be represented in its corporate capacity. It was not because of distrust of the people that this provision was adopted, but to create a chamber of independence and dignity in which the States, without consideration of size or population, should have an equal voice in their sovereign character.

The amendment under consideration, to which I offer an addition, proposes to make the Senate a popular body and reverse the principle upon which the Government has existed down to the present time. With the adoption of such an amendment to the Constitution, if it is adopted, this addition which I offer to it is the clear and logical sequence.

A number of States have by various devices prevented a third, or a half, or more, of citizens, recognized as such by the Constitution of the United States, from exercising the right of suffrage. The local reasons which have led to the adoption of these measures are not pertinent to this discussion. The adoption of these new constitutions in several States, however, containing "grandfather" and other clauses and devices to take away the privilege of voting from those who are made citizens by the Constitution of the United States, has led to a movement in the House of Representatives and in the legislatures of some of the States to change the representation in the House of Representatives from population to votes. That will reduce very largely the number of Congressmen which those States are entitled to. That measure does not receive the attention it would because, the House of Representatives being elected by the people, the vast majority of populations vote by manhood suffrage, and, therefore, the States in which they so vote have such a large majority in the House over States which restrict the suffrage that they do not feel acutely the discrimination which these measures bring about.

But if in the election of United States Senators a small oligarchy in any State can send here a representation equal to that of great States like New York which have manhood suffrage; if States in which half of the votes are disfranchised are to have an equal voice in this body with States like Pennsylvania, of five or ten times their population and with manhood suffrage; if New York, which casts, because of its manhood suffrage, 1,547,912 votes, is to be neutralized in legislation affecting her vast interests by Mississippi, casting 55,000 votes, because the majority of her citizens are disfranchised—then the situation becomes intolerable.

I am not, under ordinary circumstances and normal conditions, in favor of the proposed reduction of Representatives in the Southern States; I am not in favor of any legislation by the General Government which interferes with the local affairs of those Commonwealths; but if the door is opened by the adoption of this amendment to the Constitution for the changing of the character and constitution of the Senate of the United States, then that measure must necessarily be accompanied by power to insure a full and honest vote of the citizens of the Republic, and protect this body in the election of those who may be designated here as Senators.

There are nineteen States which have in the aggregate less population and smaller industrial, commercial and financial interests than the State of New York, which are represented here by 38 votes, while New York has only two. Twenty-three States, with a population of thirteen million seven hundred and fifty-five thousand three hundred and sixty-four (13,755,364) and casting two million three hundred and sixty-three thousand two hundred and eighty-five (2,363,285) votes, have a majority in the Senate, while 22 States, with a population of sixty million eight hundred and fifty-one thousand eight hundred and fifty-seven (60,851,857) and casting eleven million six hundred and nine thousand one hundred and seventy (11,609,170) votes, are in the minority.

I have the profoundest reverence for the Constitution. Every scheme of government in every other nation of the world has failed and been changed during the last century. Our Constitution alone has stood the test of time, experiment and expansion, and has proved the most perfect system of government ever devised for a self-governing people. Revolutions never go backward. With the proposed change in the constitution of the Senate the people will and ought to be fairly and equitably represented here. The next and inevitable step will be to have the people and not the States control this body. Now the Senate can not go behind the legislatures of the States and investigate the election of their members, but with election by the people it can go into the regularity and returns of every election precinct and contests of Senatorial seats will be the leading work of every session.

It is a serious question if Congress submitted an amendment like that offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and three-fourths of the larger States should decide to have a representation in the Senate based upon population, the same as in the House of Representatives, whether the Senate, being the sole judge of the qualification of its members, could not admit this enlarged membership and thus end the power of the smaller States. If that did happen, the equality of the States would be destroyed and the revolution which changes the character of our Government would be complete.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and printed.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, what is pending before the Senate? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is still in order.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. ELKINS submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2960) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all possessions and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. McCOMAS submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the chief clerk of the United States Geological Survey from $2,250 to $2,500 and the salary of the chief disbursing clerk in the same office from $2,400 to $2,500, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TURNER submitted the following amendments, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

An amendment proposing to appropriate $3,200 for completing light-house and fog signal at Browns Point, State of Washington;

An amendment proposing to appropriate $6,000 for the construction of a fog signal at Battery Point, Puget Sound, opposite the city of Seattle, State of Washington;

An amendment proposing to appropriate $22,000 for the constructing of light-house and fog signal at Mukilteo Point, near Everett Harbor, State of Washington; and

An amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for constructing a light-house and fog signal on Burrows Island, Rosario Strait, State of Washington.

Mr. TURNER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $840 to pay the heirs or legal representatives of Charles P. Culver, husband of the late Mrs. Catherine P. Culver, for the translation from German of House Miscellaneous Document No. 8, Forty-fifth Congress, third session, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment to ratify and confirm an agreement made and entered into on the 17th of June, 1901, by and between James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, on the part of the United States, and the Klamath and Modoc tribes and Yahooskin band of Snake Indians, belonging to the Klamath Agency, in the State of Oregon, and proposing an appropriation of $537,007.20 to carry the same into effect, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for improving the Allegheny River near Natrona, Pa., and also proposing to appropriate $268,584 to enable the Secretary of War to enter into contracts for such material and work as may be necessary for the completion of said project, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

TESTIMONY BEFORE COMMITTEE ON THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That in addition to the copies of the testimony taken before the Committee on the Philippine Islands, printed for the use of the committee from day to day, 1,682 copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: At the instance of my colleague this morning a resolution was passed authorizing the printing of 1,682 copies of the hearings before the Committee on the Philippines for the use of the document room in addition to those which the committee has had printed for itself. The resolution was passed, but it was so worded that the Printing Office construe it as covering only the hearings from the time of its passage. I understand what my colleague desired was that all the hearings from the beginning should be printed, and I therefore send to the desk the hearings from the beginning and ask that a similar number of copies of those may be printed for the use of the document room so as to make a complete file in the document room.

There being no objection, the order was reduced to writing and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That 1,682 additional copies of the testimony already taken before the Committee on the Philippine Islands, and also the testimony taken from day to day, be printed for the use of the Senate.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. ELKINS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Committee be authorized to print such hearings upon bills and resolutions referred to it as may be necessary.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 176) to provide for the extension of the charters of national banks; and

A bill (H. R. 184) to establish and provide for a clerk for the circuit and district courts of the United States held at Wilmington, N. C.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FLINT, MICH.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3898) providing for the erection of a public building at Flint, Mich. It is a local matter and will take but a moment.

Mr. HALE. Unless the Senator from Illinois, in charge of the Post-Office appropriation bill, is ready to go on—

Mr. MASON. I am ready, I will state to the Senator from Maine, as soon as I can obtain the floor. If the Senator from Michigan will yield to me I will be very much obliged to him, as I should like to go on with the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. I was going to give notice that after this bill is disposed of I would insist either upon the Calendar in order or the appropriation bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. It will take but a moment to dispose of this bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other governmental offices in the city of Flint and State of Michigan, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, not to exceed the sum of $50,000.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination and of his recommendation thereon and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall within thirty days after such examination make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $5 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Flint, in the State of Michigan."

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to give notice that on Saturday, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to speak briefly upon the pending Chinese-exclusion bill.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11354) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments.

Mr. MASON. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the amendments of the committee be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, under the subhead "Office of the Postmaster-General," on page 1, after line 10, to insert:

For printing, binding, and wrapping 10,000 copies of the revised edition of the Postal Laws and Regulations, in addition to the 100,000 copies provided for by the act of June 13, 1898, 5,000 of which shall be retained by the Public Printer for sale to individuals at the cost thereof and 10 per cent added, the proceeds of such sales to be deposited in the Treasury, as provided for by law; and for printing, binding, and wrapping 1,000 copies of the digest of decisions prepared in connection therewith; for which entire edition so much of the amounts appropriated therefor by the acts of June 13, 1898, June 2, 1900, and March 3, 1901, as shall be necessary is hereby made available: Provided, That the aggregate expenditure for said publications shall not exceed $55,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 4, to increase the number of special agents in charge of divisions of the rural free-delivery service from seven to ten; in line 5, to increase the appropriation for the salary of the agents from $2,400 to $2,500 each; and in the same line, to increase the appropriation for compensation of special agents in charge of the divisions of the rural free-delivery service from $16,800 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 7, after the word "headquarters," to strike out "Six" and insert "Three clerks, at $1,400 each; 10;" in line 9, after the word "each," to strike out "6 clerks, at $1,100 each; 6," and insert "10;" and in line 11, before the word "clerks," to strike "6" and insert "13;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation to clerks at division headquarters: Three clerks, at $1,400 each; 10 clerks, at $1,200 each; 10 clerks, at $1,000 each; 13 clerks, at $900; and 3 laborers, at $700 each, $27,900.

Mr. MASON. In order to have the total amount of the appropriation in that paragraph correspond with the amendment just adopted, on page 15, in line 12, I move to strike out "$27,300" and insert "$40,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, on page 15, line 14, before the word "special," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "thirty;" in line 16, before the word "special," to strike out "15 special agents, at $1,500 each; 15" and insert "thirty," and in line 19, before the word "thousand," to strike out "and 15 special agents, at $1,300 each, 87," and insert "ninety;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation to 30 special agents, at $1,600 each; 30 special agents, at $1,400 each, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 1, before the word "route," to strike out "seventy-one" and insert "seventy-five;" in line 3, before the word "route," to strike out "four" and insert "ten;" in line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighty-eight" and insert "ninety-nine," and in the same line, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eight hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation to 75 route inspectors, at $1,200 each, and ten route inspectors, at $900 each, $99,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 5, before the word "route," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "eighty-five;" and in line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-seven" and insert "seventy-six;" so as to make the clause read:

For per diem allowance for 85 route inspectors of the rural free-delivery service, when actually traveling on business of the Post-Office Department, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not to exceed $3 per day, and for other necessary official expenses, $76,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 19, to increase the total appropriation for rural free-delivery service from $7,529,400 to $7,572,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 2, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

Special agents in charge of divisions at not exceeding $2,500 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 3, before the word "classes," to strike out "four" and insert "two;" in the same line, after the word "graded," to strike out "in even hundreds of dollars" and insert "as follows;" in line 4, after the word "at," to strike out "one thousand three hundred," and in line 5, after the word "hundred," to strike out "one thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Special agents, two classes, graded as follows, at $1,400 and not exceeding $1,600 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 11, after the word "graded," to strike out "in even hundreds of dollars," and insert "as follows;" in line 13, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" and in the same line, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "four;" so as to make the clause read:

Clerks, four classes, graded as follows, at $900, $1,000, $1,200, and not exceeding $1,400 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 2, to insert:

Whoever shall hereafter willfully or maliciously injure, tear down, or destroy any letter box or other receptacle established by order of the Postmaster-General or approved or designated by him for the receipt or delivery of mail matter on any rural free-delivery route, or shall break open the same, or willfully or maliciously injure, deface, or destroy any mail matter deposited therein, or shall willfully take or steal such matter from or out of such letter box or other receptacle, or shall willfully aid or assist in any of the aforementioned offenses, shall for every such offense be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than three years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 15, to insert:

That hereafter special agents, route inspectors, and examining inspectors in the rural free-delivery service shall be authorized and empowered to administer oaths to carriers and other persons employed in said service or in connection with any business relating to the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 20, to insert:

That hereafter, in addition to the officers now authorized to administer oaths in such cases, rural letter carriers of the United States are hereby required, empowered, and authorized to administer any and all oaths required to be made by pensioners and their witnesses in the execution of pension vouchers with like effect and force as officers having a seal; and such carriers shall affix their respective post or cancellation stamps to their signatures to such vouchers in authentication thereof; and are authorized to charge and receive in compensation for administering such oaths not exceeding 25 cents for each voucher, to be paid by the pensioner.

Mr. PROCTOR. I inquire of the Chair if we are acting on the committee amendments as they are read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am a member of the committee, but, unfortunately, was not present when the amendment which has just been stated was considered by the committee, and I should like to hear from the chairman some explanation as to the necessity of authorizing letter carriers to administer oaths in pension cases. Are not the present facilities for that purpose sufficient?

Mr. MASON. The amendment was suggested by the Post-Office Department, as was the amendment to protect the rural free-delivery letter boxes, so as to surround them with the same protection of law that now surrounds other letter boxes. So also the amendment to permit rural free-delivery carriers to administer oaths in pension cases has been recommended by the Department.

The fourth-class postmasters have heretofore taken affidavits and certified to the application papers of soldiers seeking pensions. There has been complaint to the Department that the abolishment of the fourth-class offices destroys the right of the postmaster to take acknowledgments of affidavits, and therefore the Department recommends the adoption of this amendment, which will allow rural free-delivery carriers to have the same powers of administering oaths in pension cases as the fourth-class postmasters formerly had.

We have deprived the rural neighborhoods of fourth-class postmasters, and the pensioner will be obliged, therefore, in many cases to go to the county seat and travel some distance, when heretofore he took his affidavit before the postmaster. The proposition now is to simply allow the carrier to take the place of the postmaster. There can be no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, on page 19, line 25, before the word "service" to insert "and registry;" so as to make the clause read:

For printing facing slips and cutting same, card slide labels, blanks and books of an urgent nature, and manifold books for the postal and registry service, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 21, to insert:

For the payment to James Graham, for carrying daily mail from Altamont to Aspen, on the old line of the Union Pacific Railroad, $49.60.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 3, to insert:

For the payment of post-office order No. 11106, issued at Lander, Wyo., drawn upon the post-office at Evanston, Wyo., August 13, 1889, and which has never been paid, and which under ruling of the Auditor, can not be paid through the Post-Office Department, $9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 21, after line 24, to insert:

For the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices, $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for a period not exceeding four years, after public advertisement once a week for a period of six consecutive weeks in not less than five newspapers, one of which shall be published in each city where the service is to be performed. That the contracts for this service shall be subject to the provisions of the postal laws and regulations relating to the letting of mail contracts, except as herein otherwise provided, and that no advertisement shall issue until after a careful investigation shall have been made as to the needs and practicability of such service and until a favorable report, in writing, shall have been submitted to the Postmaster-General by a commission of not less than three expert postal officials, to be named by him; nor shall such advertisement issue until in the judgment of the Postmaster-General the needs of the postal service are such as to justify the expenditure involved. Advertisements shall state in general terms only the requirements of the service and in form best calculated to invite competitive bidding.

That the Postmaster-General shall have the right to reject any and all bids; that no contract shall be awarded except to the lowest responsible bidder, tendering full and sufficient guaranties, to the satisfaction of the Postmaster-General, of his ability to perform satisfactory service, and such guaranties shall include an approval bond in double the amount of the bid.

That no contract shall be entered into in any city for the character of mail service herein provided which will create an aggregate annual rate of expenditure, including necessary power and labor to operate the tubes, and all other expenses of such service in excess of 4 per cent of the gross postal revenue of said city for the last preceding fiscal year.

That no contract shall be made in any city providing for 3 miles or more of double lines of tube which shall involve an expenditure in excess of $17,000 per mile per annum, and said compensation shall cover power, labor, and all operating expenses.

That the Postmaster-General shall not, prior to June 30, 1904, enter into contracts under the provisions of this act involving an annual expenditure in the aggregate in excess of $800,000; and thereafter only such contracts shall be made as may from time to time be provided for in the annual appropriation act for the postal service; and all provisions of law contrary to those herein contained are repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 23, after the word "duty," to insert:

And to enable the Postmaster-General to pay the sum of $1,000 to the legal representatives of any railway postal clerk who shall be killed while on duty or who, being injured while on duty, shall die within thirty days thereafter as the result of such injury.

So as to make the clause read:

For acting clerks, in place of clerks injured while on duty, and to enable the Postmaster-General to pay the sum of $1,000 to the legal representatives of any railway postal clerk who shall be killed while on duty or who, being injured while on duty, shall die within thirty days thereafter as the result of such injury, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 8, before the word "New Orleans," to strike out "and;" and in the same line, after the word "New Orleans," to insert "and from Washington to Jacksonville, Fla.;" so as to make the clause read:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Washington to Atlanta, New Orleans, and from Washington to Jacksonville, Fla., $142,728.75: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Mr. MASON. On behalf of the committee, I move to amend the amendment which has just been stated, by restoring the word "and," in line 8, after the name "Atlanta;" so as to read:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans, and from Washington to Jacksonville, Fla.

Mr. CLAY. I ask that the amendment may be read from the desk as it will stand if amended.

The SECRETARY. As proposed to be amended the clause will read:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans, and from Washington to Jacksonville, Fla., $142,728.75.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, under the subhead "Office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 29, line 5, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter, when in the opinion of the Postmaster-General the interests of the Post-Office Department require it, the manufacturing of special-delivery and adhesive postage stamps may be done by the Treasury Department (Bureau of Engraving and Printing), in conformity with an agreement satisfactory to both the Postmaster-General and the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 31, line 4, before the word "thousand," to insert "and seven;" and in line 15, after the word "criminals," to insert:

And the further sum of $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Postmaster-General to employ two inspectors, to be selected and appointed by himself, for service as expert accountants and actuaries in the office of the Assistant Attorney-General in the investigation and examination of bond-investment, tontine, and other companies of a similar character offering for sale bonds, certificates, or other securities on installment payments, and for the performance of such other duties pertaining to that office as may be assigned them.

So as to make the clause read:

For mail deprecations and post-office inspectors, including salaries of 15 inspectors in charge of divisions at $2,500 per annum without per diem, and 6 inspectors at $2,400 without per diem, and 15 inspectors at $2,250 per annum without per diem, and 15 inspectors at $2,000 per annum without per diem, and for salaries of post-office inspectors and clerks; and for per diem allowance of inspectors in the field while actually traveling on business for the Department, $907,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, allow post-office inspectors per diem while temporarily located at any place on duty away from home, or their designated domicile, for a period not exceeding twenty consecutive days at any one place, and may make rules and regulations governing the foregoing provisions relating to per diem: And provided further, That of the amount herein appropriated not to exceed $2,000 may be expended, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, for the purpose of securing information concerning violations of the postal laws, and for services and information looking toward the apprehension of criminals; and the further sum of $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Postmaster-General to employ two inspectors, to be selected and appointed by himself, for service as expert accountants and actuaries in the office of the Assistant Attorney-General in the investigation and examination of bond-investment, tontine, and other companies of a similar character offering for sale bonds, certificates, or other securities on installment payments, and for the performance of such other duties pertaining to that office as may be assigned them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. MASON. I desire, on page 26, line 2, to strike out the words "thirty days" and insert the words "one year." This is an amendment which we have put into the bill allowing the payment of $1,000 in case a mail messenger is killed, and it provides that it shall be paid if he die within thirty days. I desire to amend it so as to make it read if he die within one year as the result of the injury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, line 2, it is proposed to strike out the words "thirty days" and insert "one year;" so as to read:

For acting clerks, in place of clerks injured while on duty, and to enable the Postmaster-General to pay the sum of $1,000 to the legal representatives of any railway postal clerk who shall be killed while on duty or who, being injured while on duty, shall die within one year thereafter as the result of such injury, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I ask leave to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to state an account with Morgan's Louisiana and Texas Railroad and Steamship Company for transporting the United States mails over postal routes Nos. 30003 and 149003 during the period between July 1, 1878, and February 21, 1892, both inclusive, in which he shall credit said company with nonland-grant rates over that portion of its route between New Orleans and Morgan City, La., in accordance with the decision of the Court of Claims in case No. 15877, and shall pay to said company, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as shall remain due upon such adjustment.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, let me explain the amendment in a word.

The facts are that by the act of June 3, 1856 (11 Stat., 18), certain lands were proposed to be granted to the State for the purpose of aiding in the construction of such a road, provided that the road was built within ten years. The road was not built within the time, and Congress, by the act of July 14, 1870 (16 Stat., 277), forfeited the grant, and no lands were ever received by the company.

The company brought suit in the Court of Claims for the difference, and upon a full hearing the court held that the company was not a land-grant road and was entitled to the statutory rates for transportation of the mail, and rendered judgment in favor of the company for the period within six years prior to bringing the suit, but was without jurisdiction to render judgment for any period prior thereto.

The amendment authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to audit the account for the period of time that the company was paid land-grant rates that the court decided it was entitled to the full statutory rates, and which was barred from its jurisdiction.

The amendment is in the form recommended by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General under date of February 2, 1899.

Mr. LODGE. I think very probably this is a meritorious claim, but it is an amendment obnoxious to the point of order, and I make the point of order that it is a private claim.

Mr. STEWART. Is there no way to get a claim of this kind paid?

Mr. LODGE. The regular way, I should think, would be through a claim bill. It is certainly not in order on an appropriation bill if the point of order is made against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts make the point of order?

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. TILLMAN. I send to the desk an amendment which I wish to have inserted on page 18, between lines 2 and 3, as a separate paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, on page 18, it is proposed to insert: That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, directed to buy, after due advertisement, metal lock boxes of uniform size for the use of the patrons of the rural free-delivery service, at a cost not exceeding 50 cents for each box, and to furnish said boxes to the patrons of the service at cost.

Mr. LODGE. My attention was withdrawn for a moment while the amendment was being read. I would be obliged if it could be read again.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to explain it a little in order to get something in the RECORD that will assist the conferees on the part of the Senate in convincing the House conferees that this matter ought to be left in the bill, because a similar amendment was offered in the other House and voted down, and there certainly will be a fight on it. But if the chairman of the committee, with the material which I have here, will agree to make the best fight he knows how—and he, I know, can put up a good one—and will let the matter come to the Senate for final adjudication before a conference report is rushed in here and pushed through, I will not obtrude myself on the Senate. I have a very strong statement to make; but I do not wish to obtrude myself on the Senate if the Senate is willing to let the amendment go in and the conferees will do the best they can to retain it.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, the amendment meets my most hearty approval. There is no doubt that under the present plan there is very great complaint among the farmers that they are limited to the purchase of certain boxes. I think the Department has limited the farmers to 14 different boxes. I think there ought to be uniformity, and I think there ought to be a metal box, and I believe the amendment is in the interest of the service, and I make no objection to it.

Mr. TILLMAN. In addition to that, if the Senator will pardon me, I wish to call attention to the fact that in the cities and in every town where rural free delivery obtains, or even where it does not, metal boxes are furnished for the convenience of the patrons of the post-office where the mail is deposited, collected, and carried to certain distributing points, whereas the farmers out in the country under the present regulations are debarred.

Mr. MASON. No; the Senator is wrong about that.

Mr. TILLMAN. I mean the Government pays for the boxes in the cities, whereas this amendment simply asks that the Government shall furnish the boxes to the farmers at cost.

Mr. MASON. The Senator is about 50 per cent right, as usual.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am very glad the Senator from Illinois agrees to that much. I appear to have not been 99 per cent right lately, in the opinion of some Senators.

Mr. MASON. The Senator means to be right always. In the cities the Department does not furnish boxes for the recipients of the mail in which to receive their mail.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not speaking about the individual. I am speaking about the boxes all over the city, on every lamp-post, so that you can step out and mail a letter anywhere, and the Post-Office Department buys them and furnishes them for the convenience of the patrons.

Mr. MASON. They do not put boxes in front of every man's door.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not speaking of that. The carrier carries the mail to the door and delivers it into the hand of the recipient.

Mr. MASON. There really is no objection to this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I want to say that I do not, however, undertake to guarantee what the conferees will do.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not ask the Senator to guarantee that he will bulldoze the House. I know he can not do that—

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia will state his point of order.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senators are each violating the rule of the Senate which requires that the Chair shall be addressed and that the permission of the Chair shall be had before proceeding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sometimes thinks he ought to call to the presiding officer's place the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

Mr. TILLMAN. If I may be permitted to put in a little observation on the rules of order, if the Chair or the Senator from Georgia or other Senators here will see that the rule is never broken I have no objection to its being applied to me, but I give him and you and every other man notice that I shall have no special Tillman rule here.

Mr. BACON. The Senator has no right to assume that there is any such purpose, but we have rules, and I think they ought to be observed. I would not have made the point of order, but at that particular time there was a very wide departure from the rule. I think we ought to proceed in order, and I do not think the Senator from South Carolina needs any assurance from me, so far as I personally am concerned, that there is no disposition on my part to apply any rule to him that is not applied to every other Senator. But I do think that every Senator will recognize the fact that at the time I made the point of order it was proper to call the attention of the Senate to the fact not simply that there was a slight departure from the rule, but that there was a very wide departure from it; and I think the Senator from South Carolina will recognize the fact.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from South Carolina is ready to make all proper acknowledgment of his shortcoming, and if the Senator from Georgia will constitute himself a censor to call every Senator to order who breaks the rule which was just broken by the Senator from Illinois and myself I shall not object. I shall be glad to have the Senate screw up its rules a little tighter than they are. What I do object to is having the appearance of selecting me to bear the burden of this dereliction alone, and I will not do it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I did not call anybody to order. I made the point of order to the Chair, and I included the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. TILLMAN. Did the Senator from Georgia, if I may be permitted to say a word, include the Chair in his point of order, that the Chair himself was not carrying out the rules of the Senate?

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator is now violating the rule. I was addressing the Chair, and I was simply replying to the Senator. I did not call him to order, nor did I call the Senator from Illinois to order. I simply made the point that the Senators were not proceeding in order. I addressed myself to the Chair, as it was proper that I should do, and I did not call anybody to order.

Mr. MASON. I call for the regular order.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments?

Mr. TILLMAN. In order that my friend the chairman of the Post-Office Committee may have the documents I have here, which may be of some assistance in convincing the members of the House of the necessity for this amendment as well as to let Senators see the foundation for this amendment, I ask to have printed in the RECORD certain correspondence which I have had with the Post-Office Department and certain private letters to me from a gentleman in New York, and an extract from a Lockport (N. Y.) paper calling attention to the burdens and wrongs of which a citizen of that State complains in regard to the rural free delivery and the regulations of the Post-Office Department in regard to the rural free-delivery service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and the papers will be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. TILLMAN. The first is a letter from Mr. James L. Barnes, making complaint against the present system. The second is a letter from the same gentleman, inclosing an official notice, which sets forth the practice of the Department and the cause of his grievance. Then there is a newspaper clipping from the Daily Review, of Lockport, N. Y., setting forth fully the case of Mr. Barnes, which is only one of a type. Then there are three letters to me from the Post-Office Department in regard to this matter in answer to letters I wrote, which are given for the purpose of making everything clearly understood.

The papers referred to are as follows:

RANSOMVILLE, N. Y., January 27, 1902.

Senator TILLMAN.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed card will inform you of my object in addressing you.

Our post-offices have been discontinued and mail is left at the post-office in Lockport, 10 miles distant, although the rural carrier goes by daily and convenient boxes for the reception of said mail have been provided, boxes which comply in every respect with the inclosed order except that they were not bought of the 14 manufacturers who seem to have been taken under the especial patronage of the Post-Office Department. Will you kindly give this matter your attention, and in the meantime please send to me the act of Congress and the so-called postal laws or rulings in relation to the same. My contention is that the Post-Office Department is exercising legislative powers which even the law-making power has no control over under the Constitution. You are at liberty to make this public, and sworn statements in substantiation can be furnished. Please act.

Yours, truly,

(Care of C. Sanger, Ransomville, Niagara County, N. Y.)

RANSOMVILLE, N. Y., January 27, 1902.

Senator TILLMAN:

I wrote you to-day and intended to inclose a copy of a card which has been served on people here by an inspector, so called, of the Post-Office Department. The card, which I omitted to inclose, will be found herewith. Men who had storm-proof boxes erected have been obliged, under threats of withdrawal of their mail service, to put up one of the boxes advertised on the reverse side of this card, which have been at times quite full of snow. You observe the weather-proof clause

Yours, truly,

(Care of C. Sanger, Ransomville, Niagara County, N. Y.)

[Post-Office Department. Official card. Rural free-delivery service.]

Mr.

Route No., _____
_____ post-office, _____ State.

SIR: Patrons of rural free-delivery routes are required to provide letter boxes approved by the Post-Office Department, so located near the highway that the carrier can reach them to deposit and collect mail without dismounting from his conveyance.

Rural carriers are not required to deliver mail to houses not immediately on their routes, except in case of registered mail, pension letters, and special-delivery letters.

The mail box put up by you is not secure, not weatherproof.

Within thirty days from this date you must supply one of the approved boxes enumerated on the reverse side of this card or your service will be withdrawn.

By order of the First Assistant Postmaster-General:

Date, _____

Route Inspector.

Report delinquencies of carriers to General Superintendent Free-Delivery System, Post-Office Department, Washington, D. C.
